The true prophet has a threefold task: he must look at God, commune with him and learn to accept his sovereignty over all of life; he must look at the world as it is, with unjaundiced, unprejudiced eyes, insofar as this is possible; and finally, he must relate the word of the sovereign God to this world. Insofar as he is true to the first and second task, his words to the world may be prophetic; but if he has defaulted on either of the first two tasks, his message will be mere wind. If he does not begin with the sovereignty of a God who is active and at work in history, what he has to say will be at best "human wisdom," lacking any real relevance in matters of ultimate concern. If he does not take seriously the nature of the real situation in which man lives, including the fundamental fact of sin and guilt, what he has to say will run into idealistic formulas and dreams. If he does not struggle to relate the word of God to the time in which he lives and works, to the particular problems of nation and family and society which plague him daily, he will have nothing to communicate. Only if all three of these requirements are accepted as part of his beholden duty can he preach "prophetically."

Paul at Athens and the Christian in the twentieth century stand in a like situation as far as Christian duty is concerned, and the possibility of fulfilling one's vocation is no less real now than it was then. There are striking similarities in the situation then and now. Both times reveal to us great "powers" that struggle for the mastery of the world; both times show us men who have erected "shrines made by man" into idolatries; both show us civilizations which, in their acquired power, have neglected the basic fact that "God gives to all men life and breath and everything."

Paul, true prophet that he was, declared the faith that was in him with a clarity that must have insulted the speculating loafers of the Areopagus. He acknowledges that there are signs of their "religiousness":

Teacher in the department of religion, Franklin and Marshall College, Lancaster, Pennsylvania

he has seen many "objects of worship" as he passed along the way to Mars Hill. He points out that even they have qualms about the adequacy of these objects, for they have erected an altar "To an unknown God." And then, to these thoroughly "modern" men, intrigued as they were with "telling and hearing something new," he declares the scandal of an old God, who created the earth, allotted its boundaries, chose a people and appointed a man by whom he would judge the earth in righteousness. And that this man is his chosen one God has given assurance by raising him from the dead.

This, according to the narrative is quite enough for the Athenians; the little Jew of Tarsus has insulted their modern learning by attempting to foist off upon them a resurrection fable, something no intelligent person could be expected to accept. Some mock, some say "come back next Tuesday," and a very few accept Paul's words and join themselves to him. Yet, despite the singular lack of success in terms of numbers of converts, Paul preached prophetically, for he began at the place where all Christian teaching must begin, with the absolute sovereignty of God, he declared the situation in which even these wise men of Athens stood and he related this sovereignty to the situation of these men.

The question that must be put to the Christian in the twentieth century is whether results have so captivated his imagination and purpose that he has automatically disqualified himself for the prophetic role. This is not to derogate the faithful work of those who have labored with a single devotion to the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and of Jesus Christ, but it is to point out that very often the norms have been taken from the culture of which we are a part rather than from the eternal gospel. For example, one may cite the comparative requirements for church membership as they exist in America and in the lands of the younger churches. The writer has observed church membership campaigns where the sole requirement appears to have been that the candidate attend church on the Sunday on which he was to be taken into the church (usually Easter). The whole revival pattern has often encouraged the making of a decision in this matter on the basis of one facet of the personality alone: that of emotion.

A Brethren preacher went into a church where a hundred persons had become members as the result of a revival several years before. He was told, "We don't know where the ninety and nine are, but the one is still with us." He may have been amused, but he should have been humiliated. So long as we make the basis of church membership solely an emotional response and depend upon the personality of the evangelist "to bring them in," so long will this sort of travesty on the gospel continue.

Again let us emphasize that this need not happen and that many evangelists minister to the gospel of reconciliation with prophetic faithfulness. These men, often unknown and not desiring to be known, declare the gospel of God. They recognize the overwhelming power of a merciful God and they declare it, along with his judgment on man's sin. They know further that men are prone to fall back into perverse patterns of life and they therefore build the church, that fellowship which teaches and administers the sacraments of grace. Theirs is no in-and-out ministry but like Paul they suffer when the fellowship is disrupted, and they seek by every valid means to nurture the souls under their care. Many of these persons are on the mission fields of the church, where a realistic view of the person and the society declares the necessity for teaching and preparing the person who is a candidate for church membership. Would it not be more feasible for the American church to learn from these younger churches that catechisms are not necessarily bad, that saying "I believe" (a creed) need not be, as we once held, divisive and stultifying; that, in short, we must get over our psychopathic fear of confessions and creeds and teach those whom we would win, and ourselves, the basic propositions of the Christian faith?

Prophetic preaching in our day must begin with God and this means the God about whom we read in the Bible, not the nationalistic deity whose high priest is in Moscow or London or Washington. The god who is invoked for utilitarian purposes, to give us personal or

Discipleship Is Costly

THE crying need of our time is for disciples—men and women who will drop less important duties to follow Jesus Christ. It is not especially difficult these days to be known as a Christian. Church membership exacts no great price from most names on the roll. There are benefits of respectability, popularity and even publicity that can be had for a nominal contribution by joining the church. But discipleship is something else again. It still costs—in time, in money, in effort, in devotion and in loyalty.

As a matter of record Jesus used some pretty hard words to describe what discipleship means. His followers could expect rough treatment in Galilee, in Judea and later on in the cities of the Roman empire. They still can expect rough treatment—if they take seriously his charge to the original twelve. Matthew 10 ought to be as well known to Brethren as chapters 5, 18 and 25. You can hardly practice the principles enunciated in these chapters without discovering what Jesus meant when he sent forth his disciples as "sheep among wolves." Matthew 10 has something to say to us.

Preach as you go. Speaking and action belong together. The best preacher is one who not only announces that "the kingdom of heaven is at hand," but also uses his own hands to heal and cleanse and help. Discipleship means working while you serve, serving while you learn, learning while you preach. The disciple acquires his education by taking the yoke of Christian responsibility on his shoulders and bearing its burdens alongside the yokefellow who is also his Master. Here is religion in its most practical dimension: a disciple grows because he preaches as he goes.

Give without pay. Discipleship calls for a free ministry. Just as Jesus says nothing about ordained disciples, so he ignores the claims for salaried disciples. The point is, of course, that discipleship is a full-time vocation and the ordinary question of wages and hours and working conditions simply do not apply. Jesus underlines the importance of the message and the urgency of the mission. The time for witnessing is always short. The disciple has little time to prepare. He learns as he goes. He lives on what he gets. He gives without pay because he has already received a kingdom that is priceless, a gift that can never be repaid.

Be wise . . . and innocent. Without weapons for defense, without money, without reputation, the disciple is literally thrown to the wolves. He can be tried before councils in which he has no advocate. He can expect unfair and even brutal punishment. His innocence is part of his protection, but he is also to have his wits about him. Yet this precarious and foolish expedition is not so mad as it seems. For a prisoner, as Paul demonstrated, can be an effective witness. A disciple with a reckless disregard for his own safety can inspire a following and confound his enemies.

Do not fear those who kill the body. A few disciples with this daring philosophy can shake the world, even our contemporary world. We are defense-minded. We try to protect ourselves against "those who kill the body but cannot kill the soul." We tremble at any prospect of national defeat as if the loss of our freedoms would mean the loss of our souls. The disciple, however, gains his soul because he knows it can easily be lost in gaining the world. Since only love can cast out fear, the disciple must learn to love. So long as he can outlove his enemies, he has a good chance of outliving them.

Disciples are disturbing people because they force others to face up to the claims of Christ and his kingdom. They create tension between those claims and the excuses of men. Something has to give: either the disciple makes his point or he is removed as a troublemaker, but even in being removed he makes his point. In losing his life he finds it. The yoke he shoulders is lighter because Christ shares it. The cross he carries cannot be deadly because his Lord has already made it a symbol of salvation.

The crying need of our time—of our church—is for disciples. The call and the charge to discipleship still stand. Who will hear the call and accept the charge?—K. M.

> A man may give away all his goods, yet that is nothing; and if he do many deeds of penitence, yet that is a small thing; and though he understand all knowledge, yet that is afar off; and if he have great virtue and zealous devotion, yet much is lacking unto him, yea, one thing which is the most necessary to him of all. What is it then? That having given up all things besides, he give up himself and go forth from himself utterly, and retain nothing of self-love; and having done all things which he knoweth to be his duty to do, that he feel that he hath done nothing.

World-wide Evangelism in This Generation

Chandu Ray

COMING from one of the younger churches known as the mission field, I want to bear witness to some of the recent experiments in evangelism and share with you both the victories and the failures in our work. We are living, as in apostolic times, with a very large percentage of non-Christians around us, whose attitude to Christianity is not always favorable, and yet we have tremendous encouragement in our work.

A group of about eighty families, who were baptized ten years ago, were gathered in a small village. The land was leased from the government, and a community life was started. A small school for children, a health center, a small place for worship, and some mud huts were built as dwellings for the people. The community started with ninety-five per cent of the people unable to read or write, but within three years we had practically all the people literate. The rate of malaria cases was reduced from fifty-seven per cent to eight per cent because of the instruction in rural health. Then the government asked for more lease money. But because of lack of funds, we could not pay this. So the community was scattered. But wherever these Christians went their wholeness of life was irresistible, and they had a new zeal for telling others of Christ.

The Bible Society sent a colporteur in that area with Scriptures. Within a short time the colporteur, himself a convert from Islam, reported that there was a great inquiry for Christ. The missionary work in that area was weak; so we gathered a team of national and foreign missionaries of all denominations to come for a special campaign for six weeks. Thirty-six came. We lived with the people, ate together, gave systematic teaching, showed the gospel stories through lantern slides and did literacy work among them. We limited our activities to twenty-five square miles. Daily we went in small groups into different villages and spent the day with the people, teaching at times but gossiping the gospel always. Before our six weeks had expired, 200 chosen representatives of 14 villages came to meet us in our camp and said that all the people in the 14 villages wanted to be baptized. Our unity had created a new situation. The colporteur had given the Scriptures. Our living in their midst had produced a living witness. But we could not baptize them and had to leave them to the denomination to which that area belonged, according to comity of missions. That denomination had only one missionary for that area. He was in his first term and knew not the language. They had no money to employ national workers. The work has languished. The movement is still alive, but there are no laborers to reap the harvest. We have failed because we are not united in putting our resources together where the Holy Spirit has started work.

Since the partition of India and Pakistan and the independence of the two countries, in one area we have baptized over 6,000 people. When these people had lost their moorings owing to the terrible shifting of populations from one country to another, and many had lost their anchor and hope, the church did a magnificent job, again unitedly through Church World Service's ministry to refugees and in other practical ways. These 6,000 were baptized in the hope that the church will bring them a wholeness of life in Christ. But we have failed them. They are as illiterate as we found them. There is hardly a village where a school exists for the children. I am told that eighty per cent of the children do not go to schools, where a government school exists, because they have no clothes to wear. No dispensary or health center was started in that area. The denomination working there has not a single missionary stationed there. Again because of lack of unity, what should have been a strong witness for Christ through these new converts has almost become a hindrance to evangelism in this area. These babes in Christ have been left uncared for.

Today many mission schools and colleges are afraid to bear a clear witness to Christ and present his challenge, because they are so largely dependent on the fees which they earn from non-Christian boys and girls. But wherever clear witness to Christ is borne, results have been seen. Great is the opportunity through educational institutions for evangelism.

Let me relate an incident. One of the colleges invited an evangelist to take a week's mission. In this college there are over 800 Muslim students. The evangelist started off in English, as that was the medium of instruction in that college. Half way through his first address, the evangelist realized that the students (some sixty odd present) were not quite grasping the message. He stopped to ask if they would rather that he spoke in their mother tongue. A shout went up, "Yes, sir." He finished the rest of the address in their mother tongue. At the evening meeting over 500 were present. Thereafter for the whole week, there was not a single seat vacant in the hall which seated 800. In fact, people from town used to come and stand in the galleries. The evangelist gave 126 personal interviews during that week to these college men, who became interested in the gospel. Five accepted Christ as their Savior. The president of the Communist party in the college resigned from his party because of the gospel. The principal of the college said persecution might follow, but nothing untoward happened.

The same evangelist was preaching five months later in a church about fifty miles away, when a young army officer approached him and told him that when the evangelist was preaching in the college, the army officer and twenty other men had come to the college to break up the meeting, because they had heard that some men had become Christians. The army officer was to give the signal, but he said he never gave it because the gospel message gripped him. He is now a Christian.

Let us pause to underline a point or two. First, if there had been no Bible in that language, the evangelist would have been helpless, If the college had not been bold in inviting the evangelist, there would have been no conversions. There was a new interest and inquiry in the college after that.

There is great need to use the new converts who have found Christ in preaching the Gospel. Often when they become Christians, they lost their homes and their jobs, and are actively persecuted by their families. In such cases if they were sent out as evangelists they would preach with an abandonment which the second and third generation Christians appear to lose.

Here is an illustration. An

"If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away: behold, all things are become new" (2 Cor. 5:17)

When Christ
Knocked at my heart
I asked him in:
He came with silent step,
And light came too,
And peace;
And then I looked and saw
That everywhere his love
Was shining on the sons of men—
For self had died,
And fear
Had given way to faith,
And I was born anew
When Christ came in.

evangelist took a group of young converts for preaching. They went from village to village and had great encouragement in thirty villages. In one village, however, their leader was beaten up and taken into a mosque and kept there till midnight. Hundreds of villagers came and gathered there to see what was to happen to this man.

The chief priest of the area was sent for and arrived late. He questioned the evangelist to entangle him in saying something against their religion. The evangelist remained silent till the priest asked, "What were you saying that they beat you up?" In the mosque the evangelist then preached Christ and him crucified and risen. When he had finished there was a division among the people. Some said that he was telling of a salvation through Christ which he knew. Others said that Christ had not been crucified and was not risen. As people argued, the evangelist was allowed to go.

But he was back in the village within three days. And in a few months there were thirty-two baptisms in that village. The surest way to confirm a new convert in his faith is to make him bear witness and suffer hardships for his faith. Then he finds that Christ is alive and working with him. But we must see that he gets food to eat and clothes to wear. Often these things are lacking and the church forgets to provide for the new convert, because the church in that area is so poor itself. The majority earn less than fifteen cents per day.

Finally, how great is the inquiry and encouragement? Let me again give an illustration. A few doctors hold a clinic in a poor locality. (In our country there is one doctor to 170,000 villagers.) Thousands of people come for healing and pay what they can. In six weeks some 15,000 people come, bringing 6,000 patients with them for treatment. The gospel is preached daily to these people in the outpatients' ward. The one or two evangelists attached to such a camp sometimes give six addresses each. Then they go round the wards and gossip the gospel. In the evening they show lantern slides of the gospel stories.

When the people are discharged from the hospital, the evangelists sometimes see them coming again into the outpatients' ward, and ask them why they have come, since they have been discharged from the hospital. But the reply comes, "We want to hear the gospel and so we will remain around here as long as the preaching is going on." One time an evangelist announced that he was being called away for work elsewhere, and so was leaving the next day. A shout went up from the Muslims: "If this is your last evening with us, then are you not going to show the pictures of the cross again to us?" In this area there is hardly any follow-up work by any missionary society. Only one missionary works there and has to cover more than 5,000 square miles!

Having shared with you our encouragements and failures, I would add that in the world-wide evangelistic task, the Bible plays the most important part, for it brings a conviction to the people as no human words can ever bring. Then we look for the day when there will be a united church, with united strategy for evangelism; that where

A strong witness for Christ through new converts is many times weakened because of denominational divisions and those who need nurture are without it because the denomination which is responsible for the area does not have funds to supply the workers necessary the Holy Spirit moves, we may follow, without the hindrances of disunity and comity. The younger churches in Asia need much greater understanding and support in their problems as they live under great pressures of a non-Christian society. The evangelists need special training to meet the resurgence of non-Christian faiths. The rural church needs literacy so that it can be strong to witness to the hope they have in Christ.

Let God Be God

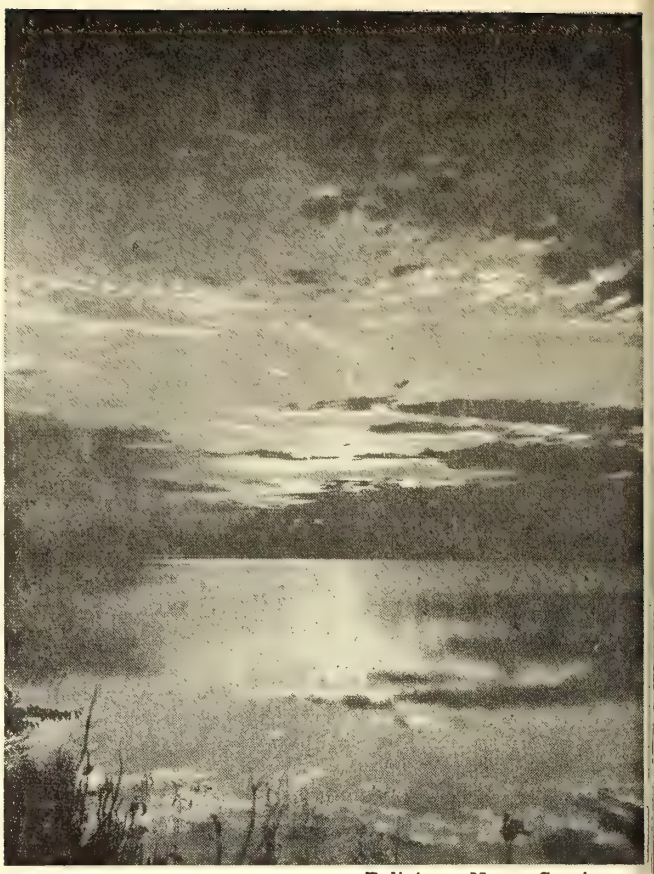
national security, is not the God of Jesus Christ, who humiliates himself in order to redeem his creation and reconcile men unto himself. Prophetic preaching in our day must look at a world where men give themselves to the idols of success and try to use Christianity for the achievement of this success; where the adversary is, as always, at work within the church, beguiling with promises of popularity and fame, attempting to negate the essential requirement of inward struggle (Rom. 8: 22-23) by the lure of "adjustment" and a false "peace of mind." The prophet of the twentieth century will recognize that the narrow way cannot be made broad and straight by the petty schemes of traffikers on the gospel, nor by once-for-all emotional binges which obscure the fact that man is mind and spirit, as well as emotion. A prophetic message is a message which speaks to the whole person, caught in the meshes of a bondage of fear and there is freedom and sonship and hope (Romans 8:15). But his message cannot then promise surcease from labor and struggle and finitude. We live always under the judgment of God, as well as under his grace, and therefore we need to recognize that Paul was talking sense when he said that we must die daily.

Even a cursory glance at Paul's statement in Acts 17:24-25 indicates how categorically he stood upon this necessity of letting God be God. There are three superlatives ascribed to God in these two verses: he is the Creator of everything; he is the Lord of heaven and earth; and he gives to all men life and breath and everything. There are also, as if by way of contrast, two references to man: God does not live in the shrines made by man, and he is not served by human hands.



The person who is forever singing about the possibilities of man, whatever the basis of his optimism, simply does not comprehend the Pauline basis for the gospel. For Paul, God is God, and there is no other. This, far from being a pessimistic view for Paul, is the basis of the only sane optimism there is. Man's hope, in every ultimate matter —the forgiveness of sin, the crises of our lives, the inevitable fact of death—lies not in anything that man can do or dream, but in the God who is Lord of his creation. He made the world and everything in it; he is therefore the Lord of it. He permits evil for reasons which man cannot comprehend, but he will ultimately triumph over evil. He is not a thing alongside other things, to be manipulated by man. He does not need anything that man can give him, however much he may desire man's fealty. He is not captured in the creeds or the ceremonies or the churches or the words that man writes about him. If he desires to inhabit their shrines, he will, but man cannot say what God is to do. God is not bound, but possesses a freedom of his own to work as he will when he will. In short, he is Lord and there is no other. As this touches man, he can accept the sovereignty of God and seek his forgiveness; in Christ the assurance has been given that reconciliation with God is possible. Or he can rebel against God and assert his own false independence. Or he can become even more subtle and seek to capture the Almighty in codes or institutions. Paul does not say that it is possible to live without such institutions and codes. But what Paul does emphasize, along with all the New Testament writers, is that all such institutions and codes, including the church itself, stands under the everlasting judgment of God. Thus our good, as well as our evil, is judged by God's measure and by this measure no shrine is fit for him.

There are those who argue that this emphasis upon God's sovereignty cuts the nerve of moral endeavor and encourages an attitude of complacency about the multiform ills of the world. Thus, they say, we must see ourselves as God's partners, working for the coming of his kingdom. Let it suffice to point out that those who have been most insistent in their emphasis upon the unqualified sovereignty of God (Paul, Augustine, Luther, Calvin, Barth) have also been signally active in their fight against complacency on the part of Christians and the powers of this world which seek to claim man's loyalty. Certainly no one can claim that the person who emphasizes God's sovereignty is attempting to weaken any activity for the relief of suffering or the conquest of social evil; what he is attempting is to carry out that vocation which has been put upon him, given to him: to declare that man's ultimate anxiety and guilt has been met by a God who has given us the victory through Jesus Christ. One recalls the words of Jesus in turning away the first temptation: "Man shall not live by bread alone." The Lord did not say that bread—or programs for the relief of human suffering—

Stewardship Means Responsibility

David R. Landis

Religious News Service

We put off being a better person, going to church, giving ourselves in worthwhile service until evening comes and it is too late to do anything we had planned

IN JESUS' parable of the talents we hear the words of the Master, "Well done, good and faithful servant." But we hear also the condemnation of the one-talent man who failed to be faithful. The former words are the ones every one wants to hear. But not all are willing to carry out the requisite to be faithful, to accept responsibility.

The condemnation of this one man was not because of his limitation, but because of his unfaithfulness. He undertook to escape responsibility. For being a one-talent person was not his responsibility, but to be faithful was wholly his. The one-talent man is not asked to match the five-talent man except in faithfulness. It is not a matter of bookkeeping, but of dependability. This man did not do what he was capable of doing; so he made excuses. He presumed, pretended, and procrastinated.

He presumed the master was a "hard master." He presumed that he reaped where he had not sown, that he was interested only in the harvest and not in plowing and planting. We create our own tensions when we think we are the only good people left, the only ones who follow the Christian way. Elijah thought so, but God showed him how wrong he was! There is no vanity so damaging as pride over good deeds. One who presumes and thinks he has been tricked thinks he has been handed a lemon. But the good philosopher "adds sugar" and has lemonade for himself!

He pretended to be very busy by scratching in the dirt. He was not interested in plowing. He was merely making a hole, a place to keep safely the one talent entrusted to him. His fear was paralyzing. He did not ask or seek or knock except to knock someone. So he found no open door, no opportunity to serve. As someone has suggested, "If you carry a hammer, build something."

God never asks us to do the impossible. He does expect faithfulness and acceptance of responsibility in our stewardship. In our pretensions we subject ourselves to serious hazards when we compare against others our giving, service and especially our goodness. What is our ulterior motive? Is it selfish ambition under a pretense to magnanimity? Are we interested in laurels without effort to gain them? Are we concerned with the fruit of the harvest without laboring, plowing, planting? Do we give token gifts as a substitute for a larger sacrifice? Jesus says, "Unless your righteousness exceeds—" you shall not enter the kingdom.

The one-talent man procrastinated when he thought, "There is plenty of time. Let those fellows work, sweat and worry. I'll rest and take it easy." No to risk is to fail to live. In this same chapter of the talents Jesus told of the girls, wise and foolish, and spoke of the necessity to be ready. "Watch and pray that you enter not into temptation." "Hell is truth discovered too late." The rich man who opened his "eyes in hell" discovered that! The foolish man who presumed, found out too late that no one has a lease on time. There was a lad who prayed, "O God, make me a good boy, but don't be in a hurry about it." We put off being a better person, going to church, giving ourselves in worth-while service. We put off, because we think there is plenty of time and warning enough to make last-minute amends.

This whole story of the talents is one of responsibility and accountability. We are accountable, no matter what we have to show for our stewardship. When society devotes a great share of its energy on taking adventure out of life for comfort and convenience, it cannot be Christian. Adventure makes for creativeness and accomplishment. The central business of everyone is to be a real person and to be creative and positive.

The one-talent man was negative and unproductive. To miss the mark means doing nothing at all. That was his failure. Failure comes when nothing at all is tried. When we absolve ourselves of our rightful responsibility, we are on as dangerous ground as he was by his attitude of unfaithfulness. A lost talent can be a good one turned to evil purpose, the talent of light turned to darkness, the talent of honesty turned to ignoble purposes. "Fear not the stuff in your hands, fear only the darkness in your soul." The one-talent man did not depend on God. He was afraid. He presumed, pretended, procrastinated; he put off doing the better thing which he knew he ought to be doing. "Every one who is living the truth will come to the light—to show that his actions have been performed in the dependance of God."

The Family Counselor

The Family Counselor welcomes letters of inquiry. They may be addressed: Family Life Department, General Brotherhood Board, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill.

Dear Counselor,

I feel as though I am at the end of my rope and my health will be seriously affected soon, if I can't find help for my situation.

For years my husband and I have not agreed and cannot now agree on the disciplinary measures with our two children. I have always had to do most of the disciplining, and when I ask my huband to help me he does it halfheartedly, because he says he had too much of that when he was young. He also constantly accuses me of using the wrong tactics in front of our children . . . I have become so completely exasperated that it is affecting me mentally and physically. I fully realize that there are times when I may be too harsh or am wrong in my methods, but if I don't try, who will? I have tried to impress my family that with help and co-operation from them I could be a better wife and mother, and for a time they try to co-operate, but it soon wears off. And when your husband nearly always belittles you in front of your children, you soon lose all respect for him.

Worried Mother.

Dear Friend,

It would seem from a reading of your letter that things are pretty grim in your family. It doesn't sound as though there is much humor, much laughter, much time for pure enjoyment. In my answer, I'd like to pick up your last statement in the letter. This, I suspect, after all you have said about discipline, is what really has you disturbed and is basic to all the rest.

You feel that your husband nearly always belittles you in front of the children. And, if in front of the children, then perhaps he also belittles you and takes digs at you in the presence of your friends. This may be under the guise of teasing, but you are aware that under the teasing he is really belittling you.

Let's look at this matter of belittling. We can assume he did not do this sort of thing before you were married. Except in very unusual cases, people marry someone who gives a feeling of worth—not someone who belittles. Then where could this belittling tendency come from?

Usually one person engages in belittling behavior toward another when the other is in some way frustrating or depriving or seeming to be better than the first. Here are some of the things I have seen in marriages. John was better educated than Mary. He always made her feel inferior. Mary would remind him of his weight and diet in front of company—almost as one might, if not wise, speak to a child. Ken was from a family in which the women were good housekeepers. He married Laurie, who was a fine woman but not a good housekeeper. She would belittle Ken about his Sunday-school teaching, which was really pretty good. Karl married Esther, who felt that sexual intercourse was a necessary evil in marriage to be endured as infrequently as possible without causing a major explosion. Karl found that Esther could not talk about this but only froze up. Increasingly he spoke in belittling fashion of her discipline of the children, her housekeeping, her cooking—because he could not talk to her about the way in which her evil and perverse attitude toward sexual commuion frustrated their marriage.

Karl and Esther may be quite different from you and your husband. But I strongly suspect that your situation is concerned with much more than disagreement about discipline. Were it only that I would suggest that both of you read Baruch's New Ways in Discipline or Wulf's Parents' Manual. But I don't believe this alone will help you. You really need to talk to a good counselor about your marriage and I strongly urge that you go to your pastor, family doctor, Family Service Association, or to some respectable agency other than these for help before your situation deteriorates further.

Jesse H. Ziegler.

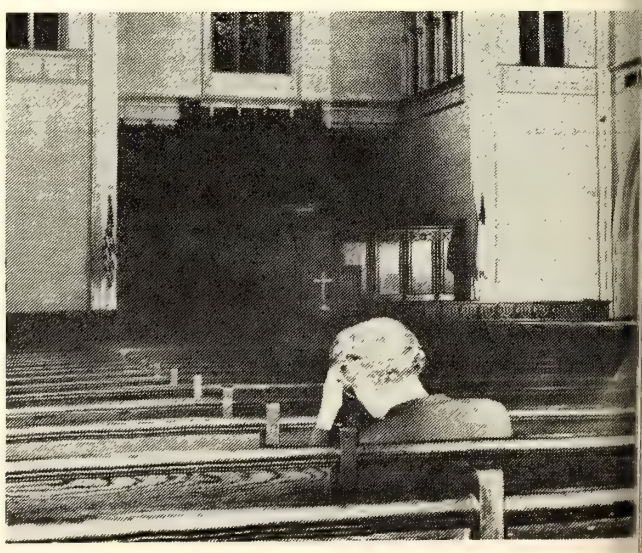
Draft Extension: How Serious Is It?

John H. Eberly

IT IS bad government to limit debate and rush through laws. Certainly that is true of a Christian democracy. But that is what appears to be happening with regard to the extension of the universal military draft law before the present Congress. Any basic story on this is so soon out of date that much of this paper by the time readers receive it may need to be interpreted in the light of more recent developments.

But here is what happened on the extension of the present draft law in a bill (H.R. 3005) introduced in the House of Representatives on January 25, 1955. After only two days' hearing the House Armed Services Committee on February 3 voted to send it to the floor of the House for final consideration and vote by that body on February 8. This vote was taken even before copies of the brief hearings were generally available to the public. As a result the bill was quickly passed with only a very little opposition. Of course, before it becomes a law, it must pass the Senate and be signed by the President. It is reported that the Senate may further limit time and debate by waiting to consider the three or four important military measures all together, and thereby "save time." Other military measures concern the extension of the draft for doctors and dentists; pay increase and other benefits for soldiers and their families, and the UMT-National Reserve Plan.



The chairman of the House Committee first reported that his committee would hear only supporting witnesses and that it was unnecessary to hear any of the organizations opposing the extension of the draft because the committee already knew what their story was. But at the last minute the chairman reversed this decision and granted time to the peace organizations and others who wished to testify against peacetime conscription. Seven organizations were given ten minutes each or a total of seventy minutes at the end of the second day. Most members of the committee and newspaper reporters did not stay to hear them. One easily gets the feeling under such circumstances that he is doing what he ought not, that it is wrong to be against anything governmental and that his Christian faith needs an apology.

There are serious implications in the present situation relative to conscription extension. First of all, if the draft is extended another four years it will mean nineteen years of continuous compulsory military draft. At no earlier time in our nation's history have we had a compulsory draft except for a relatively short time during our wars.

But now militarization of the country is actually coming step by step without many people realizing it. The widespread educational program of the Pentagon through the public high school counseling program, through the press, through the radio, through television and through the ever-present sight of uniformed men and women is helping us accept militarism as a necessary part of our life and culture. We have come to be basically a military nation—the strongest in the world today, if not of all time. Realizing this, Brethren should tremble with alarm. We need not wait ten years to know the results that can be expected from a militarized, conscripted nation.

If you have difficulty in accepting this kind of analysis, write your congressman about the following aspects of the draft law! It is a compulsory draft. Our military leaders and our administration leaders do not expect to return to a volunteer army. They may say we will so return after the danger is passed and we have world peace, but I know of no historical reference to back up such a conclusion. That it sounds good is proved by the great numbers who are building their hope on it. The Christian who looks to the New Testament for his way to world peace, certainly discards much of the New Testament when he chooses armed might as his method.

This draft law is universal service, not selective service. This means every able-bodied young man is required to undergo military registration, induction, training and the accompanying indoctrination. This is true for all those in the noncombatant jobs as well as for combat soldiers. Many jobs of the military, those in offices, those with supplies, etc., never use the expensive military training they have received in their particular assignments. But this tends to help make military regimentation universal and to use "civilians" as well as combatants in active service. Civilian defense and the term citizen-soldiers indicate this trend toward the complete mobilization of the country under a military regime.

This military regime that we are developing is seen clearly expressed in President Eisenhower's message to Congress on January 13, in which he asked for draft extension. He asked us to accept a military program which he said was necessary to the solution of a national problem. He said, "The calm planning for a call, the unquestioning acceptance of it, the smooth adjustment to a new way of life, manifested by millions of our young men and their families, evidence the maturity of their attitude toward the problem of national security." He was referring to the military draft, of universal conscription in peacetime. This conscription law is not temporary; it is permanent and, to use the President's words, it is a call to a new way of life."

What shall we do? I think the Brethren and other Christians must come to prayer, study and action. In my judgment the situation is serious. Ten years from now we will know better how serious it is. God holds us responsible now.

The Brethren Position on UMT

Statement Presented on Behalf of the Church of the Brethren Before the House Armed Services Committee, Washington D.C., February 2, 1955.

MR. CHAIRMAN and members of the House Armed Services Committee: My name is Ralph E. Smeltzer and my address is 22 South State St., Elgin, Illinois. I am appearing before your committee at the request of W. Harold Row, Executive Secretary of the Brethren Service Commission, on behalf of the General Brotherhood Board of the Church of the Brethren.

I. The Right of Individual Conscience

I am asked to convey to you an expression of appreciation from our church for the statutory provision recognizing the right of conscience for religious objectors, under the present draft law. We believe this recognition by the Congress of the United States is in keeping with the religious background and founding of our nation and strengthens its moral fiber.

The church itself respects the right of the individual conscience within its membership and has never set up an authoritative creed. Instead, it accepts the entire New Testament as its rule of faith and practice and seeks to lead its members to comprehend and accept for themselves the mind of Christ as the guide for their conviction and conduct.

We seek no special privilege from our government. What we seek for ourselves, we seek for all—the right of individual conscience, which no governmental authority can abrogate. As the Apostle Peter said, "We must obey God rather than man" (Acts 5:29).

II. Opposition to Extension of Universal Military Conscription

The Church of the Brethren, since its beginning in 1708, has repeatedly declared its position against war, armaments and military conscription. Consequently, the Church of the Brethren views with deep concern the current proposal to extend universal military conscription for another four years through the enactment of H.R. 3005. Fearing that this continued emphasis on preparatioin for war and the reliance on armaments and military conscription for security will hasten the coming of actual war, the church finds it necessary again to state its convictions about these matters. Our church opposes the extension of universal military conscription on the basis of its own tradition, on the basis of New Testament Scripture, on the basis of theological conviction, and on the basis of practicality.

III. The Church and War

Our understanding of the life and teachings of Jesus Christ as revealed in the New Testament led our Annual Conference in 1934 to resolve: "All war is sin. We, therefore cannot encourage, engage in, or willingly profit from armed conflict at home or abroad. We cannot, in the event of war, accept military service or support the military machine in any capacity." This conviction, which reaffirmed in 1948, grew out of such teachings of Christ as the following: "But I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you and pray for them which despitefully use you" (Matt. 5:44). Attached to this copy is a more complete Statement on the Position and Practices of the Church of the Brethren.

IV. The Church and God's Will

It is the conviction of Brethren that God is the Creator and Father of all men regardless of race, creed or nationality and that the killing of masses of God's children in war is a sin against God as well as against man.

It is the conviction of Brethren that, above all, God is a God of love as revealed in the person, life and ministry of Jesus Christ. It is our conviction that God through Jesus Christ calls each of us to a life of love for God and for fellowman, and that this love is to be expressed through a ministry of relief and rehabilitation to the suffering, of technical assistance to the underdeveloped areas, and to patience, understanding and goodwill toward enemies. It is the Brethren conviction that the kingdom of God may be at least partially realized in human life and in human relationships here and now upon the earth as well as in the life hereafter. Our desire therefore to be loyal citizens both to the kingdom of God and to the United States impells us to work for international goodwill and mutual aid and against war, armaments and military conscription.

V. Military Conscription Is Not the Way to Peace

Military conscription is not the way to peace and security in our kind of world. If so, Europe would be the most peaceful area on earth, since it has had more conscription over a larger period of time than any other continent. Yet Europe has been drenched with blood twice in this century. Those who were the first to take the sword have perished by it. Nazi Germany and Imperial Japan were not saved by military conscription. Their very domination by the military way of life evoked a false sense of security and a disregard for spiritual values. The church is concerned with our survival as a democracy sustained by Christian values. Militarism as a way of life is opposed to democracy and our forefathers fled to these shores to escape it.

VI. Armed Force Will Not Prevent War

National armed force gives not security, but a gambler's hope of victory. In a hydrogen era, however, no victory is possible. Security requires more; it requires the prevention of war. War cannot be prevented by armed force, because each step a nation takes to increase its own security thereby decreases the security of its neighbors. A system in which each step to increase one's own security threatens that of his neighbor is a system which makes security impossible and war in the long run inevitable. Genuine security cannot be attained through national military power including military conscription; it can be attained only in world order. Conscription as a continued United States policy is hostile to a peaceful world order.

In his January 26 speech in Los Angeles, Gen. McArthur himself said, "War has become a Frankenstein monster to destroy both sides," and "The constant acceleration of preparation may well, without specific intent, ultimately produce spontaneous combustion."

VII. Conscription Will Not Prevent Sudden Attacks

Military conscription will not prevent sudden attacks. Poland, Norway, Belgium, the Netherlands, France, Greece, Russia, Yugoslavia all had conscription and all were attacked without warning. With Blitzkrieg methods, the only sure way to prevent that sort of attack is to prevent war. Strong military preparations are an excitement to sudden attack rather than a safeguard against it, because sudden surprise attack offers the only hope of success in such a case.

The way to sure peace
Cannot yet be far
When men spend as much
For peace, as for war—
And each one as quick
To hazard his life
To maintain the peace,
As to help in strife.

VIII. Armed Force Will Not Defeat Communism

Revolutionary communism as the threat around the world can only be met by better ideas, by a sacrificial program of sharing our experience, resources, ideals and lives with the underprivileged two thirds of the human race. People cannot be weaned away from communism in the Orient and Africa and Latin America with bayonets backed by military conscription—but only by brotherhood and better ideas, and the demonstration that democracy has a better answer for their needs than totalitarianism.

But even economic aid and technical assistance, imperative as they are in helping achieve peace in a revolutionary world, are not fundamental answers to the central problem of security. That must come through the development of the United Nations, the rise of moral and political authority for the resolving of international disputes, and by far-reaching steps toward universal disarmament.

IX. Conscription Is a Threat to Freedom

Military conscription is a signficant limitation to freedom in itself as well as a dangerous threat to the further limitation of freedom. The "nation-in-arms" theory which holds that every physically able young man must undergo some military service or military training puts the military in final control of at least a sizable portion of every young man's life. The British military writer, Captain B. H. Liddell Hart says the following in his book, Why Don't We Learn From History (1944): "But the deeper I have gone into the study of war and the history of the past century, the further I have come towards the conclusion that the development of conscription has damaged the growth of the idea of freedom in the continental countries, and thereby damaged their efficiency also—by undermining the sense of personal responsibility. There is only too much evidence that our temporary adoption of conscription in the last war had a permanent effect harmful to the development of freedom and democracy here.

"We ought to realize that it is easier to adopt the compulsory principle of national life than to shake it off. Once compulsion for personal service is adopted in peacetime, it will be hard to resist the extension of the principle to all other aspects of the nation's life, including freedom of thought, speech and writing. We ought to think carefully, and to think ahead, before taking a decisive step towards totalitarianism."

X. Conscription—Not Even the Military Answer

Even if it were conceded that military power is the way to security today, there exists considerable doubt in the minds of some of our eminent military leaders and of many other people as to whether in an atomic war two-year draftees would provide an effective fighting force. On January 14, 1955, the highly recognized magazine, U. S. News and World Report said on page 30, "The armed forces have decided they can not fight modern wars, using radar, atomic bombs, supersonic planes, and sixty-mile-an-hour tanks, with twenty-four-month soldiers, sailors and airmen. . . . The desire to shift toward an all-volunteer force, for the active defense of the nation, is another important key to new manpower plans."

XI. We Propose the Following Alternatives

- Complete renunciation of war.
- The use of nonviolence in settling international disputes.
- A UN to which all nations belong, and to which all serious disputes can be brought and settled under law.
- Complete and universal disarmament. (Universal disarmament must include the universal abolition of military conscription. Discontinuation of the draft here, and a return to the traditional American voluntary military system, would be followed by American efforts for the international abolition of conscription, made morally much more powerful by example as well as precept.)

- Use of the world's resources for the benefit and development of all mankind.
- Building of a spirit of world understanding and brotherhood.

The Amazed Listeners

"Never man spake like this man" (John 7:46).

THIS is the report of the officers to the chief priests and Pharisees when they reported back to them without Jesus in their custody, after having been sent out to arrest him.

Their words were not weak excuses or idle speaking. No man ever has and no one will ever speak as Jesus did. He was the Word of God become flesh, come to reveal God to men. His word was with power; he could read the minds, thoughts and needs of men and could readily sense their true purpose in coming to and questioning him.

A case in point is that of the woman taken in adultery who, John tells us, was brought "that they might have to accuse him." Moses had commanded that an adulteress should be stoned, but Rome alone had the power of imposing the death sentence. Here then was the golden opportunity to discredit him with the people if he refused to pass the death sentence and to involve him with the Roman authorities if he did pass it. At the same time her accusers could make themselves appear righteous because of their zeal for the law.

However, Jesus, sensing their true purpose, writes in the sand and then commands the person who is without sin to cast the first stone. The conclusion of the story is beautiful and forceful. "They which heard it being convicted by their own conscience went out one by one, beginning at the eldest, even unto the last: and Jesus was left alone and the woman standing in the midst."

The religious leaders of Jesus' day considered that the sinful act constituted sin on the part of the individual. But Jesus taught that the angry thought, evil desire or lustful look constituted sinful living, because it is the thought and the desire that motivates the person to do the sinful act, even as it is the root that gives life to the tree and causes it to grow.

So it was, because of secret as well as actual sin, that no one was ultimately able to condemn her, for there was no one without sin.

"Never man spake like this man!" And as he spake—many believed on him (John 8:30). We are told that he taught them (the people) as one having authority and not as their scribes. This must have been a surprising and welcome change to persons accustomed to having their teachers authenticate their teachings by attributing them to well-known and honored rabbis, in order to gain a hearing.

Jesus made no such references. His teaching was plain—"Ye have heard that it was said by them of old time . . . but I say unto you." "Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets. I am not come to destroy, but to fulfill." There could be no mistaking or misunderstanding what he meant.

The Ten Commandments had been expounded, commented upon and each explanation and comment accepted as of equal importance with the original commandments, until there were some six hundred of them and lengthy disputes arose as to which was the greatest commandment.

Jesus, upon being asked which was the greatest commandment (Matt. 22:36-40), summarizes it in two brief but all inclusive commandments, namely, love to God (which covers the first four commandments) and love to man (which covers the remaining six commandments). On these two commandments, said he, hang all the law and the prophets.

As can readily be seen, love is the very center of Jesus' teaching; however, the love that he taught us to show is love not only for those who love us and do us good, but love also for those who have been unkind to us and who have wronged and mistreated us—love for our enemies. Not the love which prompts us to call our friends together for a big dinner, but the kind of love which prompts us to serve the man in need, regardless of his race and creed or our personal feelings.

Paul, in describing true Christian love (1 Cor. 13) catches the spirit of Jesus' teaching concerning this subject and summarizes it for us in these words: "Love is very patient, very kind. Love knows no jealousy; love makes no parade, gives itself no airs, is never rude, never selfish, never irritated, never resentful; love is never glad when others go wrong, love is gladdened by goodness, always slow to expose, always eager to believe the best, always hopeful, always patient. Love never disappears" (1 Cor. 13:4-7, Moffatt).

The religious leaders taught that unless a man was a son of Abraham, offered the required, unblemished sacrifices and kept himself free from being defiled by touching lepers, publicans and sinners, he would not be acceptable with God and could not enter the kingdom of God. Therefore, they were very careful to wrap their garments about themselves tightly and to wash themselves before eating, lest either through contact with unclean persons or through eating contaminated food, they became defiled and their worship be unacceptable in the sight of God.

However, the Master taught that salvation was for all who would repent, believe the gospel and follow him; that one did not become unclean merely because he had touched a sinful or sick person or eaten unclean food, but became unclean when he had an evil heart, for "out of the abundance of the heart, the mouth speaketh." In other words, purity of character and heart rather than outward observances determines whether or not a man is truly righteous.

The words of the Master in Matt. 5:20 form an excellent commentary on this matter. "Except your righteousness exceed the righteousness of the scribes and Pharisees, ye shall in no case enter into the kingdom of heaven." True righteousness never exalts one's self while despising others, but seeks to lead others to Christ and pure, honest, Christian living.

Let God Be God

were unimportant; but he did say that this does not reach to the ultimate question. That question, which is man's sense of alienation and need for reconciliation, can be satisfied only by an action of God, which he performed in Christ, "as an expiation by his blood, to be received by faith" (Romans 3:25). It is this reconciling deed of God, which he, in his freedom, accomplished for us, which overwhelms the heart with gratitude and permits us to call him Father. It is the keystone of the gospel; without it, we might all be well-fed and "secure," but we should not have the peace that is beyond human understanding. For this peace is a peace which is given, and the giver is the God who alone is Lord.

Juniata College

The college's spiritual life week was conducted on the campus Feb. 7-13 with Bro. William M. Beahm, dean of Bethany Biblical Seminary, leading a series of enlightening discussions on the main theme, Why Christianity? This week, an important feature of student activities, provides an opportunity for all to give time for consideration of the spiritual values of life and to study these in relationships to other fields of human endeavor. After morning devotions, chapel talks, dormitory discussions, the students climaxed the week with discussion groups in faculty homes on the final Sunday evening.

Seventeen students were named to the dean's list of distinguished students announced by Dr. Morley Mays for the fall term. Four seniors, one junior, eight sophomores and four freshmen composed the list of students who achieved an average of 2.75 or better out of a possible 3.00. The honor roll included: seniors—Margaret Ann Hershey of Lititz, J. Scott Hommer of Tyrone, John H. Martin, Jr., of Huntingdon, Joyce E. Rinehart of Westminster, Md.; junior—Nancy F. Freed of Telford; sophomores—Anne A. Appleby of Mount Union, Ramon C. Burket of Roaring Spring, Lawrence M. Davis of North Braddock, Jacquelyn A. Hayes of Ebensburg, James M. Martin of Colver, Newton C. Taylor of Huntingdon, Carol E. Titus of Paulsboro, N. J., Joyce Ann White of Lewistown; freshmen—L. Nonnye Huddleston of Ambridge, Robert C. Moore of Aitch, Wilfred B. Staufer of Greensburg, Carl L. Taylor of Sinnemahoning.

Brotherhood Theme: Seek First His Kingdom

Miss Gertrude L. Butler, professor of home economics and chairman of the department at Juniata College, has been granted a leave of absence for the spring term to visit her sister who is ill at Baptist College in Managua, Nicaragua. Miss Helen L. Fisher, assistant professor of home economics, will serve as acting chairman in Miss Butler's absence.

An "open house" program for public inspection of Juniata's new $425,000 residence hall was scheduled for Feb. 19-20. Arrangements for the program were made jointly by the men's house committee of Student Senate and the college's public relations office. The building was completed in January and occupied by 132 men for the spring term.

A stern reprimand to "prophets of gloom" who are predicting "economic collapse . . . moral disintegration . . . and another world war" was delivered by Dr. Raymon M. Kistler, president of Beaver College, at Juniata's winter convocation on Jan. 31. "This is a great day in which we live," Dr. Kistler told a midyear graduating class of eight and approximately 600 students beginning a new term. The prominent Presbyterian churchman and educator strongly urged "faith in the day in which we live." as he appealed to the college students to develop "a real, personal and triumphant faith."

Mrs. D. R. Hanna, director of Christian Education for the Church Federation of Greater Cincinnati (right), presents quarter-century club membership cards to three church workers who have given twenty-five or more years of service to religious education. They are Dr. Albert W. Kauffman of Lakeview, Michigan, Mrs. Goldie I. Ferguson of Dallas, Oregon, and Miss Dorothea Wolcott of Findlay, Ohio

District Attorneys to Delay Prosecution of CO's

United States district attorneys have been instructed by the Justice Department to delay further prosecutions of religious objectors for violation of the draft law until the United States Supreme Court has ruled on several points raised by four Jehovah's Witnesses.

Appeals by the four young men will be heard by the Supreme Court shortly and a decision is expected in the spring. The principal question to be decided by the court is a religious objector's right to confront witnesses who have given derogatory information as to his character or sincerity of religious beliefs.

Japanese Christian Leaders Issue Election Appeal

Leading Japanese Christians issued an appeal calling upon their countrymen to vote during the coming election only for candidates whose qualifications indicate their victory would "assure the elimination of corruption from politics."

The appeal defined candidates to be supported as those who love justice, who love peace and oppose war, who are concerned for the poor and helpless, who are of noble character and who are honest and have an interest in the spiritual side of life.

North Atlantic District Men's, Women's Groups Hold Banquet

A total of 375 persons attended the third annual banquet of the men's and women's work organizations of the North Atlantic district in December. The meeting was held in the Central Schwenkfelder church at Worcester, Pa. The program features included musical numbers by a mixed quartet from Juniata College and by the Trumpeters from the Calvary church in Brooklyn, N. Y.

Harold Brumbaugh, assistant to the president of Juniata College, gave an illustrated lecture concerning his European tour. Dr. Calvert Ellis, president of Juniata College, stressed the importance of lay activity in the work of the church. He said that many of the European churches had become stagnant owing to the fact that most of the work of the church was left to the minister. He said that a minister, no matter how active, brilliant and spiritually minded he may be, cannot do the all-inclusive work of the church without some assistance.

TV Station, Church Federation Get Citation

Television station WLW-D in Dayton, Ohio, and the Church Federation of Greater Dayton, of which Raymond R. Peters is the executive secretary, were cited for "service to both education and religion" by the National Council of Churches' Commission on General Christian Education. The citation was in recognition of the "Bless This House" series produced in Dayton as a cooperative effort of the TV station and the federation. The series began last September on a sustaining basis as a series of programs built around family life situations. It was designed to utilize television as a means of teaching Christian living at home. Forty community groups ran post-telecast discussions on the program.

Two CO's Injured by "Criminally Insane Inmates"

Two conscientious objectors—and two other attendants—were stabbed by four escaping inmates at the Spring Grove state hospital, Catonsville, Md., on Jan. 15. Both men are performing their two years of alternative service at this state mental hospital near Baltimore, Md. They are members of the Church of God in Christ, Mennonite. Although one of the CO's was reported critically injured, the men are considered to be in a fair condition.

Survey Church Film Use

Motion pictures were given a slight edge over older forms of religious education in the first major study of the use of films to be released. It was made in 102 Protestant churches of Greater New Haven, Conn.

The two-year study showed that films open doors to children and make them more receptive to the Christian religion. However, the church must still rely upon person-to-person contact to develop in the child a sense of Christian dedication and service. Class discipline, a problem that has plagued many teachers, was greatly lessened by the use of film.

The survey showed that children receive a more vivid mental image of Christ and other Biblical figures from movies than from Sunday-school book illustrations. Pastors of the 102 churches expressed belief that motion pictures should be planned to fit programs of the local church, and to help train church school teachers and other lay leaders.

Lord's Day Alliance Opposes Proposed World Calendar

The Lord's Day Alliance recently set forth its objections to the proposed World Calendar which may come up for discussion by the United Nations. Melvin M. Forney, general secretary, said the Alliance opposed the new calendar system on these grounds: that it would deny real religious liberty to millions of conscientious observers of weekly holy days; that it would mean a roving Sunday; that it would break the weekly cycle; that it would cause more confusion in the religious and economic worlds; that it is another step in replacing proven religious tradition with new and modern secular philosophy; and that it would form a basis for the complete destruction of the Lord's Day.

The World Calendar plan proposes dividing the year into four equal quarters, each having two months of thirty days and one of thirty-one days. The last day of the year and, in leap years, the day following June 30 would be called "white" days and would not be part of any week or month. Thus, any given date would fall on the same day of the week every year. Some religious groups, including Orthodox Jews and Seventh-day Adventists, strongly oppose the plan because it would mean that the Sabbath would keep shifting.

Need for Better Church Youth Work

Churches need to do more to hold the interest of young people, according to results of a four-year study conducted by the Central Department of Research and Survey of the National Council of Churches. The study which was reported to the annual meeting of the Division of Christian Education reflected the opinion of nearly 2,000 youths, young adults and a scattering of older persons.

Nearly a third of the youths and one out of every four young adults who had dropped out of church work said they had been "bored." They said they had lost interest in a church that did not meet their personal needs. It was indicated that the churches were not holding the interest of employed youth. College girls complained that as they became too old for the church youth group little else was provided for them.

Most of the young people rated the traditional church programs highly. These included the church's teachings of right and wrong, standards of conduct, and Bible study. But they rated much less effective what the survey described as optional activities: scouting, vocational guidance, Christian attitude toward economics, war and peace, dating and marriage counseling.

The survey also showed that the young people felt the church was "weak in providing opportunities to put into action Christian convictions and attitudes developed by the church."

Appeals for Support of Japanese Occupation Babies

The wife of a Japanese businessman has appealed to the Japanese nation to help support the 5,000 to 10,000 Japanese occupation babies left in Indonesia. Mrs. Kuyoshi Shimizu is head of a society whose aim is to eliminate this "shame to Japan." Mrs. Michiko Fujiwara, a member of the House of Councillors, has reported that the abandoned mothers of these children have been driven out of their villages to the cities in search of support for themselves and their children.

The erection of the above historical marker is a phase of the seventy-fifth anniversary celebration of the founding of Bridgewater College. Located on U. S. Highway 11 at the intersection of State Highway 257, the marker is entitled "Bridgewater College." The body reads: "Located two miles southwest in the town of Bridgewater, this liberal arts college is affiliated with the Church of the Brethren. It grew out of the Spring Creek Normal School and Collegiate Institute, founded in 1880, and became Bridgewater College nine years later. It has been co-educational from the beginning." The marker was approved by the Virginia State Library and it was erected by the State Highway Department. In the picture are Rufus B. King, Bridgewater's director of development (left) and C. L. The Future of BRETHREN ACADEMY in Puerto Rico

Shirley Wagoner

AT THE office of the secretary of secondary education near San Juan, Puerto Rico, an official was explaining the present school policies to Eugene Carper, administrator, and Jerry Davis, head of community education for the Brethren Service project in Castañer. "For the next six years," he continued, "the department of education will place its main emphasis on 'first-unit' schools (grades 1-6). Then we will concentrate another period of years on building up the 'second unit' schools (grades 7-9). Finally, when this is accomplished, the plan is to turn attention to developing the senior high program in towns and cities."

As Eugene and Jerry listened, they realized that their hopes to get the aid of the department of education in meeting the need for increased high school facilities in Castañer were not to be fulfilled. Any improvement in the rural high school program seemed more remote than statehood for Hawaii! They left the office with the clear realization that if anything was to be done about the developing situation, the project and the community would have to do it.

Once before, the Brethren Service project had seen the need for high school education in Castañer and had responded to it by beginning the academy program. Since then it has no longer been necessary for those in the Castañer area who wish to attend high school to go thirteen to eighteen miles over tortuous mountain roads to the nearest town high schools, often after a long walk down the mountainsides. In addition, if the people of the community are eventually to assume the responsibility of the work at Castañer—which is the long-range objective of the project—then the academy is vitally necessary in order to achieve that end. Professionally trained persons qualified to maintain schools and a hospital in a rural Puerto Rican district simply will not be forthcoming unless they are found in the community itself and feel an obligation toward it. The academy is, therefore, basic and essential in a program of developing indigenous leadership.

But now, with the academy barely able to manage with its present space and facilities, with every classroom jammed and many classes split into sections, it seems impossible to continue to meet the needs of the community. It is clear that the college prep course offered in the past is not the balanced program needed in Castañer. The wider program begun this year needs to be expanded so that complete business and vocational courses can be offered as well. The academy can barely handle its present courses in the buildings where it is now housed. How can it possibly add the other courses which are needed for the community?

Even more important, with each successive class in the local grammar schools being 25% larger than the preceding ones, how can the academy even accept the number of students which will want to enter in another year or two? A study has recently been completed showing the tremendous increase in the local school enrollments. In another year the academy's present program will be fearfully overcrowded and in another two years existing facilities will be quite impossible. In fact, according to conservative estimates, it is very probable that Brethren Academy may double its enrollment in two years and triple it in four.

Obviously, something will have to be done. One alternative would be to limit the enrollment in some way to the number of students that can now be handled. This does not seem consistent with Brethren Service objectives nor with Christian ethics.

Second, additions could be made to the present temporary CCC barracks buildings to handle an increasing number of students. This would seem obviously shortsighted as the present wooden barracks buildings have already outlived their originally intended period of use.

The only acceptable alternative seems to be to begin on a long-range program of senior high school education designed to serve the students of the area. This would involve an ambitious building program; but since it is quite clear that there will be no other senior high school in the Castañer area, no other responsibility seems acceptable. But where will the buildings come from? And who will help the project to meet this need? These problems are still on the minds of Eugene Carper and Jerry Davis, as well as the rest of the service workers at Castañer. Certainly, if this community need is to be met and this plan to be fulfilled, much loving concern and concrete assistance from others who wish also to serve will be essential.

A Living Faith

Ruth Griggs

I WOULD like to tell you a little about the fine spirit of one of the 1-W couples on our staff. Similar things could be written about others who are now serving or have served on this and other projects, but let's take this couple.

How much income should one have before God expects a tithe? This couple tithes their monthly allowance of $7.50 each. The tithe is systematically set aside for God before any money is taken out for their personal expenses and the expenses of their baby (expenses other than board, room, medical and part of the dental costs which are furnished).

At Christmas a used bicycle was donated by a family in town to be repaired and given to some worthy migrant child. This 1-W couple saw the bicycle as a potential tool for hope-lifting of some child and family, so they bought a seat and basket and repaired the bike with their tithe money. Then they waited and watched for just the right person for the bicycle.

Just after Christmas a very lovely family came to us for aid. They were rural people squeezed out of cotton farming by the drought last summer which meant that they cleared almost nothing on their crop. The 1-W couple noticed the cleanliness, the hope, the honesty and integrity of this family, the concern of the parents for their four alert-eyed boys and the honorable pride which led them to camp out in their truck while waiting on housing in Osceola rather than take housing in a cluster of indecent shacks huddled around a bar. They felt the concern which the parents had in the boys' schooling. The bicycle was placed in the hands of this family primarily for the use of the oldest boy in going to and from school.

The couple followed through with a number of visits to the family, a fishing trip together and efforts to find a job for the father. It was a hard struggle for the family to meet all the problems of those first weeks in Florida, but now they have a metal shelter in Osceola which the mother keeps very neat and clean. And just last week the father with our help found work on a year-round basis.

The couple who worked with this family so faithfully and who do so diligently all the tasks which are theirs to do here does little philosophizing about religion. They don't talk a lot about their beliefs. But they have a living faith which shows in deed and daily living. They serve with enthusiasm, kindness and joy. No words of worry about the future pass their lips even though at the close of their two years of service they will face the necessity of a home and other expenses young homemakers have. They do not camplain about the living conditions, the work load, the pay, the few new clothes possible. We feel in them no anxiety about the impossibility of earning now toward their future plans. "There'll be a way open when the time comes." They live by faith. To do their best during each golden now is enough for them.

I wonder if Jesus thought of folks like this when he talked of "the salt of the earth."

The Sunday Evening Opportunity

Joseph R. Jennings
McFarland, California

A FEW weeks ago in discussing with our printer a possible picture for the church directory cover, he pointed to one of the pictures and said, "I can't use this picture; it has no beginning or ending." In planning the Sunday evening program, it should begin and end with meeting the needs of the people. It can be an opportunity for growth and culture of Christian character, an opportunity for clarifying our vision of community and world needs.

In some churches the traditional evening service, beginning at 7:30 and patterned after the morning service, will be quite adequate. In others, the evening service will need to be reconsidered and planned with as much, or more, care as the morning service. Several patterns suggest themselves for inspiring Sunday evenings at church.

Here is one that calls for the evening sessions to begin at 6:30 with all members of the family present. The kindergarten and primaries meet together with their leader for a happy fun-time, making a joyful noise unto the Lord. There is singing and story telling and always an atmosphere that bespeaks: "We love our church" and "We have such interesting, good times at church."

At the same time, the juniors and junior highs meet together with their leader where they enjoy singing and playing instrumental numbers—possibly having an orchestra if enough members play. This group gets a good deal of pleasure and satisfaction, too, out of preparing and presenting drama, not necessarily long or elaborate, but long enough to tell a story and give opportunity for growth by learning and doing. Bible stories with simple costumes have good possibilities. (In many churches, the junior highs will meet with the youth.)

Bill Smith

Church fellowship meals deepen Christian friendships and loyalties

The young people are in their department at this period, too. Organized on the Brotherhood-wide Youth Action Plan of faith, witness, outreach, citizenship and fellowship, they plan with their counselors their programs and discussion meetings.

Adult Sessions

The adults are meeting at 6:30, also. They meet in one of the larger rooms of the church or on one side of the sanctuary. Their program is varied. This assembly might be known as the Sunday Evening Forum. If the pastor has a Sunday morning series of sermons on the doctrines of the Christian faith, he may lead the forum in discussing the particular doctrine of his morning sermon. It gives opportunity for questions and clarification. Following this series on doctrines, the forum will possibly want a series of five or six Sunday evenings discussing the Christian life, including such topics as Deepening the Spiritual Life, led by a consecrated layman from another congregation in the community, possibly; Solving Personal Problems, led by a devout psychiatrist or psychologist; and The Church (local, Brotherhood, ecumenical), led by a layman or minister.

Where the forum group is large, it might be an advantage to have two or more groups meeting simultaneously and when the series is completed, have the groups switch and the same leaders follow through with the new groups. Other forum topics might be suggested as some other series of sermons by the pastor or a survey of the Old Testament (book by book) or community issues calling for Christian action.

The group meetings are only forty-five minute periods. At 7:15 all groups meet in the sanctuary. There is congregational singing of the great hymns of the church and of the songs of salvation. The young people lead in Scripture reading, prayer and special music, such as instrumental, quartet and chorus numbers; the juniors and junior highs come with their achievements of the previous period; and the kindergarten-primary group occasionally brings a song or choral reading to share with the total Sunday evening assembly. Some Sunday evenings, certain adult classes give leadership. Sometimes there is an evening of music: vocal, instrumental, group and congregational. Other times the evening service is built around an impressive film. Certain Sunday evenings the pastor brings a sermon. The schedule is worked out for a quarter in advance and all groups and individuals plan ahead for their participation according to the calendar.

At eight o'clock the evening service is over. We have had two forty-five minute periods full of interest and inspiration. There is no laxity in the time schedule, for each period begins promptly and closes on time.

After-service Opportunities

Since it isn't late, small fellowship groups can feel free to meet after church in homes. Young people follow a schedule of youth fellowship in homes. Certain young adult couples use the time for adventures in a prayer cell. They seek the mind of Christ and read from his life and ministry from the New Testament. They use such guides as Frank Laubach's book on prayer. Then they pray for the concerns of the church: goals, individuals (some unnamed), the pastor, peace, other churches in the community, special requests. At certain designated times during the following week or Sunday, they each pray for a concern previously discussed. It has become an interesting and inspiring adventure in prayer.

It was decided that growth should take place by cultivating other couples who become interested and who would agree to attend each meeting and assist in starting new prayer cells. There is never a public announcement about the prayer cells. The idea started with laymen of the church.

Sunday Evening Schools

Editor's note. Some churches have found a series of month-long Sunday evening schools very beneficial to the whole church program. The schools can be developed on a variety of themes, such as Missions, Stewardship, Bible Study, Christian Living, Christian Arts, Citizenship, Temperance, etc.

The plan followed usually runs something like this:

5:30 Light supper for all the members of all the church families. Various classes or organizations take turns in preparing the meals.

6:00 Following the meal, a brief period of recreation and singing is enjoyed by all around the tables.

6:15 Age-group classes or interest groups, depending on the type of the school.

7:00-7:30 Closing worship for all groups assembled together.

Schools of this type help to strengthen the ties of the total church fellowship. Families and friends enjoy eating together, playing together, working together and worshiping together. Each church should plan several annually.

Open House Observed

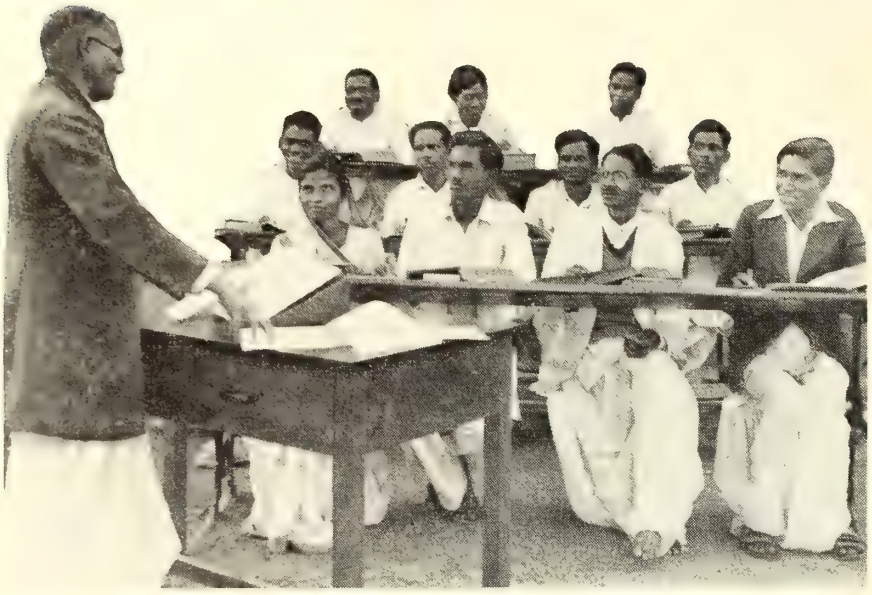
In conjunction with National Education Week last fall, the Wenatchee, Wash., Sunday school observed "open house." Parents of the pupils, members of the church and friends of the community were invited to come to each department to meet the superintendents and teachers and to discuss plans of the classes. Jay Eller, chairman of the board of Christian education, served as chairman.

Following the informal period of visiting, the entire group assembled in the sanctuary for a program by the Sunday-school pupils. This included a number from the nursery children, a short worship service by the kindergarten department, a pageant, What Makes a Church? by the primary children, songs and a choral reading by the juniors, a playlet, Paul's Conversion, by the junior high youth and music by a double quartet from the youth department.

New Testaments were presented in the name of the church by the pastor, S. Loren Bowman, to twenty persons who have served as Sunday-school teachers for twenty-five years or more. Some of these are still active in the teaching program of the church. Those receiving Testaments were: Mr. and Mrs. Orville Booth, Mr. and Mrs. Ezra Crist, Mr. and Mrs. Galen Leavell, Mr. and Mrs. Ray Weimer, John Sperline, Elizabeth Travis, Florence McMillen, Jesse Graybill, Cleo Miller, Iris Dean, Margery Nickles, Laura Neher, L. J. Sellers, Charles Huffman, Owen Kintner and Russell Heminger.

To complete the special occasion the adult department provided refreshments for all present in the social room of the church.

Talents Project



Bro. J. E. Dettra reports that members of the Midland church in Eastern Virginia have participated two years in a special talents project. This year $198 was given out to seventeen individuals in the spring and to date the returns have been $1,213.93. The investments ranged from one dollar to one hundred dollars. The following paragraphs tell of some of the projects.

Several little girls bought calves from their fathers for $10 each and then sold them in the fall for around $25 to $35 each. Two sisters each invested $3 in sweet potato plants and together made $30 for the church. One lady invested $5 in yarn for making pot holders which brought in $10.

Some raised chickens for their projects. Several farmers invested $25 to $35 in steers and then were able to sell them in the fall for $75 to $85. The largest amount invested was $100 which was put into fertilizer, seed corn and tractor gas. This farmer donated his time and machinery and raised a corn crop from which he realized $558.

Some of the members who participated in this project report that their "talent" garden or field yielded bigger and better crops than other fields around them. In spite of the drought there was an excellent yield from the projects. Bro. Dettra says, "It just goes to prove to us what God can do through us, how he multiplies our efforts and blesses us for serving him. We owe God one seventh of our time, one tenth of our money and all of ourselves."

Readers who would be interested in trying a talent project like this could profitably see the 16 mm. sound film, entitled Talents. It can be secured from the General Brotherhood Board, Attention: Visual Education Service, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill. The rental fee is $10.

And They Were Sent Out by Twos

THERE are twelve men in the Bulsar Bible School. These men with their wives are in the second year of a two-year course for church workers. Among the courses which they naturally study in a Bible school which aims to prepare them for service in the village parish is Christian education.

Christian education is approached in class from the standpoint of principle and method as they relate to the situation in India. The use of the flannelgraph has been stressed in the work of both years. The students have colored and cut out a complete set of scenes on the Life of Christ. They pasted on the pictures bits of flannel sent in relief boxes. They have also prepared a set of material on the Christian home as well as on stewardship and revival in a church. The men have been very original in making and collecting pictures to supplement the materials which come in the sets.

The flannelgraph is a new approach to teaching for them and provides inexpensive materials which they can own and use. They enjoy using this visual aid in their teaching and naturally come back to report great interest and enthusiasm among the groups, whether children or adults.

As a practical project for the group the students go out two by two to the surrounding churches and groups within church areas to present their messages. They serve in the Sunday schools and junior church at Bulsar and at evening meetings as well as in the Sunday morning services.

One group of two said recently, "The village people sat very quietly. There was no noise. The people pleaded for us to come again and to show some more pictures with a story like this one."

"Our school started with a bang. Our three largest schools—Marama, Garkida and Lassa—had an unprecedented enrollment. Lassa is up to 430, Marama about the same and Garkida as much."

H. Stover Kulp
(Feb. 7, 1955)

"Garkida has found itself very much in need of a new church building and so the dream at last has a foundation under it. With the close of the rains we hope to see the walls starting up. This will be sun-dried brick with a sheet aluminum roof and rafters of palm."

Herbert Michael family, Nigeria

"The new church will cost around $1800, a huge sum by standards here. This is in addition to their regular support of six or eight out-village evangelists and the regular church program. I am impressed with the way our local committees take to the task of the church, often in the face of great odds, with a calmness and faith that gets the work done."

Charles Lunkley, Nigeria

"We have just about completed our second year in this great land of India. What a country to live in! What an opportunity for Christian service! And yet, the way is not easy and is becoming increasingly harder. The days of real testing for the Christian Church in India are here. Deep roots, strong faith, true courage and humility are the absolute requisites to Christian work now."

Glenn Campbell family, India

"During the past year two new evangelistic centers were opened in Jawahar State. We request that you remember the workers at these places, one of whom, Bhiva Mahundkar, is working among his own relatives and friends. Pray that he may build a new church among his people.

"In some parts of India there is a rising tide of opposition to Christian evangelism. However, we enjoy full liberty in the promotion of our church program of worship and teaching. No obstacles are put in the way when our church people bring about genuine conversions."

Chalmer and Susan Shull, India

"The response to evangelistic effort continues encouraging. The overall atmosphere in which we work is some more congenial than a year ago. At the local level we have no hindrance to evangelistic work. The thirty-six village schools in Surat District have been closed and we will close the eighteen schools in our district in the near future. The church is almost entirely reconciled to this step now, and is accepting the situation quietly. We have plans to open evangelistic work in more new pioneer areas soon."

An Experience in Forgiveness

Mildred Grimley
Lassa, Nigeria

ONE of our practice teachers sought me out while I was teaching at the Lassa school today. He was on the verge of tears as he told me his troubles. "All term my fourth year elementary class in history and Christian instruction has given me trouble. Today it is more than I can bear. They're criticizing my tests, my ways of teaching and they continually ask questions for the purpose of trapping me."

When I heard this story I was most indignant that these young boys and men, ranging in ages from twelve to twenty-three years, should be acting so un-Christian as to undermine the confidence of a practice teacher. During the next hour I thought over carefully what I was going to say to the class. The folowing period I went into the room and for about five minutes talked with, or rather to, them about their actions and attitudes. I finally ended the lecture in a note of gloom—the entire class would be expelled if the situation continued or repeated itself. Then I left.

When school was over I asked the practice teacher how the class was after I left. He smiled and said, "Oh, we had a fine time! The room was deathly still when you walked out. Then the stillness was broken by the quiet voice of one of the pupils who said, 'Teacher, things have been spoiled. Perhaps Satan has entered among us. We should ask for forgiveness.' Another pupil spoke up. 'I think we should pray and ask God to forgive us for what we have done and to give us strength to finish out this term like true Christians.' Heads bowed and our hearts rose in earnest petition to God. The test which had been planned was forgotten and God blessed us!' '

TRINITY CHURCH in Detroit

Alma Brenneman

WHEN the members of the First Church of the Brethren at Detroit, Mich., decided to sell the church property at Seyburn and Lafayette Streets and relocate in a new territory, some of the members living on the west side of Detroit felt that another church fellowship was desirable in their area.

Under the leadership of Bro. Paul B. Studebaker, who was the pastor of the First church in Detroit at that time, the first meeting of members who were eager for a new west-side organization was held on Jan. 14, 1951, in the home of Charles and Angus Long, who at that time lived across the street from the present church location. There were nine present at this first meeting. These meetings were held every two weeks and with the members showing much interest and enthusiasm, soon Sunday evening meetings were held.

A beautiful site on the corner of West Chicago and Inkster Roads in Redford Township was purchased by the congregation of the First church of Detroit. The nearby Ashcroft School was soon obtained for Sunday morning services and the new congregation was organized on Sept. 7, 1951. On Sunday, Oct. 7, 1951, the first morning service was held in Ashcroft School with Bro. Wayne Wheeler of Lansing as the guest minister for that day. He spoke to us on the subject, Solid Foundations.

Since Trinity did not have a pastor the first year, Miss Lillian R. Good of the First church staff was secured to be our parish worker. Her untiring efforts and faithful work with the members and in the community helped build an effective church program. Soon a parsonage near the church was purchased and used as our parish house. Sunday-school classes and meetings were held here until we needed it for a parsonage.

By the next spring the plans for the building were approved, money solicited from the members and construction of the building started.

On Sunday afternoon, May 4, 1952, ground-breaking services were held for our new church. We were glad to welcome Brother and Sister David O. Schechter and their family of Traer, Iowa, to our ground-breaking services. They had come to look over the field to consider the pastorate here. On Sept. 7, 1952, they were welcomed to our fellowship. This was a great and blessed day for the people in the church. With the capable leadership of our pastor, Trinity began to grow and a fuller and better program was organized.

On Jan. 10, 1954, the congregation worshiped in the sanctuary for the first time. By now our membership had grown from the 9 who attended the first prayer meeting to 152 members. This progress in membership was made in less than three years.

Two months later, on March 21, 1954, the members and friends of Trinity dedicated a new electric organ. This organ dedication service was held at the regular Sunday morning service with Alvin F. Brightbill of Bethany Biblical Seminary as our guest speaker and soloist. In the afternoon a hymn festival was directed by Bro. Brightbill.

On May 16, 1954, Trinity church held a dedication service of their new educational unit. In the future a sanctuary on the east end of the unit is to be added to complete the proposed church. Bro. Paul B. Studebaker, at that time pastor of First church in Detroit and under whose able leadership Trinity was conceived and organized, was with us on this dedication day and brought greetings from our sister church here in the city. Bro. Paul M. Robinson, president of Bethany Biblical Seminary, was the guest speaker and delivered the main address on the theme, Church of the Living Stones. Prof. A. R. Ikenberry, representing Manchester College, brought greetings from the college. Honorable G. Mennen Williams, governor of Michigan, who at the last minute was unable to be with us, sent his representative who gave a word of greeting from the state.

Others who were with us and brought greetings were: Bro. Galen T. Lehman, representing the Central Region; Bro. Ernest Jehnsen, representing Michigan District; Dr. Walton Cole, representing the Pastors' Union in Detroit; Rev. Raleigh Sain, representing the Detroit Council of Churches; Rev. Carleton Younge, representing the Livonia Ministerial Association; Prosecutor Gerald K. O'Brien, representing the County of Wayne, Detroit; Supt. Merlin D. Roe, representing Redford Township Schools; Mr. Samuel D. Smith, representing the Lions Club and other civic organizations of the community. The attendance at dedication was 478 and the dedication offering was $1,309.

On Christmas Eve of the year 1954, through the sponsorship of our senior choir, Trinity church members and many community friends enjoyed a very beautiful and impressive candlelight communion service. All three choirs participated in the singing of Christmas carols and hymns. The simple Christmas and candle wall decorations, the beautiful poinsettias in the chancel and the church filled to capacity, all helped to make this Christmas Eve one of the finest services we have had at Trinity. We hope to make this service a yearly affair to help put Christ back into Christmas. We all went home that evening with a deeper meaning of what Christmas really means to us. Thus we were all better fitted to enjoy a more Christian Christmas Day.

For the new year and in the years to come in this church building dedicated to the glory of God, the minister and people of Trinity are working hard to build a more effective church program to serve God and our fellow men. We are praying for the success of his kingdom. Will you pray with us?

Church News

Northwestern Ohio

Marion—Since our last report six have been baptized into our church fellowship and five are awaiting baptism. Twelve BVS'ers were in charge of our worship service one Sunday morning. Fifteen of our young people attended the Thanksgiving conference at the Sugar Creek church. Some of our young people were at the recreation laboratory at Manchester. At Christmas time the young people presented the play, Carol Finds Christmas. The ladies' society sent Christmas boxes to our boys in service. The Co-Workers' class sponsored the New Year's watch party with fellowship, games, refreshments, a film and a worship service. Our school of missions was held during the month of January. We were privileged to have Sister Goldie Swartz tell of her work in India and were challenged to deepen our own spiritual lives as we heard Bro. Calvin Bright relate his experiences in China and his prison experiences. We also had Rev. Jack Stowell of the Orient Crusade Missions, and another evening we used the film, India's Sorrows. The men have been working each evening on our remodeling project. The entire basement has been torn out and they are digging the floor deeper and will put in a completely new basement.—Mrs. Grace Holler, Marion, Ohio.

Southern Ohio

Bear Creek—At the Thanksgiving service, Don Bowman talked and showed his pictures of his trip to India. A new emphasis has been given to our stewardship program with a larger use of church envelopes for 1955. Arthur Hunn was ordained to the ministry on Dec. 19 by Moyne Landis of the district board, assisted by our pastor. Brother and Sister Hunn are now attending Bethany Biblical Seminary. The young people gave the Christmas play, Seeing the Star. Bro. Lester Fike of Hagerstown, Ind., conducted our evangelistic meetings Feb. 20-27. One of the district sectional preaching missions will be held in our church by Robert Sherfy of Harrisonburg, Va., March 14-20.—Mrs. Hugh Norris, Dayton, Ohio.

Bradford—Thirteen were received into the church felowship by baptism during our revival which was held by Bro. Dolar Ritchey. Eight persons received perfect Sunday-school attendance awards. Our delegates to district meeting were Etta Bailey, Myrtle Frolke and Ida Royer. The harvest day program centered on thankfulness. The union Thanksgiving service was held in our church with Rev. Stevens of the Presbyterian church as speaker. Articles for medical kits for relief were collected at the women's work Christmas party. A Christmas party was given for the children on Dec. 18. The children's department presented Little Star of Bethlehem on the morning of Dec. 19 and in the evening the combined choirs presented, The Other Wise Man. The women's work made comforters and collected a quantity of canned and dried foods, grease, and clothing for foreign and home relief.—Ruth E. Royer, Bradford, Ohio.

Donnels Creek—Five new members have been baptized into our fellowship. Dedication services have been held for several babies. The children gave a Christmas program on Sunday morning, Dec. 19. Both choirs presented the cantata, O Holy Night, at our regular birthday supper. The junior choir sang at both the Greenville Home and the Clark County Home. The entire church was invited to join in caroling. Our pastor, Ross L. Noffsinger, spoke over a local radio station each Sunday morning in December. He also attended the pastor's conference in Columbus. Our church is enrolled in the 100% Messenger Club. Several of our young people attended the CBYF conference at the New Carlisle church. Nine heifers are being raised for relief. The missionary society was in charge of a school of missions during the month of February.—Ruth Funderburg, Springfield, Ohio.

Happy Corner—In the fall our men organized a men's work group with Bob Dowler as chairman. This group has made a number of repairs on the church building. The roof fund was a project sponsored by our young married people's class. Bro. Moyne Landis officiated at our communion service. On Sunday morning following our love feast, breakfast was served in the church basement. On Dec. 5 Mr. Hamilton Satvedi of India, who is now enrolled at Ohio State University, brought our morning message. On Sunday evening, Dec. 19 our children and young people presented a Christmas program at which time our missionary offering was received. Six babies were dedicated in a special service conducted by our pastor, Bro. Mulligan. Our delegates to district conference were Russell Lambert and Oscar Roberts. Our council met Jan. 12 with our elder, Bro. Ira Oren, presiding. We have recently purchased some ground adjoining the church property. At our council meeting permission was granted our young people's class to sponsor the buying of a new organ for the church. At Christmas our women's work group remembered the folks at the Greenville Home with gifts. A new Sunday-school class of married people has been organized as the Willing Workers' class.—Mrs. Albert Oaks, Englewood, Ohio.

North Atlantic

Philadelphia, Bethany—A large number from our church attended the men's and women's organization banquet on Dec. 4. Bro. R. W. Schlosser of Elizabethtown was with us the week end of Dec. 11 for a Bible institute. The men's organization of our church sponsored a Christmas party for the Sunday school on Dec. 18. A Christmas program was given during the Sunday-school hour on Dec. 19. On Christmas Eve we held a midnight service after which our young people went caroling. The choir assisted by other persons presented the cantata, A King Is Born. We held a watch night service on New Year's Eve. At our evening service on Jan. 2, one of our deacons, Bro. Frank Galbraith preached in the absence of our pastor. One of our young men just returning from Japan told of his experiences while working with a missionary and his wife. At our mother and daughter meeting on Jan. 4, Mrs. Wilma Stern Lewis, president of district women's work, was with us. At a recent Sunday-school teachers' meeting, the picture, Doors of Decision, was used. On Sunday morning, Jan. 16, one person was baptized. In the evening of the same day a special communion service was held for the benefit of the boys who had been overseas for the last couple of years.—Mrs. C. S. Bartolett, Philadelphia, Pa.

Eastern Pennsylvania

Ephrata—A religious census and teaching mission were held in our community. Bro. Robert Knechel of Gettysburg was guest leader for the teaching mission. The union Thanksgiving service was held in the Trinity Lutheran church. Our women's work social was held on the evening of Dec. 16 with women from a neighboring congregation joining our group. The children's program was given on Dec. 19 and in the evening the chancel choir gave the cantata, Chimes of the Holy Night. Bro. Paul Robinson was our guest speaker on Dec. 26, and a service of carols and candles was held in the evening. A watch night service was held on New Year's Eve. Our pastor brought a series of sermons on the Ten Commandments. The churches of our town united in the Week of Prayer services. The CBYF sponsored a skating party, a Thanksgiving social and sold candy at Christmas time. They also collected toys for children. One of our young men made and donated three bookcases to the primary department. Our school of missions opened Jan. 2, when Miss Emma Ziegler spoke and showed colored slides of her mission work. Great interest is shown in the children's hour service being held each Wednesday at 4:00 p.m. Since our last report nine have been received into our church by letter, — Mabel M. Myer, Ephrata, Pa.

Little Swatara—A deputation team from Elizabethtown College gave a program. The Prim Singers of Harrisburg presented a program of music. Our delegates to the district missionary meeting at Hanoverdale were Herbert Miller, Paul Ziegler and Elmer Bashore. The film, Faith of Our Families, was shown at a women's work program. The fathers and sons of our congregation had their annual fellowship with Bro. Fred Hollingshead as guest speaker. We were favored with a visit from Sister Emma K. Ziegler during her furlough from her missionary duties. On Thanksgiving evening a prayer, praise and thanksgiving service was held at the Merkey house. Bro. A. C. Baugher was our guest speaker for our annual Bible institute. In the evening of the same day, Bro. Jay Gibble of our congregation was ordained into the ministry with Bro. Carl Zeigler and Bro. Baugher assisting in the service. For the men's work program the film, Unto These My Brethren, was shown. Our fall council meeting was held Dec. 18. The CBYF group presented the Christmas story and song service entitled Come to the Manger, on the evening of Dec. 19. The children gave their Christmas program on Dec. 26. Two new members were received into our church by baptism. On Christmas Eve following the CBYF class meeting, the group went caroling.—Mildred C. Ziegler, Bethel, Pa.

Mechanics Grove—At our last council meeting Bro. Charles Hevener was elected Sunday-school superintendent to succeed

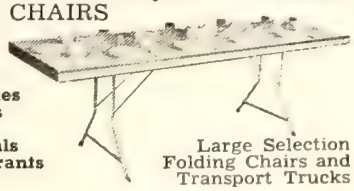
Bro. Charles Schreiber, who had served in this position for the past nineteen years. Bro. Lester Schreiber was elected elder-in-charge of our church and Bro. Rufus Bucher will continue as our pastor. Sister Martha Martin was with us for a Bible institute one Sunday morning and evening. The homebuilders' class installed a public address system in the church. They also conduct worship programs in the homes of the sick and aged who are unable to attend the church services. The young people and the homebuilders went Christmas caroling two evenings during the Christmas season. One Sunday evening our church gave a worship service on the Sanctuary Hour over TV. Recently the Charles Bieber family fellowshiped with us for an evening. Sister Mary Beth Bieber is one of the missionaries supported by our church. On Jan. 16 the B.V.S. group from New Windsor gave a program in our church. On May 1 Bro. Robert Byerly of Elizabethtown will bring the messages for both the morning and evening services. Bro. Guy West of York will conduct an evangelistic meeting for two weeks in our church beginning May 2.—Martha Bucher, Quarryville, Pa.

Schuylkill—Bro A. C. Baugher was instructor for our Bible institute. On Thanksgiving Day Bro. George Snyder of the Little Swatara congregation was with us. On Nov. 28 we celebrated the thirty-seventh anniversary of our present church building. Speakers for the day were Brethren S. G. Meyer, S. K. Wenger and Nevin Zuck. Special music was provided by the neighboring churches. At our council meeting on Dec. 6, we held an election of officers for the church and Sunday school. A deputation team from Elizabethtown College was with us on Dec. 12. Both Sunday schools presented Christmas programs. On Dec. 26 Bro. Mark Wolfe of Crab Orchard, W. Va., was the guest speaker.—Mrs. Arnold Zechman, Pine Grove, Pa.

West Greentree—Love feast services were held at Rheems with Hiram Frysinger of Hanoverdale and A. E. Frederick of Roaring Springs as guest speakers. Our men's work group harvested their crop of sweet potatoes. The sisters of the church spent a one day sewing at both the General and St. Joseph hospitals in Lancaster. The women's work group packed Christmas friendship packets for New Windsor and also sewed four dozen articles for relief. Evangelistic services were held at Greentree with Robert O. Hess of Manheim as evangelist. As a result of these meetings, three persons were received into the church by baptism. The Greentree and Rheems Sunday schools packed and distributed fruit baskets for the aged and shut-ins at Christmas time. Rev. Samuel Wolgemuth and his family, who recently returned from evangelical work in Japan, gave a program at Rheems on Dec. 26. On Jan. 9 a Bible institute was conducted by Elmer Hoover of Elizabethtown College in the Greentree church. Since the Rheems school was destroyed by fire at Christmas time, the Rheems church is being used for a temporary school building for the six grades.—Mrs. LeRoy Hawthorne, Rheems, Pa.

Southern Pennsylvania

Welty—The Sunday school is growing beyond our present capacity so the church purchased the little white church across the road and will move it to the rear of our present church building to provide more classrooms. Hence a new building project is underway. The proceeds from the young people's class Lord's Acre project of corn went towards the building fund. Our harvest praise service was conducted by the women of the church in the form of a home missionary program on the condition of the American Indian and our mission among the Navajo Indians. The food from this service was given to the old folks' home and to the church orphanage. Revival meetings were held by Bro. O. J. Hassinger of Huntsdale, Pa. The teachers of the children's department gave a Christmas party in the little white church on the afternoon of Dec. 4. Each child was asked to bring a pair of socks to send to the children of the Navajo Indians. These socks were hung on a Christmas tree. Four smaller trees were trimmed for shut-ins. The children made the trimmings, assisted by the girls from the intermediate and young people's class. The Christmas program was a children's hymn sing with children's groups from other churches participating.—Esther V. McCormick, Highfield, Md.



York, Madison Avenue—Bro. R. W. Schlosser of Elizabethtown was with us for a two-week series of meetings. As a result of these meetings two new members were received into the fellowship of our church. We have recently put a new roof on our church building. Bro. Charles M. Bieber, missionary to Africa, was with us recently, giving a helpful and interesting illustrated talk on his work on the mission field. Our church participated in our annual school of Christian education which is sponsored by five of our local churches with our pastor, Bro. Jesse O. Jenkins, as chairman of the school. Our nursery is being staffed each Sunday during the Sunday-school and church services under the sponsorship of the homebuilders class. Our church united with eighteen churches of our community in the observance of Thanksgiving with our pastor as speaker. We are receiving an offering quarterly for our improvement fund. Our Sunday-school building is inadequate to care for our increased attendances, therefore we plan to provide additional facilities in the near future. The men's work were successful in their efforts to make our church a member of the 100% Messenger Club. The Sunday school presented a Christmas program. At the worship hour following dedication services were conducted for ten children and their parents. At the evening service the senior choir presented the cantata, Chimes of the Holy Night. We now have three choirs: senior choir directed by Sister Ethel Altland, intermediate choir directed by Sister Kathryn Holtzapple and the cherub choir directed by Sister Mildred Berkheimer. Four new members were recently baptized.—Mrs. Phyllis Morthland, York, Pa.

Western Pennsylvania

Meyersdale—Bro. Russell Showwalter of Salisbury, Pa. had charge of the installation service for our pastor and his wife, Brother and Sister Earl Fike, Jr. One Sunday morning Bro. Ronald Rowland brought our message. The food from our harvest festival was presented to the Home for the Aged at Scalp Level. At our fall council meeting in November, Bro. Earl Fike, Jr., was elected moderator until the district ordains him to the eldership. Three deacons were elected at this meeting. The week of Nov. 21 our pastor was in charge of meditations over the local radio station. Our church paper, The Visitor, published quarterly by the church and the CBYF department has been sent to each home. A group of our young people accompanied by our pastor attended the National Youth Conference. The youth group entered a religious float in the farmers' parade and won first prize and they also had a booth at the fair. The proceeds derived from these projects were donated toward the purchase of a bulletin board. This group also entered a float in the Christmas parade. The children presented a Christmas program the morning of Dec. 19. The evenings of Dec. 19 and 20 the choir gave a pageant, The Song of Christmas. The narratives were written by our pastor. The first Sunday of each month has been designated as children's Sunday. At this time the children come into the worship service from the Sunday school and a special sermon is presented by our pastor. Membership classes began in January. During the morning worship period on Jan. 23, the Juniata choir gave a musical program. Members of the older youth Sunday-school class have redecorated their classroom. The junior choir is selling stationery with a picture of the church to raise money for new robes. —Mrs. Elmer L. Dia, Meyersdale, Pa.

Sipesville—Bro. Cecil Showalter conducted our two-week evangelistic meetings, closing with our love feast service. Twelve members were received into the church by baptism. On the evening of Nov. 21 Bro. Ralph Poorbaugh of Somerset showed pictures of his recent trip around the world. On Nov. 28 the films, Two Thousand Years Ago and Fishers of Men, were presented in our church.

Our annual Christmas Eve pageant was entitled The Glory of the Lord. On Jan. 11 we held our regular quarterly council meeting. At this time we discussed the obtaining of a refugee family. No definite decision will be reached until our next council meeting.—Mrs. Jay Wolford, Sipesville, Pa.

Westmont—We have employed Mr. Horace Bailey as our church architect and plans for building a new church are progressing. All the organizations are working to raise the needed amount of money until early spring when we plan to begin construction. At our quarterly council meeting we approved the buying of a lot adjoining our property so that we will have sufficient space for the new church. The choir presented The Other Wise Man on Dec. 26. On Dec. 31 we held our fellowship meeting followed by a watch service. The young men of the church have joined the West End Sunday-school basketball league. Our pastor, Bro. Earl Kaylor, Jr., is presenting a series of studies and slides pertaining to the Lord's Prayer at our Sunday evening services. Since our last report five have been received into our church by baptism. The young people were in charge of the morning worship service on Feb. 6; Miss Elsie Kels, a teacher at Garfield Junior High School was speaker. A teacher's training course was held in February. Our spring love feast will be observed on Palm Sunday. April 24 will be Juniata day at our church. The women's work group sent relief clothing to New Windsor and is now making mend-it kits to be sent to Austria. Our attendance at all our services is steadily increasing.—Mrs. Clifford Alwine, Johnstown, Pa.

Western Maryland

Cherry Grove—The first Sunday in April 1954 we held our first worship service in our new church. Elder Arthur Scrogum conducted the services. Our dedication service was held June 27, 1954, with Bro. Scrogum bringing the dedicatory address. Bro. Daniel Whitacre has been our pastor for the summer and winter months. Bro. Whitacre held a week of revival services which closed with the love feast and communion service. Two were baptized into our church. During the summer months, the young people organized their group. The attendance at our regular Sunday services has been above average. We are having services each Sunday during the winter months which we have not been able to do in the past years. The young people presented a Christmas program. The church has purchased a new piano. We were host church to the district meeting. On Jan. 8 we received two into our church by letter and one by former baptism.—Mrs. Delwood Merrill, Barton, Md.

Eastern Virginia

Locust Grove, Lower Union—We have completed most of the remodeling of our parsonage and a dedication service was held in the fall by the pastor. Our pastor, Bro. Charles Simmons, held a week's revival. The CBYF group is growing in number. At Christmas time this group presented a Christmas pageant, collected toys for children of the community and went caroling. In the fall the youth group sponsored Lloyd Wakeman, who showed slides and talked of his experiences as a B.V.S.'er in Greece. As a follow-up to Bro. Wakeman's visit, the young people put on a drive for glass fruit jars and around 500 were sent to New Windsor. The group also had a New Year's Eve watch party to which several other church groups were invited. The women's work sent fruit boxes at Christmas time. They are presently sewing ready-cut garments for relief. In December we held our love feast with our pastor in charge. The filmstrip, Unto These My Brethren, was shown in connection with observing home mission Sunday.—Mrs. Charles H. Simmons, Free Union, Va.

Oakton—Since our last report two have been baptized and one received by letter into our church. Armistice Day was observed with special services, a sacrificial meal and a peace program. Union Thanksgiving services for the Oakton-Vienna area were held in our church with our pastor, Bro. David L. Rogers, as speaker. Our church choir gave the cantata, The Heavenly Child, on Dec. 19. We also conducted Christmas Eve services. The church school gave the pageant, The Light of the World, on Dec. 26, ending with a candlelighting service. This pageant was also presented at the Dranesville church, Dec. 20. Caroling by the Dranesville young people was on Dec. 21 and the Oakton group went caroling on Dec. 23. The Boy Scouts, sponsored by our church, repaired toys at Christmas time. Our young people sponsored our New Year's Eve watch night services. Student recognition Sunday was held on Jan. 2 with students conducting the worship service. A number of our members are attending the Christian school in our nation's capital each Tuesday night. Our school of missions was held each Sunday night beginning on Jan. 16 and ending on Feb. 20. Our pastor and others attended the Spiritual Life Institute at Bridgewater College, Feb. 8-10.—Mrs. Joel A. Miller, Oakton, Va.

Northern Virginia

Harrisonburg—Eight youth from our church attended the National Youth Conference. We participated in the Share Our Surplus project. A series of Sunday evening sessions were conducted for Sunday-school teachers with Miss Nancy Flory, regional director of children's work, and Melton Wright, principal of one of our elementary schools, as leaders. Bro. James Renz of Elgin recently spoke in our church. The men of the church have trimmed the trees around the church and repaired and varnished chairs for the Sunday school. The men's work of the district held a special program in our church with R. E. Mohler as speaker. Stanley Wampler, district fieldman, was with us one Sunday morning. Our Boy Scout troop won three first place ribbons at the fall district camp. While our pastor was on a preaching mission, Donald Clague preached for us two Sunday mornings. Delegates to our district meeting were Mrs. W. S. Miller, H. E. Shull, Frank Coffman, Elmer Early and Elmer Roller. Bro. Hollen Helbert from our church will serve on the Standing Committee at Annual Conference. Union Thanksgiving services were held in our church with Rev. Richard Wentz of the Reformed church as speaker. One Sunday evening Lloyd Wakeman of Luray, Va., talked and showed pictures of his experience while in Greece for three years. One Sunday evening in December our CBYF group presented a radio program skit, Are We Taking the Christ Out of Christmas? The Sunday morning before Christmas our choir gave a special program in music. The play, The Tinker, was presented at the evening service. The children of the Sunday school were in charge of the service on Dec. 26.—Mrs. J. Elmer Roller, Harrisonburg, Va.

Second Virginia

Buena Vista—Christmas services were rendered by the children's department and by the young people and junior-high group. The young people and junior-high group recently had a skating party. The young people's district cabinet met with our group on Sunday evening, Jan. 16, for fellowship and discussion of the work. Mrs. Ernest Wampler of Bridgewater gave a message on missions at the women's Bible class meeting. At our fall cash rally day enough money was received to clear our congregation of its indebtedness on our recent remodeling and building program. The trustees and finance board of the church have recommended that a fund be started for a new parsonage. —Mrs. John F. Graham, Buena Vista, Va.

Summit—One Sunday Bro. Donald Clague of Bridgewater conducted an installation service for the newly elected and appointed church and Sunday-school officers and teachers. We have a 100% Messenger Club again this year. We had a covered dish supper on Thanksgiving evening. Following the supper Bro. Beverly Smith preached for us and he also brought the morning message on the following Sunday. Our Thanksgiving offering was used for our building fund. Bro. Ronnie Thompson, a student from Bridgewater College, will be with us one Sunday a month and Bro. Olin Landis will have charge of our service one Sunday a month until our pastor comes. Nettie Senger, a returned missionary to China, was recently with us. We have three heifers to ship overseas in the spring.—Mrs. C. Frank Craun, Bridgewater, Va.

Southern Virginia

Antioch, Fairview—Bro. E. F. Sherfy, our pastor, resigned, and at the council meeting in September when the new officers were elected, Bro. I. D. Hoy was elected to serve as our part-time pastor. Bro. Hoy held a week of revival meetings and three new members were received into our church. Several people from our church attended the November youth meeting at Laurel Branch. For our Christmas program, members of the church presented the play, A Bed of Hay.—Billie Hodges, Rocky Mount, Va.

Galax—Bro Everett Reed, whom we elected as our presiding elder, met in council with us on Jan. 8. Following the council meeting, installation services were held for our new deacons, Bro. Lanzy Mabe and Bro. Vance Richardson. The young people of our church have reorganized under the leadership of Sister Thelma Utt. They presented a special Christmas program on Dec. 23. The youth group has also been selling picture plates of our church for the building of Sunday-school rooms. Our pastor, Otte Utt, is about to complete the eighth year of weekly broadcasts from our local radio station. The Eastland Harmony quartet from Kingsport, Tenn., presented a special song service in our church, Dec. 11 and 12. Bro. J. B. Sessions held a revival in our church Jan. 1-5. He was accompanied by a group of singers, The Voice of the Hills from Fairmont, W. Va. Bro. E. C. Nunn of Draper and the Homeland Trio of Wytheville were in charge of our morning worship service on Jan. 9.—Mrs. R. R. Spears, Galax, Va.

Bernhard Plockhorst Three Lions

A Royal Diadem

IF JESUS' kingdom had been the kind of realm men wanted he might have worn a regal crown. But his kingdom, he told the Roman governor, was not of this world. Because it was the kingdom of God and not of men, its coming took men by surprise. Unable to accept him as Lord, they mocked his kingship, casting lots for his robe, forcing him to carry his own cross, crowning him with thorns. But their empires have crumbled, their temples have fallen, their kingdoms have come and gone—while the kingdom of heaven, his kingdom of righteousness and love, remains. His royal symbols are a basin and towel, a crown of thorns and a cross on a hill. Yet he reigns in the hearts of those who love him. "The head that once was crowned with thorns is crowned with glory now." . . . "Bring forth the royal diadem and crown him Lord of all."

Changes in Church Program

Having read the Brethren at Work and the Gospel Messenger for more than seventy years, served in the free ministry more than fifty years, the last four years attending the church services and reading the church papers, we notice many changes in the church program. Some changes were a decided spiritual advance for spiritual development of Christian character. The foreign mission work, the relief work for all classes of people, races and nationalities.

The supported full-time ministry is an advance if we do not misuse it and try to shift all responsibility to the ministry and the rest feel free of any responsibility.

The Church of the Brethren also became a member of the Council of Churches, which opened a new field for service but also increased our responsibility. When the Council of Churches asked the Brethren to unite with them for service, they said we need you as you have something we do not have that the world needs; they named peace and temperance. They said you have more than two hundred years of background teaching on peace and temperance; we are just beginning to see the need of it. Are we trying to teach the same spiritual truths we did before we joined with them?

The shifting of the population from rural farming communities to suburban industrial communities also brought a change to the church program. The suburbanites need the same gospel that the farmers needed. So we need to teach peace, temperance, simple life and freedom from sin as before. The industrial worker has more leisure time, working only forty or forty-eight hours a week, and faces more temptations to sin. Many of the programs over the radio and television, picture shows and others do not provide spiritual nourishment. Then the beer parlor, gambling den, dancing hall and some other places are dens of vice with no redeeming qualities about them.

We need to teach a full gospel, using the rites or ordinances as an outward or visible symbol of what the grace of God is doing in our heart or soul, teaching the spiritual life by word of mouth and by example in our everyday life.—H. H. Ritter, Albany, Oregon.

Gospel Messenger

A messenger of gospel love,
Comes weekly to our stand;
It tells us of the church we love,
A blessing to our land.

It speaks the message of God's love,
In this our age and day;
Interprets then to us God's will,
The rules we should obey.

It feeds our minds on purer thoughts,
The best that can be found;
Gives us an urge to better think,
And live on higher ground.

It points to us the joys of life,
That come through Christian ways,
Inspiring hope and grace and cheer,
Throughout our earthly days.

It points to us the city, God,
Where Christ and loved ones dwell,
Gives us a glimpse of future life,
And of its beauty tell.

Come then my friends, let's give to it,
The best we have in store;
And every time it weekly comes,
We'll love it more and more.

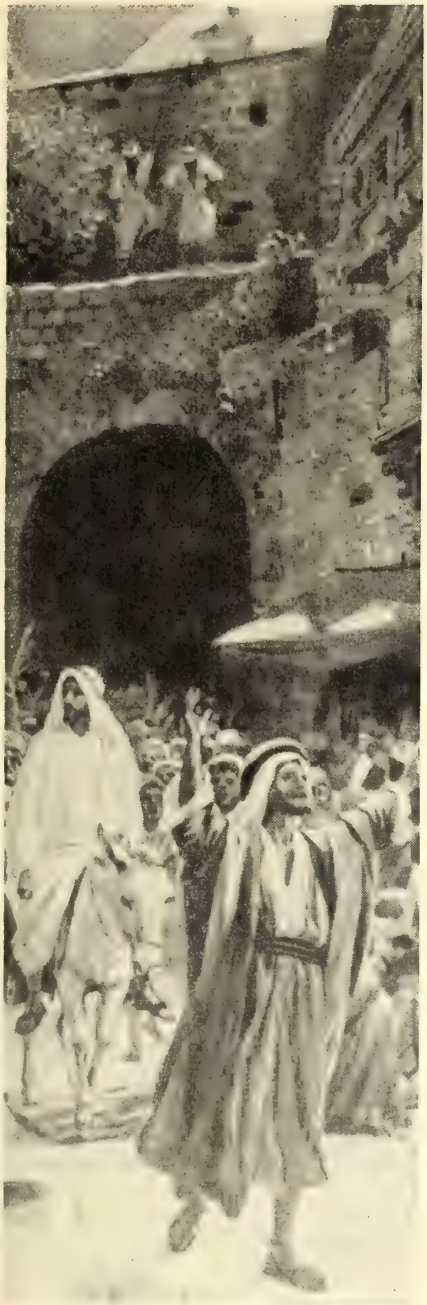
—Cyrus Funderburg,
Springfield, Ohio.

Spiritual Baptism

May I humbly reply to Mr. Edgar R. Longenecker, of Farrington, Mo., who wrote in the Readers Write column of the Messenger, Jan. 29, 1955, concerning being "Rooted in the True Gospel."

As a trine-immersed member of the Church of the Brethren, I would like very much to attempt an answer to this knotty problem of trine immersion and/or single immersion, sprinkling or no physical (i. e., water) baptism at all.

I feel reasonably certain that my trine immersion does not give me liberty to believe I am more spiritually saved than those who have come into full membership by letter from other communions that use the sprinkling method or some other form of baptism than the one used by the Church of the Brethren. It has been my experience that they often are more spiritually endowed with the Holy Ghost than many who have subscribed to all the tenets of the church.



It appears to me that there is much more evidence in the New

HIS PALMS AND OURS

Murray L. Wagner

Does Palm Sunday bring a note of desperation in your soul? Or is it just the Sunday before Easter to you?

William Hole Gramstorff Bros.

"And they brought the colt to Jesus, and threw their clothes on it; and he sat upon it. And many spread their clothes on the road, and others spread leafy branches which they had cut from the fields. And those who went before and those who followed cried out, "Hosanna! Blessed be he who comes in the name of the Lord! . . . Hosanna in the highest!"

Mark 11: 7-10

A FLOP-EARED donkey with a saddle of peasants' rags would make a pretty sorry looking throne. It was the one chosen of God, however, and was set far above anything military or ecclesiastical authorities have ever envisioned.

The crowds that followed waving palm branches were shouting their "Hosannas" at the top of their lungs and proclaiming the day of their dreams. Their deliverer had come; their prophets' words were fulfilled in their hearing.

Even yet multitudes go to their churches on this day and receive the "blessed palms" to be displayed in their homes, symbol of that first Palm Sunday and token of the church's blessing on the faithful.

But what did that "Hosanna" mean? What do palm branches and incense, new dresses and suits, fur pieces and Homburgs have to do with it? Well, the people were actually crying out, "For God's sake, save us! Only you can deliver us from our plight! Free us, give us hope and life! Unless you save us we perish."

Does Palm Sunday have a note of desperation in your soul? Or is it just the Sunday before Easter to you?

Consider the Palms of the Crowd

The people who had "heard him gladly" were greeting their Savior. Almost every town in the United States has a French war bride as a symbol of the love and joy of the French populace when the American troops marched into their cities. The pictures of the joy, the hysteria of the people and their hilarious, unreined welcome for the "Yanks" should give to us a sense of the enthusiasm of the people of Jerusalem when they beheld "their salvation drawing nigh."

But he came in such a strange manner, riding a borrowed donkey instead of a panoplied, prancing, military stallion. It was well that he was not like the Roman conqueror. The crowd appeared little impressed by his accoutrements; they saw him and they knew he was their king. Little did they know that soon he would be washing the feet of his disciples; soon he who urged no man to be "anxious about what you shall speak" would stand "like a sheep before her shearers" in the presence of high priest and governor, soldier's cloak and imperial crown of thorns mocking the son of God, the choice of men.

Let us not be too hasty in condemning the crowd for dropping their palms. It could well be that it was quite a different group of people who cried, "Crucify, Crucify!" Whatever the case, the populace had expected the wrong things of Jesus. They looked for a Savior who would satisfy their whims rather than their need, who would save them from their enemies rather than from their sins. They wanted a political expedient; he offered an eternal power—on a cross.

Pastor of the Troy church, Ohio; contributing editor of the Gospel Messenger

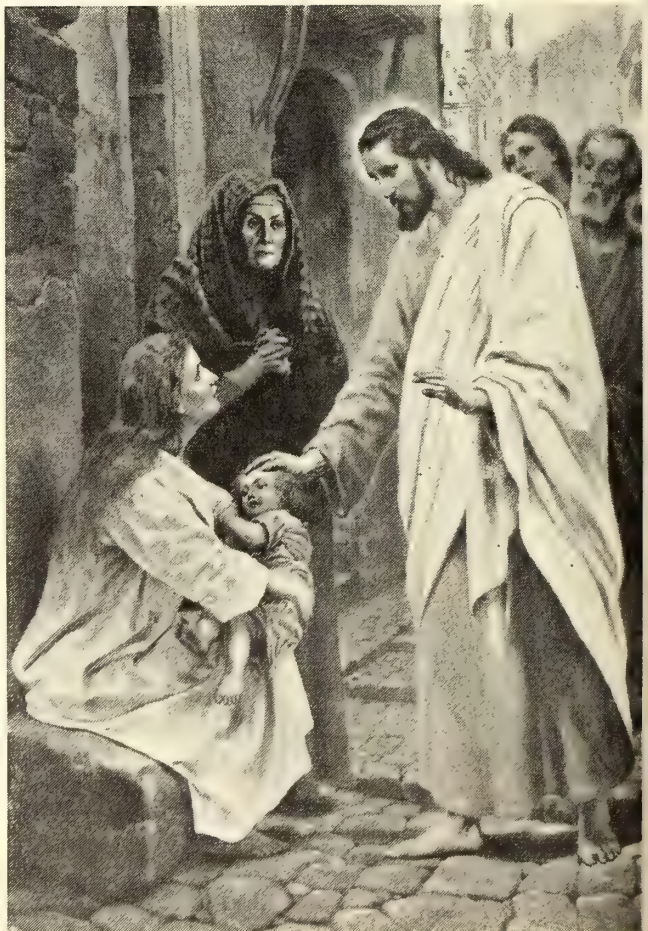
Consider the Palms Our Lord Offered

It would appear that Jesus was an exceedingly practical man. He had little concern for many things which occupy the modern—clothes, latest models, tomorrow's improvements, up-to-date were all items of little moment to one who dealt with eternity.

So he offered no decorative schemes or palm branches on the day of his triumphal entry. He offered the palms of his hands, hands of loving service. How shoddy would be the account if we would discover that he waved palm branches, that he participated in some champagne party or an all-night ball to celebrate his attainment! But see his palms that week—cleansing the temple, teaching there in sermon and parable, discussing the questions of the people, setting forth the matters of importance—not petty talk but the kingdom's work.

That was a week of prayer, a week of blessing, a week of teaching. Palms were held out in welcome to all who would come to him, palms stretched toward the skies in supplication. Palms that were already outstretched, waiting for the nails. And other hands—cruel ones—fastened those blessed palms stretched outward. And God changed the waters of suffering into the wine of life indeed, for all who accepted his forgiveness and came to those waiting arms.

Let's Take a Look at Our Palms



Some of us have done much ceremonial branch-waving. We have been impeccable in our washing of feet, our tithing, our church attendance, our committee meetings, our reading the Bible and the Gospel Messenger. Our palm branches are evident in our homes and about our Sunday clothes. We have been in good voice, shouting or singing, "Hosanna!" but have we really meant "Hosanna" (which, being interpreted means, "For God's sake, save us or we perish!")?

Some Christian palms are so full of work to do that they have laid aside the traditional palms. Those hands have the palms calloused with labor—the finger tips are soft and tender testifying to the fact that they have not been counting their money toward their bodies, for they have been extending their palms in Christian service. With their daily bread they have broken the very bread of life unto the needy. They have set themselves to the cleansing of the lepers, healing the sick, binding up broken hearts and, when and where they could not go, they sent others to proclaim the gospel to men of every land under the sun. Their palms extended the cup of blessing.

In this Holy Week let each of us extend clean palms and pure hearts in the spirit of the One with nail-pierced palms. Manicured hands and polished nails are not adequate, but hands that have been cleansed and calloused with prayer and with Christian stewardship, hands that need not be clenched and put under the Lord's table for hiding when our Father says, to us, "Son, are your hands washed?"

Let Palm Sunday find us with clean hands, by God's grace, extending to all the world—every nation, every color—not a handful of palm branches but the palms of our hands sharing with them the cup of blessing; teaching all men that beside that one riding the donkey there is no king and beside that one dying on the cross there is no life for anyone.

Raise your palms, brother, your King comes, and raise your voice in prayerful supplication, "Lord, save us, or we perish!"

On the day of his triumphal entry Jesus offered the palms of his hands, hands of service, healing, blessing and prayer

King for a Day

JESUS seemed to have his moment of triumph. His entrance into the city of Jerusalem had many of the marks of a victor's procession, even if it hardly measured up to the welcome given a conquering hero on his return to his home town. The crowds who hailed him did their best to acclaim him as king. The palm branches were meaningful and he must have seemed regal, even as he rode on a donkey. At least there was enough of a popular demonstration to disturb the Pharisees. They said, "The world has gone after him."

Yes, but the world is known for its fickleness. While Jesus accepted the multitude's praise and refused to rebuke his audience, remember that he also wept over the city and its blindness because it did not know the time of its visitation. People could accept him as king for a day, but they were not ready to see him crowned with thorns and crucified in a Roman execution.

As we draw nearer to the cross, in Jerusalem or in our own experience, the crowds thin out and only a few whose loyalty is lasting remain. It is still so hard to understand what kind of king he was—one who stooped to wash his disciples' feet, one who was more servant than ruler, one who gave far more than he ever asked, one who "emptied himself" in order to become the savior of the world. The cross is still a stumbling block to the wise men of our time and even to some Christians. When we learn how central it must be, not only as symbol but as experience, in the life of the church, we may be able to live by its power as well as under its shadow.—K.M.

The Free World

DO WE live in the free world? According to our most vocal spokesmen we not only live under a free government but we must be vigilant to guard the free world against any assault from the Communist world. In common parlance the free world is the orbit presumably limited in Europe by the iron curtain and in Asia by the bamboo curtain. On the other side there are satellite or "slave" states, the governments are totalitarian, and the masses of people do not know freedom as we enjoy it. For this reason our propaganda efforts are regarded as voices of freedom and we even dare to talk about a policy of liberation for subject peoples behind the iron curtain.

Even by our own standards of liberty—free elections, a free press, freedom of religion, civil rights—there are many noticeable areas in the free world that are not free. One need only look at Spain or Yugoslavia, one need only inquire about religious liberty in Latin America, to realize that outside the Communist orbit as well as within it there is often a deplorable lack of liberty. We are not as free as we think we are.

But probably more serious is our basic disregard of the New Testament idea of freedom. It is a dominant theme in the teaching of Jesus and in the writings of Paul. Jesus set forth his life's work in words borrowed from Isaiah: to set at liberty the oppressed and to proclaim "release to the captives." Paul makes it quite clear that the limits of freedom are never geographical. "Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is freedom."

The kind of slavery he was most concerned about was slavery to sin. His epistle to the Romans is emphatic in declaring that all have sinned, but just as surely as man's slavery to sin is universal, so is the salvation from that slavery available to every man regardless of his national or racial background. In fact, Paul's discussion of this important theme in the opening chapters of Romans progresses to the triumphant assertion that Christians can be "more than conquerors," that nothing in all creation, no principality or power, can separate us from the love of God in Christ Jesus.

Christians find their freedom in discovering that they are sons of God. The liberty they receive in Christ is of a different sort from political liberty. It can flourish even in the midst of oppression and servitude. No prison could restrain Paul and Silas from singing their songs of freedom. No dictator can take away the inner liberty of a child of God.

Such freedom as we find in Christ cannot be taken away from us by force. Neither can true liberty be granted to us by the exercise of violence. "Where the Spirit of the Lord is"—in a worshiping congregation in China as well as in a home in America—"there is liberty." And where the Spirit of the Lord is denied—in the sin-captured heart of a citizen of the free world as well as in the totalitarian schemes of dictators—there can be no freedom.

We are more likely to set men truly free when we understand the kind of liberty that Jesus and Paul offered to Christians, a freedom that dare not be used selfishly, lightly or indifferently, a freedom that sets men free from sin and death in order that they may live for God. His world is the free world.—K.M.

The CHURCH'S MINISTRY to parents of small children

Mary Venable

The church can give practical helps to parents as they seek the best ways to guide their young children and grow to be the parents they should be

Eva Luoma

THE church which cares about abundant life for everyone can wisely do no less than start where human need starts and where pliability is greatest. In other words, the church's concern for the individual begins with the day of his birth.

How may the church implement this concern? This involves much more than the question of whether the church shall, or shall not, have a nursery. We shall deal with this question in another issue. But first let us consider a more basic question. What can the church do to help meet the significant needs of the first year?

The most constructive answers will come as the church helps parents meet the never-to-be repeated opportunities of this part of life. For it is parents and home that have the key to the creative and far-reaching use of these early months and years.

Here are some of the ways the church can exercise a telling ministry, ways often overlooked, perhaps partly because some of them are so simple.

The fellowship of the church may be taken into the home. The alert nursery home visitor is one of the first callers, after the baby arrives. The minister is wise who enters wholeheartedly into the joys of the new parents. The nursery department may send an appropriate book as a gift. Families feel more than ever a part of the church fellowship because their joy is shared, and because their new member is immediately surrounded with the love and concern of the church family as well as the immediate family.

The child grows, and it is easy for the church to become absorbed in other things. But it will be wise, if through its nursery home visitor, its minister and others the church finds ways to make its interest felt and to keep the young family reminded of its care.

The church can give practical help to parents, as they seek the best ways of guiding their young children. Parents' groups may be set up for fellowship, study and discussion of those interests that the parents themselves express. Some churches have within their own membership persons who can qualify as leaders or resource people for such groups—trained preschool teachers, pediatricians, successful parents with some background of study in child development, a religious educator, and others. Most churches have access to such persons who can be brought in for limited periods of time.

Some churches have had success in setting up periodically a series of get-togethers for preschool parents. Such a series may run for six weekly sessions, then discontinue for a time. Other groups meet continually at regular intervals. Both mothers and fathers should be able to participate in at least some of these discussions. In some cases, a part of a church's service may be in helping to arrange for baby sitters. Here is a place where some of the older people of the church can sometimes make a much appreciated contribution.

At times small groups of mothers may gather, bringing their babies and sharing in the care of them, while an informal and constructive (if interrupted) discussion goes on under the leadership of one of their number, or the nursery home visitor, or someone brought in for the occasion.

Counseling can be made available to parents. This can be done in such a way that parents do not hesitate to seek help for everyday problems related to their children and family life. Most churches have members qualified by personality and experience to serve as understanding friends, with whom parents may talk over their concerns individually. A corps of visitors working in co-operation with the nursery home visitors can greatly strengthen the hand of the minister. Such visitors need training under the guidance of a qualified person, sometimes the minister. Such training should help them both to meet everyday challenges and to recognize problems on which they are not qualified to counsel, and which call for referral to a specialist.

Helpful reading matter may be provided through the church library. The church librarian should recommend resources which she feels would be useful to those who need special help as well as make resources available to those who already have a desire to use them.

The church can put parents in touch with community service. The whole outlook of one family was changed when a church worker was able to refer a two-year-old to a clinic which could help to meet some special emotional problems. The nursery home visitor, or some one person delegated by her, will find it rewarding to establish contacts with community service agencies, and to be thoroughly familiar with services which they provide.

The church can inspire parents to see the largeness of their privilege. It can help them see that not only the happiness and self-realization of their children depends largely upon them, but that they hold a part of the destiny of the world in their hands as they provide the conditions

Naomi Will H. K. Zeller, Jr. Jesse Ziegler

The Family Counselor welcomes letters of inquiry. They may be addressed: Family Life Department, General Brotherhood Board, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill.

Dear Counselor,

My husband and I have been married now for some months; and life is all that we expected it to be and more! We wonder now why we waited so long!

We are knowing each other better all the time and with this knowledge we do begin to see in each other little things we think we would like to change. So far we've been very honest and open about it; we joke about the little shortcomings that crop out. We don't quite know whether we want it to get beyond the joking stage. Do you think young married couples like us can try to improve each other without losing the mutual, deep love and respect we now have? Or would we do better to get ready to "bear and forbear"?

Newlyweds

Dear Friends,

It is generally considered best for a wife not to try to change her husband's ways or the husband his wife's, at least not by direct methods. By this I mean speaking to him about the habit or mannerism that bothers you, or you are afraid bothers the neighbors, almost everytime he does it, trying to make him feel ashamed of it. This method very often deteriorates into scolding and nagging. Your husband may be made to feel so uncomfortable and ashamed of this habit as a result of your words and attitude that he may discontinue it, but it may be at the cost of resentment toward you. This method is full of risks and may lead to unhappy results.

You might mention in a conversational, jovial way, as you have suggested, something you wish he would change, but don't keep talking about it. Go on treating him with love and respect and he may decide on his own initiative that he will remove the annoyance. He will not forget that you mentioned it and, if the change is brought about because he wants to do it, it will in all probability be lasting and without resentment.

I think there are some husbands and wives who agree that each will remind the other of shortcomings, and an integration of personalities takes place happily, but it must be a mutual agreement and kept on a plane of high mutual respect. Most of us will stretch higher in an atmosphere of appreciation than of disapproval.

Guard carefully against the feeling that you are all right, and it is just your husband who needs changing. Unless it is a damaging habit, I would recommend highly the "bear and forbear" attitude.

Naomi Will.

for their children's growth.

The church can do this through the importance in which it holds children's work in its own program, and through the direct help which it gives to parents in some of the ways mentioned above. The church can find ways to recognize the supreme importance of the parent's role in its services of worship, its printed communications, and many other parts of its program. It can help parents feel that the church is a partner and a rich resource as they work at their privileged task.

The nursery home visitor has been mentioned a number of times. It is she who can stimulate and administer the kind of ministry suggested in the various approaches outlined above. She may lead a local church in developing creative new ways of serving young children through their parents. She needs to be a member of the church's nursery department staff. She needs to work closely with the minister and the Board or Commission of Christian Education. Her opportunities are great enough to warrant her selection from among the most able and creative leadership the church can draw upon.

Not only, however, does the church need to serve young fathers and mothers in their role as parents. It needs to help them become the kind of people with whom it is good for a child to live. It needs to help them in their own right, as persons to grow towards their full stature.

To this and the church it needs to provide parents with the opportunity and stimulus to experience the Christian community, that is the church, and the resultant inspiration to the highest in Christian living. This means much more than the opportunity to participate in the Sunday morning worship service, as important as it is. Indeed, it is often necessary for a young couple to accept the fact that except on rare occasions, it will be impossible for them to attend church together during the first two or three years of their baby's life.

The alert church will find ways of making each so much a part of its ongoing life that no real break in the fellowship will occur during the years when the child is too young to come to church school. One way of doing this is to be sure that each parent is a contributing, valued member of some small, intimate group, class or circle within the larger fellowship of the church.

This article is part of one in a series planned by the Committee on Children's Work of the Division of Christian Education of the National Council of Churches. It is being used by several co-operating denominations.

I Quit the Liquor Business

David B. Pitler

FIFTEEN YEARS ago if anybody had said that I would be speaking on behalf of total abstinence, I would have laughed at the idea. In 1939 I was asked by the Allegheny County Retail Liquor Dealers' Association of Pennsylvania to help clean up the mess that existed in Allegheny County relating to the liquor traffic. There was indeed plenty of room for improvement. I accepted the assignment in good faith that the liquor dealers, in the interest of good business, really wanted conditions to be improved.

Code Didn't Work

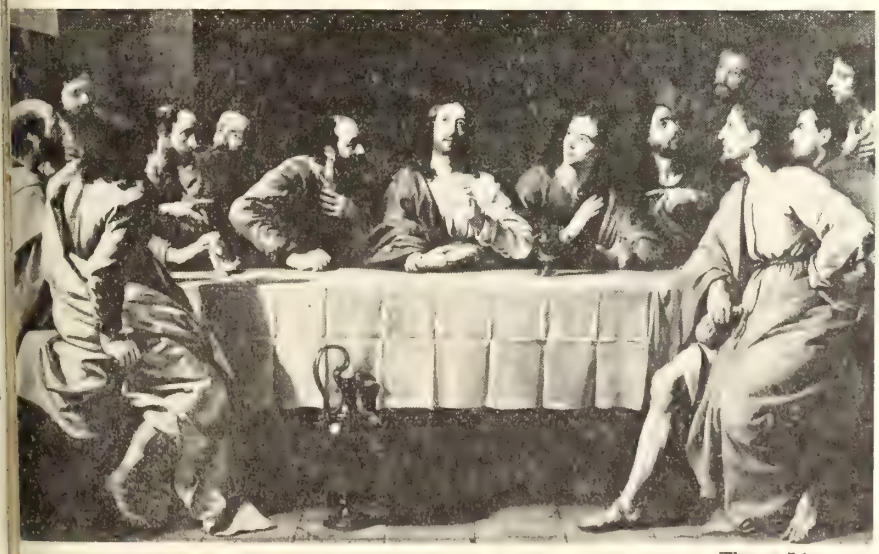
The first thing I did was to set up a code. This code included no Sunday sales, no sales after hours, no sales to minors and no sales to visibly intoxicated persons. In short, I merely put into the code the things that were already in the law. The code was hung on the back bar in all the establishments where all the customers could read it. But that was as far as it went. If anything, conditions got worse.

I was puzzled. These people said they wanted conditions to improve, but most of them were unwilling to do anything to help improve them if it hurt their profits.

The trouble seemed to be that there were no teeth to enforce the code. Neither I nor the Liquor Dealers' Association had any police powers. After a time I went to the brewers and they agreed to discontinue the beer supply of the worst offending licensees (this was in the early 1940's when beer was sharply rationed). The brewers actually did withhold beer from one or two licensees, but such a howl went up that the brewers discontinued the practice.

Profits Count

Things went on like this until 1945. It was plain that all the liquor dealers were after was to stay in business and amass profits. Even so, I could not get rid of the belief that somehow there was a way out through self-regulation; so in that year I accepted the same kind of assignment from the Retail Liquor Dealers' Association of Pennsylvania, who said that they wanted some good laws that would take care of the recognized evils.



Probably the worst violation then and now and everywhere is selling to minors. I introduced a bill to take care of this violation—a very simple provision. It is illegal in Pennsylvania to sell to anyone under twenty-one years old; so the bill I prepared merely provided that in case of doubt of the customer's age the seller should demand the customer's voter's registration card. This should cure the practice very simply, I thought. Furthermore, there was a provision absolving the liquor seller in case the customer used his brother's or father's or some other person's registration card. This became law and would have worked fine but nobody paid any attention to it and the condition is as bad or worse today than it was then.

This is just one of many violations, none of which showed improvement through attempted self-regulation. I finally decided that all the liquor dealers wanted out of me was a window dressing. They didn't want to make conditions better if that cut down profits. All they really wanted was to profit out of the business they were in.

Difference in Character

I did a lot of thinking about all this and the more I did the more concerned I became until I found it hard to live with myself.

There was one ray of hope in all of this black picture, though —I met some of the finest ministers and laymen at the legislature in Harrisburg I have ever known. These men were not interested in profits but in our youth, in good homes, clean living and good government. They did not try any deceptive glamour but told the truth. They were prompted by humanitarian considerations. It was their purpose to strengthen people where they were weak; while the liquor traffic sought to weaken and break down the strong. So in February 1952, my relations with the liquor dealers ceased and here I am, speaking for the temperance leagues of the country.

If there were no other consideration than this difference in motives it would be enough to make me become a dry. But there is much more to it than this. The Yale School of Alcohol Studies has estimated that there are 4,000,000 alcoholic and 3,000,000 problem drinkers in this country, a total of 7,000,000 people who have lost control of their drinking. In addition, there are about 30,000,000 other people —wives, husbands, fathers and mothers, sons and daughters— who are seriously and adversely affected.

Don't Be Careless

I think we pass over the word alcoholic too carelessly, without thinking about what alcoholics are like. I cannot find words to describe the misery, the heartache, the grief, the mental anguish, the suffering, the poverty and the complete frustration in an alcoholic's home. So if there were nothing to this problem but these 7,000,000 alcoholics and the other 30,000,000 victims it would be enough to make me become a dry.

But there is still more to the problem than this. The liquor traffic is not content with its present business and its profits but is determined to expand continually, so as to keep making more and more profits out of human misery. To this end it advertises on the printed page and over the radio and television, making salesrooms and saloons out of our living rooms, making it appear that all of the people who amount to anything socially or otherwise got that way by drinking liquor, tying it in with baseball, football and every other sport until the little children repeat and sing the ditties proclaiming the goodness of this and that beer.

But the group that the beer people are really after most are the young mothers in their naïve susceptibility. This is not a hit or miss campaign. The brewers overlook no opportunities. They get the best actresses, the most charming women, and train them well before putting them on the air.

Beer for Milk

The liquor trade knows "the hand that rocks the cradle rules the world." When the mothers stock their refrigerators with beer, what they try to teach their children about not drinking is of no avail.

So if there were nothing to this problem but advertising, in which the liquor traffic is spending $250,000,000 a year, while all of the temperance forces of the country have no more than $2,000,000 a year to spend in order to match them, this alone would be enough to make me become a dry.

What is the outlook and where must we turn for help?

The problem won't solve itself. Conditions are getting worse instead of better. There are more drinkers and more alcoholics every year.

The liquor people won't help. They are interested only in more profits through an expanded market by getting more people to drink more beer and liquor so nondrinkers will become drinkers and those who drink mildly will drink more.

Government Aid (?)

Will the government help? Only to the extent that the public demands it. My experience as a lobbyist has shown me that the rank-and-file legislators are not willing to take a stand on either side of a moral controversy except as public opinion requires.

This puts the job squarely up to the Christian church which has the courage, the faith and the spiritual power to perform this task.

What are the things the church needs to do? I mention five very briefly:

GOOD FRIDAY

G. WAYNE GLICK

Your hands outstretched in Roman crucifixion,
Your face, O Christ, rent by the mocking thorn,
Your mouth still speaks in gentle benediction,
And answers nothing to the bitter scorn.
You would not save yourself with worldly power,
You would not turn the stones to wanted bread,
You turned aside the sword in Olivet's hour,
You die alone; the chosen ones have fled.
And yet we say, knowing the sin that shatters,
The guilt that binds, the sundered bond of love,
The hell of brokenness where nothing matters,
The sterile heart that will not seek nor move,
Thy love, O Lord and Christ, on Calvary's rood
Declares the reign of God. This day is good.

1. Practice and teach total abstinence.

2. Vote for good candidates in every election and vote dry in local option elections.

3. Protest to legislators and congressmen about bad bills and ask them to support good ones; also protest to radio and television stations.

4. Support state and conference boards of temperence in the fine work these able, consecrated men are doing.

5. Pray—pray with sincerity, courage and devotion.

If the church sincerely adopts these methods there is good reason for believing that her efforts will be crowned with success.

This Is UMT

John H. Eberly

UNIVERSAL MILITARY TRAINING is the hottest issue in Washington today. Congress is afraid of it, but there are reports that 'the kids want it.'" THE KIDS WANT UMT is the title of the main article in This Week, a Sunday magazine section, appearing Jan. 16, 1955, in many of the bigger dailies of the country. The legislation referred to in this article is now before the country in House Bill 2967 introduced on Jan. 25 into the present session of Congress. It is currently referred to as the National Reserve Plan and UMT.

It provides a third choice for every able-bodied man. In addition to the choice of enlisting or being drafted into active service for two years or more, this proposal would offer him the choice of enlisting in military training for six months and the reserves for nine and one-half years. A boy enlisting or being drafted under the first two choices will continue in the reserves until he has completed a total military obligation of eight years. The six months' boy will serve in the reserves nine and one half years beyond his six months' training, making a total of ten years of military conscription for him.

While in the reserves all the boys must attend forty-eight sessions of training each year with an annual encampment of at least two weeks. Where and how these forty-eight home town training sessions are to be conducted or how to manage an eventual 3,000,000 citizen-reserve army in summer encampment are details better overlooked now by its supporters if the bill is to be passed.

The Christian is called upon to look at UMT again. To some it appears a threatening monster, to others enlightenment, sense and salvation; black to one, white to another; preserver of freedom, threat to freedom; will lead to war, the only way to keep the peace.

Pretty much the same arguments as formerly used for and against UMT can be heard now. The article referred to above, THE KIDS WANT UMT, is a good example of the unashamed logic used by proponents of the bill. It cannot be denied that a sizable group of persons believe our only safety depends on the greatest military machine and program possible and that any means to get this is justifiable. Anyone who thinks differently from this, they feel, is not realistic or is even a dangerous and subversive character.

The objection to UMT is pretty well summed up in this statement; "This proposal is before the American people not because of necessity, but because of an army dogma that everyone should be conscripted, whether or not needed and whether or not used. This is the essence of militarism, that every boy must be raised to be a soldier and that all of society must be subordinated to military security." This is quoted from The Facts About the Pentagon's New Conscription Plans, (available from Brethren Service Commission, 25c) in which the bill is analyzed in answers to forty-five key questions.

To have every boy of military qualifications tied up to the army for eight or ten years will pretty well insure a powerful military department, one that could easily replace so-called civilian government. The very purpose of the long reserve training program is to indoctrinate and to achieve the psychological securement of youth. There is no serious value placed on the technical training for highly technical modern warfare in the scattered training provided in this UMT bill. It is more of a pep session type of thing.

A great many other objections are being raised against UMT at this time. Its cost would be very great, not only to operate but in the loss to farm and industry to have these boys take off time for the training periods for upwards to ten years. Farm boys would be hit especially hard in needing to take off time for the forty-eight training sessions and in the rural areas considerable distances would often need to be covered to get to the nearest training center. The summer encampment comes in one of the farmer's busy times. Penalties are high if the boy fails to show up for his training.

But more than all, people begin to ask themselves if this is not the UMT we have always voted against in the United States. The obvious answer is yes. Traditionally the country has always been against it, and now it begins to appear more and more as if it is the tactics of the UMT proponents to badger the country into accepting it by sheer persistence.

UMT again puts before us two ways. Shall we commit our nation to a military regime and system more powerful than any ever seen in history or is there not so much evidence today to compel us to believe that this would turn out to be the most tragic mistake the United States could make? Many people feel that this is the time in history to encourage goodwill, the program of technical assistance and the strengthening of the United Nations rather than of increased military conscription. There are two ways—the people can decide which way to go. Congressmen will go in the direction to which the people give the greatest support.

Johnny Doe's Prayer for Peace

W. RUSSELL SHULL

Thou God of all the Johnny Does—
Creator of the common ones of every nation, everywhere—
To you I pray my prayer for peace:
With all my soul, I beg your eternal forgiveness because men have not found your way;
Blot out our sins against those dead brothers who will never speak again—
All those Japanese and Koreans and Russians and Chinese,
Those Germans, Frenchmen, Spaniards, Americans—
All those brothers across the earth
Who will never feel or dream or live again;
And stay our cruel, grasping hands,
That we may never kill our brothers—any more!

Great and forgiving God:
Don't let us destroy ourselves!
Keep us from blowing our planet to pieces!
This is our all-consuming prayer:
That you won't let us use some super H-bomb power
To put an end to this good earth, ahead of time!
We don't want some billions of people to miss the chance of living on this earth.
We want you to terminate this earthly venture when you are ready—
Not when we commit some colossal blunder.
Help us, O our God, to prevent this stupid, boomerang thing from ever falling!

To keep our striving men from ending this planet-plan too soon,
We pray that you will help us Johnny Does
To see to it that the leaders of our governments
Now stay together and talk things over,
And assure that no super-bomb shall ever blow this God-design to bits,
And that no one will e'er again kill off our common kin.
We pray that you will help us put our goodwill out in front—
That we may work with all our might and brain and soul
To make it completely impossible for anyone to bring this monstrous calamity upon our stumbling race.

Then help us, God,
By all your mighty wisdom and your power,
To keep on working day and night of every day
To build a peaceful world—
A world well ruled by goodness, forgiveness and brotherhood,
That it may become possible for this generation to have peace.
With all our soul
We desire—we work—we pray
For your great peace to fill our lives,
To come into every sector of the world's affairs,
And there abide.
Amen!

The Ruler Over the Nations

Fred W. Smith

THE Book of Daniel is without question one of the most remarkable books in the entire Old Testament. Along with its vast apocalyptic visions and prophecies it is also rich in stories, incidents and figures of speech, making it one of the best known, most read and most quoted portions of Scripture. Everyone knows the stories of the lion's den and the fiery furnace, and the figures of the handwriting on the wall, being weighed in the balances and the image with the feet of clay have become integral parts of modern language.

But above and beyond its literary or prophetic force and quality Daniel is also a book of wisdom, revealing to us that its author understood a number of important facts and relationships that are not always recognized here in the twentieth century even by outstanding Christian leaders.

For example there is the story of the conversion and enlightenment of Nebuchadnezzar, the great conqueror and king of Babylon. This story is told in three different parts which indicate the progress of this king's understanding and insight into God's relationship to the affairs of men and of nations.

First, there was the incident of Nebuchadnezzar's dream of the great metal image with the weak feet of iron mingled with clay, the interpretation of which God revealed to him through Daniel. Then Daniel was highly honored and his God was officially recognized to be a great God of gods, Lord of kings and a revealer of secret things.

The second step in Nebuchadnezzar's religious education came when through divine protection Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego were able to return unharmed out of the great fiery furnace, nothing about their persons having been touched by the fierce flames but the bonds in which they had been trussed. Thereupon God was officially recognized as a powerful deliverer who was not to be spoken against throughout the whole length and breadth of the Babylonian empire.

The third step in Nebuchadnezzar's enlightenment is the one that should be of far the most interest and significance to us now. By means of his experience not only the religious but also the political insight of this great world ruler and statesman advanced to a point seldom approached even today, for he was forced to recognize that after everything had been said and done, behind all the sham and beneath all the conflict and deception of political intrigues, it is really God who rules over the earth, setting up and putting down the nations according to his will and placing over them even the basest of men.

This is not a conclusion that can be arrived at easily by the simple application of logic. Rather it is an insight purchased dearly with blood, sweat and tears. Nebuchadnezzar first had to be driven from his high office to live for a year like an animal before he could come by it. "For with pain that cannot forget," wrote Aeschylus, "but which even in our sleep falls drop by drop upon the heart, comes wisdom to us by the awful grace of God."

Today America, and the whole world, faces a future that might well be more forbidding and fraught with pain, terror and destruction than that ever before faced by any men in all previous history. Weapons are now being manufactured which can destroy millions of lives at one blast and against which there is no defense. It seems hardly necessary to wonder if any government in order to gain military or political advantages would use atomic weapons on defenseless populations. We ourselves have already done so and are even now continually preparing to do so upon a moment's notice.

Yet against these horrible devices of human cruelty and transgression there is still a defense. And that defense is an insight similar to that which finally came to King Nebuchadnezzar: that after all it is the most high God that overrules the nations. If so be there should be wars and rumors of wars together with such suffering as has never before been, so that men's hearts fail them for fear of the things that are happening, or even if the whole earth itself were to be vaporized in one tremendous holocaust, these things cannot possibly or under any circumstances come about accidentally or aside from the divine permission and providence. Indeed, they may already have been essentially forseen by wise and holy men who lived even thousands of years ago.

In view, therefore, of the great fact of God's omnipotence, which every tongue must finally acknowledge and before which every knee must bow, we modern men would do well to stand more in awe of God than of our national and political enemies, and to put out trust in salvation instead of in our own devises.

HOW MUCH DOES THE UN COST?

Maxine Harrison

Enemies of the United Nations often cite the great expense of the world organization, while its defenders are often at a loss for precise and detailed figures. Miss Harrison, Worldover Press correspondent, has made a firsthand study at UN headquarters, consulting with experts.

WHAT is the actual cost of the United Nations? On what basis should the cost be calculated?

By far the largest part of the money spent through UN agencies comes from voluntary contributions. Special projects, such as famine in India, are the sort of things for which Congress would have appropriated funds if there had been no UN to take over in its place. Many of the specialized agencies, such as the Universal Postal Union and the International Labor Organization, were operating and spending their budgets before the UN came into existence. Strictly speaking, therefore, they should not be included in the burden of expense about which people complain in reference to the world organization.

The actual cost brought upon us by the UN, to all intents and purposes, should be confined to the business of running it, the wages of the staff, the buildings in New York City, the International Court of Justice at The Hague, the administrative program of Technical Assistance, the Geneva quarters and so on.

These expenses have been estimated by the Secretary-General for 1954 at $41,067,110, of which the United States now pays one third, about thirteen million dollars—or, roughly calculated, about 8½ cents per person. This year's budget includes, as it has every year, the upkeep of all UN buildings and amortization of the debt incurred for their construction.

Is the cost of the UN increasing year by year? The figures for the last few years indicate a short-cut to the answer. In 1951, the expenditures were $43,800,000; in 1952, $42,940,000; in 1953, still less—$40,725,282. Over that last figure, 1954 estimates have risen a very little, but the estimates do not reach the cost during 1952. For the specialized agencies (which are separately governed bodies, with separate budgets of their own), the total expenditures for the past two years were: $33,300,000 for 1952; and $34,200,000 for 1953. It is estimated that during 1954 the figure will reach $35,800,000.

Are there effective controls over expenditure in the UN? It would be hard to find a place or circumstance where money is spent under more controls.

Early each year the Secretary-General makes his budgetary estimate. This goes to an advisory committee of nine experts sent from different UN countries. This committee of experts spends two months examining the next year's budget and summarizes its findings in a report. The report and the Secretary-General's estimated budget are then gone over by the treasury officials of all member countries.

Expenditures, after approval of the budget, are strictly regulated and a special auditing group keeps perpetual watch over the accounts, with an outside auditor examining the proceeds once a year.

The scale of assessments for each member nation is recommended by a special committee for approval by the General Assembly. The Assembly, last year, approved a ceiling of 33⅓ per cent for the largest contributor, the United States, whose assessment was thus cut down from a previous 39 per cent. To make up for this loss in income, the apportionment for some of the other countries was changed. The assessment of the Soviet Union has now been raised to 14.15 per cent, or to 19.3 per cent for the total Soviet bloc (Byelorussia, Czechoslovakia, Poland, Ukraine, U.S.S.R.). The scale of assessment for the others of the Big Five is as follows: United Kingdom, 9.8 per cent; France, 5.75 per cent; and Nationalist China, 5.62 per cent.

Are the assessments paid promptly? There are no arrears, at least, in payments for 1951. For 1952, however, only 95.6 per cent of the apportionments have been paid, but the countries in arrears are not many—Bolivia, China, Paraguay and Uruguay. For last year, the receipts amount to 92.14 per cent of the total, not a bad showing.

The above schedule of UN costs is not a complete picture from the American point of view. Almost 100 per cent of the payroll is paid in New York City, which means in dollars. Foreign delegates coming here spend hundreds of thousands every year, also in dollars. It is obvious that the people of the United States get back a great deal of this.

The most substantial return to the U.S. treasury, however, is from the withholding tax which has recently been put into effect, whereby graduated amounts are withheld from the U.S. members of the UN staff for the U.S. income tax. No other country claims a tax from its nationals working in the secretariat. The amount estimated for 1954 which will be returned to the U.S. treasury as income tax is $1,800,000, which will bring the U.S. contribution down to a total of $11,965,290—or about 7.5 cents per capita.

Testament for the Spirit-baptism of one Jesus, a lay teacher of the Jews, than there is for the water or physical baptism of John the Baptist, also a lay teacher of the Jews.

It seems to me that John was baptizing with water because he was not the spiritual giant that Jesus became. There is of course the question of Jesus' own baptism at the hand of John. It seems evident that Jesus accepted the customs of the day and tried to live by the code John had been preaching. Thus Jesus accepted water baptism as a positive aspect of—and as a symbol of—devotion to God's will. Also Jesus in his early ministry probably followed the example of John and baptized with water (Matt. 4:12-13; Mark 1:14-15; John 3:22-23). This undoubtedly occurred in Jesus' Judean ministry that came in the time between the forty days in the wilderness and the beginning of his Galilean ministry (Mark 1:12-15; Matt. 5:25).

The contrast between the two baptisms, John's with water! and Jesus' with the Holy Spirit, receives final expression in the Book of Acts (Acts 11:16; 19:2-4) and is re-echoed throughout the book. Jesus of Nazareth, the Christ whom "God anointed with the Holy Spirit and power" (Acts 10:38) was the baptizer with the Spirit. Jesus was the medium through whom God, in this area of the world, chose to give grace to mankind.

The church of Jesus Christ, as it appears in the New Testament is essentially a Spirit-anointed group and conscious of a heightened religious experience, a new quality of life, communicated through Jesus. This goes back to the initial experience of Spirit baptism through faith in the teachings of Jesus (2 Cor. 12: 21f.).

It is interesting to note that after the death of John the Baptist Jesus was never, to my knowledge, known to use water baptism again. He was coming into his own as a lay teacher and discarded the old water system for one more in tune with the will of God. We find John using the old Jewish custom and Jesus going a step further and preaching and practicing Spirit baptism.

The point is this, not that the Church of the Brethren should give up trine immersion, but that the right emphasis should be, and is in some areas, placed upon all baptism. The emphasis in my mind should be on spiritual baptism as over against all the hullabaloo about some who wish to remove any kind of baptism at all.—Edwin L. Chrisman, La Verne, Calif.

Only One True Church? Roy Addison Kale. Vantage Press, 1954. 102 pages. $2.50.

This book is a historical study of the exclusive claims of the Roman Catholic Church based upon the assumption that any church outside the jurisdiction of Rome is outside the church of Christ and is therefore not valid. It raises such questions as the following: Did Christ appoint Peter a pope? Did Peter know he was a pope? Did Paul know Peter was a pope? Did any writer of the New Testament consider Peter a pope? Did the apostolic fathers, who wrote in the first century after the deaths of Peter and Paul, know that Peter was a pope and that the Bishop of Rome was infallible? Did the church fathers, who wrote during the next three centuries, hold these views? What did Irenaeus, Cyprian, Ambrose, Jerome and Augustine think about the unique authority of the Bishop of Rome? How did the Bishop of Rome become a pope in the modern sense of the term?

In this convenient little book, you will find the answers to these questions well documented from historical sources. The Roman Catholic Church seems determined to win control of America. It is pressing its exclusive claims through Knights of Columbus advertisements, evangelistic campaigns designed to win Protestants, invitations to Protestants to attend inquiry classes and extreme pressure upon the non-Catholic in every interfaith marriage. Many Protestants are becoming confused and some are mislead. It is high time that Protestant be able to refute the exclusive claims of the Roman Catholic Church.

The author is not mean, but gracious, in spirit and invites Roman Catholics, Protestants and Eastern Orthodox Christians to search for a way of co-operation upon the basis of the New Testament and the first five centuries of the Christian church. Competent scholars should collaborate in joint study of the New Testament and church history to find areas of Christian co-operation that would enable Christianity to meet the pressing needs of our day.—C. Ernest Davis.

Children of Divorce. J. Louise Despert. Doubleday, 1953. 282 pages. $3.50.

This book is written primarily for parents facing divorce in understanding and helping their children through this difficult experience. It is written by a child psychiatrist in simple language, abounding in concrete and practical suggestions for answering children's questions and preparing them for the future.

The author's attitude is that divorce is neither good nor bad, but a hard fact of modern life. "Emotional divorce," or constant unhappiness in the home, is the real danger to children. Legal divorce is better than "staying together for the good of the child" when this means subjecting children to years of bickering and hatred. Everything should be done through wise counselors to bring love to the home, but when parents can not love each other, this book shows that with concern and effort they can show continuing love to their children before, during and after the break up of the family. This book will be of interest to ministers, lawyers, counselors, friends and all who are helping families survive the divorce experience. It is a book that can be profitably placed in the hands of the parents themselves. There is an entire section on how lawyers, judges and courts can better serve families facing divorce. It is a book unique in its field, and brings objectivity, wisdom and hope to a difficult problem.—Paul Bowman, Jr.

KINGDOM GLEANINGS

Reading church will broadcast its morning services each Sunday in May. The station is WHUM and the time is 11:00 to 12:00 o'clock.

William Beery, well-known hymn writer and musician, will again celebrate his birthday by singing over WLS on April 8. The program is scheduled for 12:30 to 1:00 C.S.T. Bro. Beery will observe his 103rd birthday.

Henry C. Eller, the executive secretary of First Virginia, was in charge of the cornerstone laying at the Saunders Grove church, Va., not Ora DeLauter as was stated in the article which appeared recently in the Gospel Messenger.

The Conference Resolutions Committee welcomes suggestions and guidance from individuals and groups within the church. The committee is making preliminary study as to what should be included in the resolutions this year. Will you write your suggestions to a member of the Resolutions Committee: D. W. Resolution on the Militarization of the United States

Since its inception nearly 250 years ago, the Church of the Brethren has repeatedly expressed its belief that war is contrary to the will of God and that the ways of military conscription, competitive armament and military force lead only to retaliation and to increasingly destructive wars. We believe that the world now approaches a point which makes possible the total destruction of humanity.

In the light of our faith and of the possibilities of total destruction, we believe that any conscriptive measures or compulsory national reserve and/or training plans such as those presently before the Congress imperil the United States and the world in the long run rather than help us.

We therefore urge our legislators and executives instead of augmenting the techniques of military force and threat to undertake to further in the world a feeling of brotherhood, co-operation and goodwill. This we believe can be done through such techniques as a free movement of peoples in student, industrial, professional and farmer exchanges, through continued mutual aid, through a freer exchange of goods and services among all peoples and by the strengthening and extension of the nonmilitary and conciliatory services of the United States.

We urge our government, our churchmen and our citizens to move urgently in these directions.

Board Meeting Report

All twenty-five members of the General Brotherhood Board were in attendance for sessions of the regular Board meetings held March 14-17 at Elgin. Items on the agenda for the Board and its commissions centered on the establishing of budgets and programs for the next fiscal year.

The Board adopted a goal of $1,325,000 for the 1955-56 fiscal year which will be recommended to Annual Conference in June. Detailed budgets for each of the commissions and their various departments were reviewed and approved as a guide to the operation of Brotherhood activities during the fiscal year beginning Sept. 30.

The Board devoted considerable time to discussing the coming 250th anniversary of the church in 1958. Recommendations of the Board will come before Annual Conference as a response to the assignment for anniversary plans given to the Board at the Ocean Grove Conference. This report will appear soon in the Gospel Messenger under Conference reports.

At the time of the November Board meetings the Board had reviewed the need for more adequate facilities for headquarters offices and for a modern printing plant. On the basis of a thorough study made by industrial architects, the Board decided that it would be unwise to attempt to remodel the present Brethren Publishing House and voted to consider the securing of a possible location near Elgin for a new building. At the March meeting the Board gave its approval to an available location near Elgin which will provide for General Board offices and also for the printing facilities. The Board also appointed a building committee and approved proceeding by consulting with an architect.

The Board approved the recommendation that a sum of $3,000 be allocated for enlarging the peace section of the library of the World Council of Churches. This was regarded as an opportunity to encourage world Christian leaders to make a more thorough study of the Christian bases for peace.

Reports on an administrative deputation to Nigeria were made by Norman J. Baugher, general secretary, and Leland S. Brubaker, Foreign Mission secretary. During the commission meetings Dr. Vernon Kinzie reported on his trip to Ecuador and Harry K. Zeller, Jr., on his recent visit to Brethren Service projects in Europe. Dan West, who had been away on Sabbatical leave, also gave a report of his studies in leadership training at Harvard University and the University of Michigan and the University of Chicago.

Earl H. Kurtz, manager of the Brethren Publishing House, reported to the Board that a branch bookstore will be opened about April 1 in Johnstown, Pa. Ernest Statler will be in charge of the Johnstown store.

A deputation team composed of J. Henry Long, associate secretary of Foreign Missions, and Dr. Calvert N. Ellis, chairman of the Board, was named to make an administrative visit to Brethren missions in India during December and January. W. Harold Row was granted a leave of absence to tour the Far East, Near East and Europe on invitation of International Voluntary Services. This trip to be made later this year will also include administrative visits to Brethren Service projects overseas.

The Board studied the responsibilities carried at present in the Ministry and Home Missions office and decided that after Sept. 1 the executive secretary would carry general administrative duties giving special attentions to home mission work, rural and urban church counseling and the nonresident ministry. A second person in the commission office would be the director of ministry and evangelism who in addition to the work on evangelism would also be responsible for ministerial placement and counseling.

The Board approved the appointment of the following missionaries: Robert and Mary Louise Swank, both of Indiana, to serve us in Nigeria; and Glenn and Jean Shank, members of the Brethren church from Maryland, also to work in Nigeria. Both of these couples will sail in the fall of 1955.

It was decided also to appoint a nurse who would serve in Ecuador as a short-term worker during the furlough of Faye Koontz. The Board approved sending two I-W workers to Nigeria, one to serve as a primary teacher and one as a builder. A I-W worker will also be sent to the Landour Community hospital in India.

Also approved for I-W service in B.V.S. projects in Europe were LeRoy D. Burdick, Lorene A. Clark, Ray R. Grim, Robert D. Mendenhall, Dale L. Mankamyer and Rollin Jan Thompson. Approved for service in Puerto Rico were Anna Mae Swank, Dr. and Mrs. Jerry Church, and Dr. and Mrs. Marvin Snell.

Above is a sketch of the 500-foot cross that will be built on top of Bald Knob Mountain in Southern Illinois, near the center of America's population. The cross will contain houses of worship for the major Christian faiths. An elevator will provide access to the various levels where religious exhibits will be housed. Visible over a 7,500 square mile area, the cross will be illuminated at night

Baptist Church Windows to Honor Christian Leaders

Christian leaders of many denominations will be honored in stained-glass windows planned for the new Baptist church in Washington, D. C. Among the twenty great Christian leaders of the past who will be depicted are John Wesley, John Knox, George Fox, John Calvin, Martin Luther and Phillips Brooks.

St. Augustine, St. Francis of Assisi and St. Chrysostom have been chosen from the ranks of the early Christian church. Outstanding churchmen of curent times to be honored include Dr. Albert Schweitzer, Dr. Toyohiki Kagawa, and Dr. John R. Mott. Another series of windows in the church will pay tribute to outstanding Baptist leaders of history.

The main window of the church will depict the life of Christ, sixty-four incidents of his career having been selected for presentation. Dr. Edward Hughes Pruden, pastor of the First Baptist church, explained the church's decision to honor Christian leaders of all denominations by saying: "We are profoundly grateful for the privilege of our Baptist traditions and heritage, but we are equally grateful for the privilege of being a part of the church of Christ in all ages and among all nations."

East German Youth Oppose Rearmament

The growing opposition of youth in West Germany to rearmament has become well known. Social Democratic leader Erich Ollenhauer has described it as "a popular movement of a depth and a range such as the German nation has rarely embodied." Almost unknown is the degree to which youth in the Soviet Zone have reacted similarly.

The hostility of youth, supported by some churches and powerful elements in the trade unions, has caused such concern among the Communist rulers that a fresh drive has been launched to overcome youthful resistance. A statement in the pages of the magazine speaking for Communist German youth declares: "All pacifist trends that weaken the defensive preparedness of our republic must be counteracted."

Congregational Christians Join Heifer Project

The Congregational Christian service Committee has become a member agency of Heifer Project. The Service Committee is the relief and reconstruction agency for the Congregational Christian Churches of the United States. These churches have already participated in numerous livestock shipments during the last ten years.

Three representatives of the Congregational Christian Service Committee will meet officially with the Heifer Project Board. For 1955 the Heifer Project has set shipping goals of 1,200 cattle, 500 goats, 400 pigs, 100,000 chicks and 400 packages of honey bees for overseas shipment.

Church Leaders Warn of Increasing Migrant Problems

Leaders in religious and welfare service to migrant farm workers have warned that a larger influx of migrants than usual is expected in ten East Coast states this summer. Fewer jobs will be available and relief cases may increase sharply.

Increasing unemployment in industrial areas is forcing workers into farm labor. As a result, migrants are finding less work as they travel north, and because of fewer jobs in the border states where they spend the winter migrants are pushing north in increasing numbers.

Among new developments in migrant services are the forming of literacy classes for adult migrants, instruction in the new provisions of the Social Security law since agricultural workers who earn at least $100 from one employer are now covered by the law, and the formation of groups throughout the country to aid migrants.

Minister Sees "Confusion" in U.S. Foreign Policy

A Louisville minister characterized American foreign policy as "confusion" after spending a week in Washington at a seminar sponsored by the National Council of Churches. Ted Hightower, a Methodist minister, said that a dangerous follow-the-leader spirit has developed in the nation's capital. He said, "There are the seeds of fascism in this follow-the-leader attitude. If you look for a fuehrer —even if he's a good man—the first thing you know, someone else gets to be fuehrer. And we're faced at the present time with a threat that no one individual is going to stop."

Women's Clubs Disappointed Over Comic Book Cleanup

Members of women's clubs across the country are "extremely disappointed" over the ineffectiveness of the comic book publishing industry's self-censorship effort.

Mrs. Walter V. Magee, chairman of a national crusade against objectionable comic books, said, "A great surge of indignation against salacious reading matter for children is sweeping the country. We are determined to see it through. We can't be lulled into a false sense of security just because publishers print themselves a code. I've seen some of the comics that have been approved by the censors, and I say they showed only a very slight improvement if any."

Epworth Rectory to Become Methodist Home

Epworth Rectory, the boyhood home of John and Charles Wesley, has been purchased from Church of England authorities and will be converted into a home for aged Methodist ministers. The building, a seventeen-room house near Doncaster in Yorkshire, was built in 1709 to replace one destroyed by fire earlier the same year in which the founder of Methodism were born.

News Briefs

Plans for a nation-wide observance next Oct. 24 of the 10th anniversary of the establishment of the United Nations have been made by representatives of 17 religious organizations and 100 civic and patriotic groups. Preliminary plans were made for churches, civic clubs, veterans and other groups in communities across the country to participate in the observance.

Plans for the publication of a twelve-volume popular-priced Layman's Theological Library expounding Protestant Reformed doctrine in simple, understandable language for lay people have been announced by the Westminster Press. The books will be uniform in format, containing approximately ninety-six pages and will sell at about one dollar per copy.

Members of Christ's Ambassadors, youth organization of the Assemblies of God, will participate in a nation-wide mass reading aloud of the Book of Acts on April 24. Some 100,000 members of the youth group in 7,000 churches are expected to take part in the project for which 50,000 copies of the Book of Acts have been secured through the co-operation of the American Bible Society.

A 1955 budget of more than $5,800,000, the largest in the history of the Protestant Episcopal church, was adopted by its National Council. The largest items in the budget are $2,273,000 for the church's Overseas Department and $1,376,000 for its Home Department. The largest single allocation was $85,000 for the World Council of Churches' service to refugees and immigrants in Europe and Asia.

Norway, by delaying construction, is reducing its military expenditures from $134,680,000 to $126,000,000.

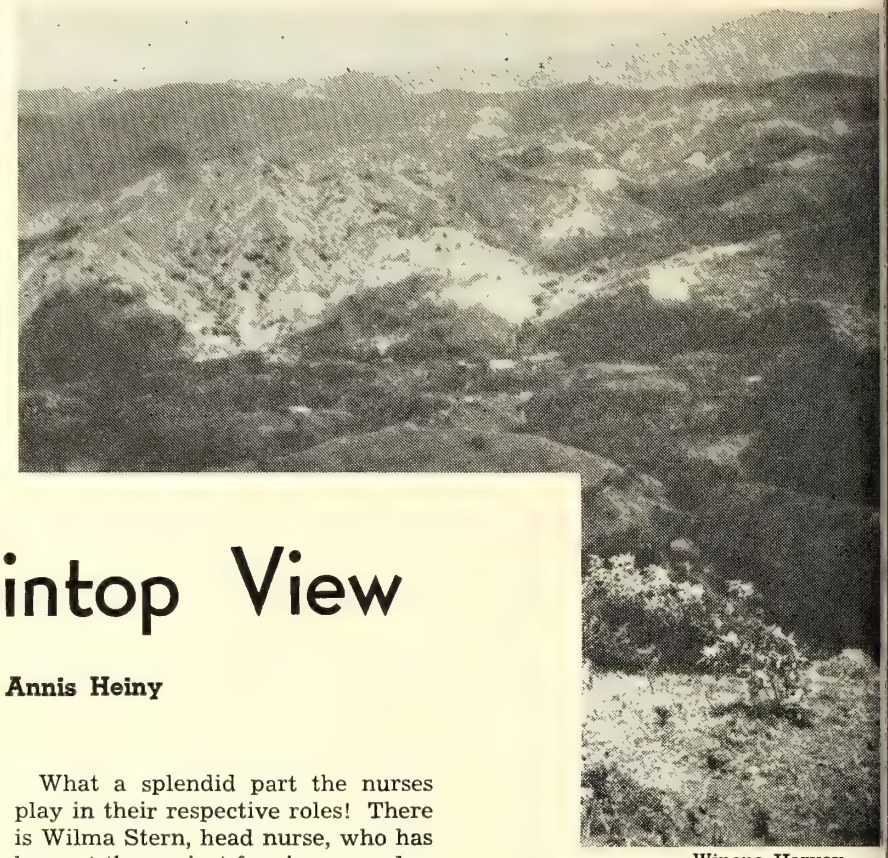
Gain With a Lateral Pass, an article which appeared in the Feb. 27, 1954, issue of the Gospel Messenger, received one of the twenty second-place awards given by Freedoms Foundations. Written by Frances Fenner, the article was a sequel to Freedom, the American Way of Life which won a second place in 1951. The award consists of $50 and an honor medal. There were 165,000 nominations in all of the categories

Quotes in the News



Dr. Paul Calvin Payne, chairman of the Division of Christian Education of the National Council of Churches: "We are at the moment of decision in history when we must decide whether we will pay for schools or for war. The question to be asked today is no longer whether Western society will survive, but will the human race survive."

Dr. Charles B. Templeton, evangelism secretary of the Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A.: "Too often the dollar sign in evangelism has been more obvious than the sign of the cross."

Justice William O. Douglas of the United States Supreme Court: "For many years America has been the symbol of tolerance for the people of the world. As a result, our ideas of equality and freedom are the most powerful in the world. The concept that one nation can be built out of many races, not by force as in Russia, but by the greater power of goodwill, is America's unique contribution to the international community."

Annis Heiny and Estelle Bonifield from the Indianapolis Church of the Brethren, Ind., spent their vacation in September 1954 as visitor-workers at the project in Castañer, Puerto Rico.

THE stately palms and coconut trees in the valley stretched their arms heavenward, towering above the hospital and Casa Grande, as I stood on the mountaintop overlooking the peaceful valley of Castañer. Amid the banana plants and coffee trees, my eyes wandered across the span to the mountains in either direction, beholding the beauty of nature's handiwork.

Mountaintop View

Annis Heiny

There is beauty on the mountain top, but the valley, too, is rich in splendor. As I gazed at the beauty around me, my eyes wandered to the project site and I thought of the many people who are working there each day. . . .

The Brethren Service project at Castañer is an interesting and busy place and a splendid program is being carried out. There is a fine fellowship among the workers, and friendliness as you enter into the work and worship of that large family. The project seemed well organized and functioned splendidly, as the workers endeavored to help the natives help themselves.

Rev. and Mrs. Eugene Carper, with their three young daughters arrived at the project the same day we arrived. They are the new administrators.

If we took a further look around, we would find Martha Cocanower in the business office, where she has worked for the past six years. (Martha has since returned to the U. S. at the end of her term.) Jerry Davis, the past acting administrator who has carried on so ably, is continuing in the educational department and conducts the Spanish classes for the workers.

What a splendid part the nurses play in their respective roles! There is Wilma Stern, head nurse, who has been at the project for six years also. Other nurses, Janet Miller and Nancy Schreiner left the project on Nov. 1, after serving one year in Brethren Volunteer Service. Phoebe Myers came during the summer to serve two years and Betty Hartley also arrived recently for a two-year term.

Also serving in the hospital are some nurses' aides trained by the nurses staff, plus some orderlies. Most of these are Puerto Rican young people, for whom this training proves quite valuable. It not only gives them a chance to work, but experience and training also which helps them raise the standards of living in their own family and in the homes they will establish some day. Mrs. Yvonne Belcher lends valuable service in the medical and pharmacy departments.

Dr. Harold Leppink takes care of the sick and needy of the village, when they walk down the mountainside to have medical care for themselves and children. Dr. and Mrs. Leppink and their little daughter reside in Casa Larga near the hospital. Casa Larga is also home to the Keiser family—Mr. and Mrs. Walter Keiser and three children. Mr. Keiser is farm manager and does a good job caring for the farm and animals. He is assisted in the farm work by Roland Harding and Wesley Whiteside, 1-W men. Not only do these men provide much food for the project table, but they help teach the Puerto Rican people new and better farming methods.

Dean Kagarise is store manager at the project and carries staple goods for the members of the project. Dr. Friesen and his family joined the ranks at Castañer this past summer. Dr. Friesen ministers to the dental needs of the community and has his office in Casa Grande near the business offices.

The two Wagoner families are kept busy with school work. The Don Wagoners both teach in the academy. Robert Wagoner is principal of the academy and also teacher, while Shirley teaches the three "R's" and Spanish to the project family children.

Lucille and Dwayne Schweppe are contributing in a splendid way to Castañer. They live in Cassa Grande, as do the nurses and office workers. Dwayne is in charge of material aid and spends much time in visitation among the mountain natives to learn of their needs. Lucille is in charge of the girls' club at the community center and teaches the native girls to sew. She is also preparing a library for the children. Carl Harner and Herman Belcher direct the boys' work in the community center, teach the native children and direct recreational activities.

Each evening following the supper hour, a devotional period is held in the social room of Casa Grande. The workers take part in this worship service to enrich their spiritual lives. On Wednesday evenings following the Spanish worship service, workers meet to practice hymns.

Dr. Homer Burke, for many years administrator of the project and now in private practice in the Castañer community, conducts services in Spanish each Sunday evening and Wednesday evening in the church. The workers hold English services preceding the church services each Sunday evening.

There are mountaintop views to be seen elsewhere too and work to be done in the valleys if one would but look for them. I am grateful for that mountaintop view of Castañer, but I'm glad I was able to spend so much time in the valley among the workers and residents. Down in the valley there is life—there is love—there is hope.

Here is the opportunity to use your vacation in service to others while enjoying the delightful climate of the mountains of Puerto Rico. Visitor-workers bring help and inspiration to our regular workers on project at Castañer. Especially needed are doctors, nurses, technicians and dental assistants. Fremont Center

John Post
Elgin, Illinois

FREMONT CENTER was organized in February 1943, when Lewis P. Andrews, who himself had no children but nevertheless held a very deep concern for the children of others, began to realize the need for a recreation center where these children could gather for a more creative type of recreation than many were otherwise receiving. He convinced other local parents of the need for such an organization and together they set up a program and adopted a constitution in which their purpose was stated thus:

"To build character and encourage good fellowship among Negro youth by supervising their recreation. In this endeavor, we seek to understand and follow Jesus that we may grow in the knowledge and love of God and share his love for all mankind."

Although this original constitution mentions Negro youth, the center is by no means prejudiced to any who wish to take advantage of its opportunities. We invite all children to come in and participate.

At that time there was no full-time director to take charge of the activities, but the responsibilities of supervision were shared by Mr. Andrews and those parents who were interested enough to volunteer a bit of their time. Another handicap was that there was no regular meeting place for their programs. Again the members volunteered—this time the use of their homes. Then in 1946 a small two-room building was purchased at 486 Fremont St. in Elgin. This allowed a little space for storing paints, toys, games, etc., which thus far had been a problem. This purchase likely would have been impossible except for the down payment which was made by Mr. Andrews himself.

In February 1951, the Church of the Brethren decided to lend a helping hand by furnishing the center with a full-time director. I am the second director to serve Fremont Center as a 1-W, but there were two others before us who volunteered their time through our Brethren Volunteer Service program. As Christian workers, we have tried to influence the children toward a more Christlike life through helpful, pleasant instruction as well as a close companionship with them. The children are always encouraged to share, to play together and to consider the other children.

Our activities here at Fremont are somewhat limited because of space, but the children are kept busy with a variety of crafts and are helped in playing new games and sometimes are taken on short hiking trips to keep up their interest. I have on two occasions taken a group of the boys into Chicago to see church league basketball games and last summer they had the opportunity of being taken to the Brookfield Zoo on a chartered bus. A recent activity here was the making of some homemade jigsaw puzzles which were constructed by pasting a picture on a piece of plywood and then sawing it into pieces on a small jigsaw. This was a very interesting pastime for most of the children.

Every Thursday afternoon there is a Bible class in which the children learn Bible verses and are told Bible stories on a flannelgraph by Mrs. Elden Wicklund of the Elgin Bible church. Occasionally there is a small treat waiting for the children when the class is over at 5:00. This class was started shortly after the opening of the center itself, and Mrs. Fern Finfrock was the teacher then. The children look forward to these classes and enjoy them very much. The usual attendance is around fifteen to eighteen children.

I am sure I speak for the past directors as well as for myself when I say we have tried our best to do what is right for the children and to be a Christian influence in their lives. We have appreciated the opportunities given us as 1-W's and BVS'ers to serve the Fremont Center as leaders of their recreation. May this continue as a good work of our church.

John Post is a 1-W serving his alternative service term.

Adventuring in Day Camping

H. Lawrence Rice

THERE is nothing magical about day camping. It is one phase of our program of Christian education, which, until this time, has received less attention than has our resident camp program. The results of a few experiments have indicated that in the coming years, the churches throughout America, including those of our own denomination, will more and more turn their attention to this excellent method of reaching a larger portion of children and young people.

We cannot simply take a camp leader, a few campers and a little bit of God's out-of-doors and putting these all together produce a day camp. There are needs of campers to be understood, basic principles expounded, aims and values derived and various plans laid down.

There are many reasons why day camps are essential. There is a crying need to strengthen our resident camp program. We have been growing, but we still are not reaching the majority of our young people and children. These boys and girls of ours need Christian guidance. They need an organized outdoor experience in group living conducted on a daytime basis. They need to be responsive to fun. They need to be reached on their own level of interests, and the day camp is one of the most effective arms of the church. It does not take the place of the vacation church school or of the resident camp. These supplement each other.

There is little reason to believe that we have reached the ultimate in our camping program. The value of any camp is the value which is derived in the life of a particular person. The values of group living in the out-of-doors have been demonstrated. A child experiences, maybe, for the first time the thrill of seeing God in nature and every part of the camp's program offers an opportunity for Christian living whether you are dealing with Bible truth, worship, recreation or outdoor cooking. These particular things can be significant experiences related to the life purpose of God.

Day camp is the place where actual experience comes first. It is here that our boys and girls understand how to share. This interplay of personalities can be felt more strongly in a day camp group which is essentially dependent upon helpfulness, understanding, consideration of the rights of others and the ability to work together for a common good. For the democratic process is a part of camp. The campers not only work together, but they help to plan together. The day camp is primarily a group wherein the leader becomes a functioning leader who guides and directs, but does not become an authority. He or she helps to instill within the mind of the child that he is a definite part of a group experience and that the success or the failure of the enterprise is dependent upon the camper.

Most of all, the aim and value of day camp is to develop a knowledge of and appreciation for God's out-of-doors. Emphasis on nature must be the core of the day camp program. All elements of the program must spring from it and lead back to it. A child who has been a resident of a city is limited in his knowledge of the natural world of God of which he now becomes a part. He will find "dynamic nature latent in every common thing"—that God does move in the wind and the trees, that God is a part of the birds and bees. This is man's birthright. This is a child's inheritance. The camp leader does more than simply introduce the child to nature; he introduces a child to the sense of bigness and the orderliness of God's universe in which we have been privileged to live.

Day camp provides for the development of new skills and interests. To be able to go into the woods to discover there the various plants and trees, to find the various colored flowers, to see every moving thing and then come back to a central meeting place to understand something about these things is bound to develop new interests. To be able to take the branches of a tree and to create on the spot hobbies and crafts develop new skills. To feel possibly for the first time that you are free and that you are next to God is a crying need and an accomplished realization in a day camp. Gone are the classrooms, gone are the times of formal education, gone are the books and into each life has come a dream—a dream made real by God's life touching the camper.

How to Plan for Day Camp

How then can we plan for this day camp? If the day camp is to fill the need of the camping experience for all of our children it must be a well-defined plan. And that plan must be soundly organized and workable over a period of time. It is not too soon to start planning in the fall of the year or in the dead of winter for the experiences which you are going to have in the summer. Here at the Ninth Street church (Roanoke, Va.,) we ran a day camp program for juniors and a program for junior highs last summer. We are now in the process of planning day camp experiences for our older primary children in addition to these other camps for next summer.

Certain practical considerations of the leadership, of finance and the choosing of a camp site must be solved early in the planning stage.

Let us note for a moment the director. He or she must be sincerely Christian. The director is largely responsible for setting the tone of the program. Therefore, he must have emotional maturity which will help him out of any trying situations which may develop. Common sense must be combined with good judgment, originality, initiative and resourcefulness. Most of all, he must have a sense of responsibility. Then, of course, one must have a good sense of humor, for sometimes the seamy side of life does stick out in the campers. In a day camp you do not get a selected group of campers as is often the case in a resident camp. A group of individuals from the community and from the life of the church is often a cross-section of humanity. The success of the camping experience is to keep a well-balanced disposition in the face of trying circumstances. The leader must also understand and appreciate the work of an individual.

H. Armstrong Roberts

Day camping can guide children into a new appreciation of nature

There should be a counselor and a co-counselor for every six to eight persons much on the plan of small group camping. It is practical to give more attention to individuals at day camp. It is not mass regimentation. The emphasis on the importance of a program is rapidly disappearing. In its place must come a counselor-camper relationship in which all persons grow in the likeness of God. Counselors and directors ought to be flexible enough to take care of the needs of the individual campers even though a program has been planned. This is effective learning. Short training courses for leaders given preferably in camp situations are the most fruitful means of building a good day camp program. After camping sessions are completed, there should be periods of evaluation in which the leaders take a total look at the camp.

The camp site should be chosen well in advance. One which has natural woodlands and streams is preferable. Provision should be made for an adequate water supply. If water is on the camp site, it should be tested for purity and if it is brought in in containers, these should be sanitary.

Shelter from the rain should always enter the planning. If a shelter is not located at the camp site, tarpaulins could be used, or even part of the daily schedule could be run at the church instead of at the camp site.

We have not charged the campers; the entire expense is borne by the educational program of the church. We feel that a charge would hinder some of the children of the neighborhood from participating in this camping program.

Fundamental Principles to Follow

There are several principles of the program which have been listed in the pamphlet "Day Camping," published by the National Recreation Association. These principles are as follows:

1. The program must be based primarily on real camp life.
2. The program must be related to the total life of the camper.
3. The program must have an unforced continuity so that one natural experience leads to another.
4. It should give the child an opportunity to participate in co-operative projects.
5. The program should develop qualities of character.
6. The program should offer fun and relaxation.
7. It should provide time for play.
8. The program should be flexible.
9. It should aim at giving primary consideration to the individual.

Suggested Schedule

The following day camp schedule was adopted for our use:

8:15 Leaders meet at the church for brief instruction, questions, etc.
9:00 All campers arrive at the church (provision for travel to and from the camp site provided by church).
9:30 Arrival at camp site (short orientation period).
10:00 Announcements and discussion of daily schedule.
10:15-12:00 Games and discovery period (a sample topic for the discovery period, What the Bible Says About Nature). This period also provides an opportunity for examination of the Christian principles for living. Plan the sessions in the out-of-doors. Remember that the counselor is not operating the program. The success of the discovery period will be determined by the increased ability of the camper to live the Christian life in a real life situation as found in the day camp.
12:00-12:30 Free time
12:30-1:30 Sack lunch
1:30-4:00 Crafts, nature study, special interest groups.

Day camps for younger children (below junior highs) should close with the four o'clock time. Campers should spend from six to eight hours per day at camp. Camps should be at least three days in length.

For the junior high groups, we also include an evening schedule which follows:

4:00-5:00 Planning for campfire
5:00-5:30 Free time
5:30-7:00 Cook out
7:00-8:30 Vesper and campfire (worship in this period is both spontaneous and planned).
8:30 Leave for home
9:00 Arrive at church

Few churches can afford to be without a well-developed day camp program. It will provide the participants with recreation and relaxation, the excitement of new experiences, a new knowledge from informality, a sense of security and well-being, an awareness of the self-sufficiency and resourcefulness that lives in every human being. We must never forget that off the anvil of experience comes the fine art of living. Try a day camp. Make it an active arm of your church.

Year 32 for the Brethren in Nigeria

H. Stover Kulp

What we do about the unmet needs of the Nigerian field may decide whether this baby remains a pagan, becomes a follower of Mohammed or a Christian leader

THE past year saw a high peak in the number of missionaries on our field—sixty-eight in all. Four of the number were from the Brethren church. Six young men were serving in alternative service. Thirty-one were in their first term of Nigerian service.

According to vocational assignments, the staff looked like this: doctors, 4; registered nurses, 11; educators, 22; builders and technicians, 4; administration and office work, 4; agriculturalists, 2; translators, 1; evangelists, 22.

The work of the twenty-two evangelists varies. It included the care of churches, preparation of Bible courses and Sunday-school lessons, supervision of adult literacy classes, women's work and the general extension of the church through ninety or more outstations. All of our missionaries, teachers, doctors, technicians, agriculturalists, take active part in the church program with some being missionary pastors and elders in charge of churches.

Stations and Outstations

There were nine stations occupied by the Brethren in 1954. Mubi was occupied for the first time. Buildings were begun for a new station at Yuba but no missionary was in residence there.

In more than one hundred other villages regularly supervised work is being carried on. In ten of these villages we have primary schools. In the others we have classes for religious instruction, which includes teaching in literacy, religion, health and rural improvement. In addition, there are scores of other hamlets where regular preaching services are conducted. It is these classes of religious instruction, with their adjoining preaching points, which represent the missionary outreach of the church in Nigeria. This work is nearly all supported and promoted by the indigenous church.

Week after week in 150 villages upwards of 10,000 people have been hearing the gospel. Three thousand were enrolled in classes of religious instruction. An additional two thousand were enrolled in primary schools in which Bible instruction was given daily. Several hundred men and women received training in fifty-five adult classes conducted throughout our mission area. Approximately two hundred Nigerian Christians do most of the teaching in this program.

The Church and Its Nigerian Leadership

There are now eleven organized churches with an active membership of 1,715. Three hundred forty-seven Nigerians were baptized in 1954. Our two largest congregations—Lassa and Garkida—are building new churches with local funds.

Plans are almost completed for the formation of a Council of Churches in Northern Nigeria of which the churches in our mission area will be a member body. The council will be called: The Council of Churches of Christ in the Sudan.

There is a greatly increased interest in Bible study and a desire for Bible training for teachers and leaders in the outvillages. The Church of the Brethren mission is taking part in the planning for a joint theological school which, it is hoped, when it opens in a year or two, will help solve this great need for leadership.

Medical work continues to grow. The demands on our medical personnel are more than they are able to meet. The expansion of the leprosy control work made possible by the introduction of the use of the sulfone drug in treatment is now going on rapidly. In 1954 over 850 patients were discharged as symptom free of leprosy. The total number of patients treated in our medical institutions for the year ending March 31, 1954, was over 16,000.

The Unmet Needs

1. Occupy the unoccupied areas of our field. As early as 1947 a new station was projected for the West Margi area. This area has more Mohammedanism than any other section of our field. If we are to get a new station here it should probably be done before the end of 1956, when national independence will likely strengthen opposition from the Moslem group. As the Chibuk church grows it is possible that indigenous workers from that church may be used to evangelize the area. A population of 40,000 to 50,000 would be served by this new station.

The Mubi district has a population of over 90,000, of whom 12,000 are in the town of Mubi. The remainder are tribal people, many of whom are very backward, living in mountain villages. The buildings for this new station are being erected now. The writer is currently in charge of the work with more help urgently needed.

In the past hundreds, perhaps thousands, of the people in this area have been treated in our Lassa hospital. This has given us the initiative. There is also a government center for training primary school teachers in Mubi. Approximately one fourth of the hundred students are Christians. We are asked to take care of the religious instruction of this group of Christians.

Many Christians have migrated to Mubi from points near and far. There is a fine spirit of unity and a desire to give a united Christian witness. But even with our advantage there are indications that the opportunity may be slipping from us. The Roman Catholics are opening a station in one of the nearby areas. The Moslems are the ruling class and are jealous for the advance of their own faith. All of this points up the urgency for pressing forward with a vigorous program for the area. Prospects are still bright but the time for action is NOW!

2. Complete the Waka Training Center. In 1950 we decided to open a training center at Waka. If there were any doubts at that time about the wisdom of that decision, events in the past few years have dispelled them.

Newly trained Christian leaders will be extremely vital for the future of the church and the country. We firmly believe that the future training of these leaders can be done only in such a center, which serves a large geographical territory. Here an adequate teaching staff can be gathered for concentrated leadership training.

The Waka staff at present consists of nine workers including a nurse and a builder. Our buildings are nearly complete. Two additional families will soon be needed to staff the center adequately.

3. Increased Biblical and theological training. The Waka Training Center will provide basic educational training for many leaders in Nigeria. From these leaders will emerge a number who should have an opportunity to go on to higher training in the Christian ministry. In view of the fact that much of the vast church expansion program is in charge of Nigerian leaders, many very young, who have not had more than an elementary education, this need for advanced ministerial training becomes very great. As we face the time when the African church may be required to carry on quite independently of any foreign aid in money or administration, this matter of leadership well grounded in Christian faith becomes a matter of supreme importance. Missionary staff and suitable quarters should be provided for this training.

4. Provide more primary schools. The great demand for education has reached our area of Nigeria. With the coming of schools there is the leaving of the old tribal religion. So before a child starts to school his parents know and he may know that he is not only choosing a school to go to but he is also choosing his future religion. In our area this presents a three-way choice—Mohammedanism, Roman Catholicism, and evangelical Christianity. Evangelical Christianity has the initiative for the present. Can we hold it?

An increasing number of trained Nigerian men and women are needed to take the responsibility of the administration of the church in that country

When we opened our new school year in January 1955, practically all of our schools had an increase in enrollment, amounting from thirty to forty per cent over last year. At a government school, about forty miles away, there was a good building, a teacher, supplies and equipment—but no pupils. The parents do not want their children to become Moslems.

This is happening all over our area. It seems to amount to almost a mandate to train the next generation in the Christian faith. We now have thirty junior primary schools. Can we open another twelve or more in the next two or three years?

We should also provide secondary primary schools in more villages. Senior primary schools provide education equivalent to grade eight in the States. To date we have had but one school going that far. We have plans for three more to open in 1955. The problem here again is lack of teachers. For the next several years, until Nigerian teachers are available, much of the teaching in the secondary primary schools will fall on the missionaries.

5. Provide adequate Christian literature. Literature in the Bura and Margi languages is very limited. The literate people in our area, whose numbers are rapidly increasing, can also read Hausa, the most widely used language in Northern Nigeria. An increasing amount of Christian literature in this language is becoming available. English is being used more and more.

There are several missions who operate bookshops in Nigeria. We are investigating the possibilities of inviting them to open reading rooms in our area to meet this need for the distribution of Christian literature.

6. Develop community life for rural villages. We now have missionary staff whose training has been specifically in rural life. The program they develop will need to tie in with public health and adult education. Such projects as malaria control, village water supplies, village planning need to be carried out. Work camps may be developed to aid in this program.

7. More rapid Nigerianization of administration. Our experience in having three African members on our education committee has proved very successful. We can now move in this area much more rapidly because an increasing number of trained men and women are now available to take on the responsibilities involved. The development of the Waka Training Center and more advanced training for ministers will greatly accelerate this trend.

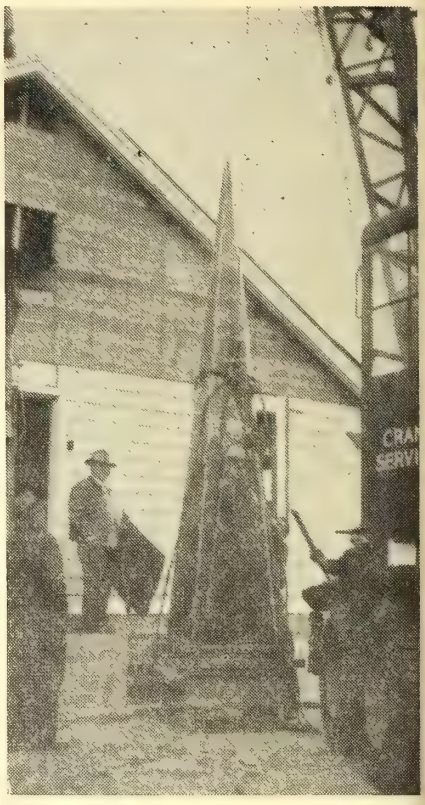
The Lengthening Shadow

Alonzo Carter
Norfolk, Virginia

FROM where I am sitting—looking out my back door I see a newly erected church steeple which has caused a great deal of community enthusiasm. It has given in its short life spiritual warmth and inner satisfaction to all who have beheld it, its symbolic heritage challenging those who look upon it. My eyes move down the building and find that it has taken definite shape though still under construction. I am aware that much has happened to make all this possible.

On July 6, 1952, Mrs. Ernest Payne and some members of her family visited the Newport News Church of the Brethren. When they were leaving they asked the pastor, Bro. L. W. Blackwell, this question. "When are you going to come over to Norfolk and do something for us Brethren people?" This proved to be a profitable verbal invitation because from it definite action soon began to take place.

Brother and Sister Blackwell went to Mrs. Payne's home on July 22, made plans for the announcement to be made through the Norfolk newspaper for all Brethren people to meet on Aug. 25, 1952 at Mr. Wilfred Payne's home on Twenty-seventh Street. Thirty-one including children were present at that meeting. The Sunday school was organized. Bro. Blair Myers offered to preach twice a month. The work went on in this manner in the home for some months. Then they decided to use the Seventh Day Advent church on Colley Avenue for services.



On June 5, 1953, Bro. Alonzo Carter and his wife moved to Norfolk. Bro. Carter helped Bro. Myers do the preaching.

On April 20, 1953, Bro. Blackwell came over to Norfolk to look for a church location. Two weeks were used looking for a site and visiting the church members. After investigating many places a desirable lot at 4710 Philpotts Road was chosen.

On March 11, 1953, three men from the Norfolk church extended Bro. Blackwell a call to come to Norfolk as their pastor. On Easter Sunday of 1953 he read his resignation to the Newport News congregation, effective the following September 1, after which he began the work in Norfolk, Va.

The first official council of the Norfolk church under the guidance of Bro. Lawrence Rice of Roanoke was held on Sept. 4, 1953. In this meeting the organization of the church was set up. A five-member steering committee was elected to guide the activities of the church for the coming year. They were as follows: Rev. S. B. Myers, chairman; Dr. Mark Myers; Bro. Wilfred Payne; Bro. H. C. Rickman; Bro. Alonzo Carter; Bro. Wilfred Payne served as Sunday-school superintendent, Bro. Eddie Rickman as secretary of the Sunday school, Mrs. Pauline Myers as secretary of the church, Bro. C. M. Key as Elder, and Alonzo Carter as church treasurer.

Our pastor has spent much time in planning the church building which is so badly needed. We have had wonderful co-operation from the District Board and the General Brotherhood Board. The latter has helped greatly with the work by approving the plans for the future and offering support for the building program. Bro. Forrest Groff, church building counselor for the Church of the Brethren, prepared the plans for the building.

Raising the spire of the church

On Aug. 15, 1954, the ground-breaking service was held at four o'clock in the afternoon. Thirty-five people attended. The foundation was started August 18, 1954. The building is 29 x 70 feet with an ell which includes a fellowship room and kitchen. The sanctuary seats 200. A large fellowship room, Sunday-school rooms, kitchen, nursery, choir room, and pastor's study are all part of the new structure. The windows were purchased by the members and friends. The church sanctuary will be beautiful with its plastered walls, indirect lighting, celotex ceiling; it will have baseboard radiation heat.

Our shadow of spiritual influence is steadily being lengthened by the steady construction of our new church. This has been made possible first by those who have had for many years a desire for a Brethren church in their community, those who have given to our local building fund the amount of $1,700. The district board loaned us $4,000 and the General Brotherhood Board loaned us $8,000. The men and women of the church have given of their time and effort and financial means to its program—in planning board meetings that would last until midnight, with hammer or saw or pick or shovel in the actual construction. Yes, we are building a church house. We are building our lives together for greater spiritual meaning. Our shadows are being lengthened day by day for the glory of the Lord.

Zone, was given by the Homebuilder. Our church celebrated home-coming day with Prof. Ammon Swope as speaker. Bro. Ross Noffsinger was with us for a preaching mission. The United Church Women of our township sponsored the World Community Day program at the Mt. Carmel E and R church. Clothing and bedding was brought to this meeting for overseas relief. Our aid society has been sponsoring programs, sewing, quilting and doing relief work. The men have been sponsoring a monthly work night at the church. The young people sent Christmas packages to our boys in service. The Sunday-school Christmas program included the play, Why The Chimes Rang, by the young people. Richard Foust, our B.V.S. worker in Europe for the past two years, has returned home and on Dec. 26 he showed pictures and told of his work. The film, Workers Together With God, was shown followed by a discussion on visitation evangelism. We now have thirty members actively engaged in this campaign. Our Sunday-school attendance and enrollment continue to grow. A school of missions was conducted each Sunday evening beginning Jan. 16 and ending Feb. 13. Four of our young people attended the youth seminar in Washington, D. C. A cross and offering plates have been presented to the church by Mr. and Mrs. Russell Fox in memory of her parents, Daniel and Laura Baker. A mimeograph machine has been given to the church by the family of Bro. Howard Stebbins as a memorial gift in honor of him.—Mrs. Roy Stebbins, Dayton, Ohio.

Oakland—We held a family night luncheon and program on Dec. 30. As a result of the evangelistic meetings by Bro. F. W. Bittinger of the Salem church nine new members were baptized into our church. We held our annual school of missions four Sunday evenings in January with the theme, The Mission of the Local Church. Programs for the school were the film, City Story, a talk by Probate Judge Williams of the county, talks by Bob Mikesell and Ralph Dull, both former B.V.S. workers, and the play, The Lost Church. The children's department made friendship kits to send to New Windsor for relief. We held our usual quarterly business meeting Jan. 6. At the women's work meeting in the evening of Jan. 13, the women brought wash cloths and soap for friendship kits, as well as material for making mittens. All of these articles were sent to New Windsor. On Feb. 6 Bro. R. H. Miller of Manchester College was our guest speaker.—Elvah E. Unger, Gettysburg, Ohio.

North Atlantic

Springfield—The women's work group sponsored a missionary program with Bro. Charles Bieber, missionary to Africa, showing slides of their work in Africa and also articles which were made by the African people. Bro. Luke Brandt of Quakertown was evangelist for our series of meetings. Seven persons were baptized into our church. Our elder, Ralph Frey, officiated at our love feast. Bro. Linford Rotenberger brought the message at the Homebuilders' class program on Nov 28. In the absence of our pastor on Dec. 5, Bro. Rotenberger was with us for both the morning and evening service. Bro. Norman Frederick was speaker for the young people's meeting on Dec. 12. The young people went caroling on Christmas Eve. The Jus Ultra class prepared fruit boxes for the sick and shut-ins and also filled hangs with articles for the women in Europe. The Sunday school gave a Christmas program on Dec. 26. Our Sunday school also had a mitten tree and a project of nickle yards.—Minerva Strauss, Ephrata, Pa.

Wilmington—Our new Sunday-school building and renovated church sanctuary were dedicated with Bro. Caleb Bucher of Lancaster, Pa., preaching the dedicatory sermon. Brother and Sister Donald Robinson assumed pastoral duties with the first of July. Installation services were conducted for the Robinsons by Bro. Howard Keiper and Bro. J. A. Robinson. Our pastor and five young people attended the National Youth Conference. Miss Betty Crouse entered B.V.S. for a year. Our pastor and four of our members attended the regional conference at Juniata College. Our choir is under the leadership of Bro. David Meyers and the junior choir is directed by Sister Robinson. The fall meeting of our district was held at our church. Bro. Paul Robinson took part in our Christmas Eve candlelight service. On New Year's Eve a family fellowship party was held followed by a worship service. On Sunday, Jan. 2, Bro. Norman F. Ford delivered the morning sermon. Five babies were consecrated recently. At present our pastor is conducting a church membership class for boys and girls and at the conclusion will instruct adults in church membership. Bro. Robinson edits our monthly church paper entitled Brethren Tidings. A boys' club has been organized as an outreach into the community.—Mrs. Clarence M. Wickersham, Newark, Del.

Juniata College conducted a week-end Bible institute. Our pastor, Bro. Luke D. Bowser, held evangelistic meetings, resulting in fifteen baptisms and three received into the church by letter. A number of our people attended the district meeting at Everett. Dr. and Mrs. Hershberger showed slides of their trip to the Holy Land. Charles Bieber, missionary to Africa, brought our message one Sunday morning. On Dec 12 the women's work organization had the evening of worship service showing the filmstrip, The Reading of Our Bibles. At the morning service on Dec. 19, the adult chorus presented the Christmas cantata, The Prince of Peace, under the direction of Garwood Holsinger. In the evening of the same day, the children presented their program. The young people went caroling and at the county jail they gave each inmate a gospel booklet. Our CBYF group was in charge of our watch night service with Bro. Glenn Kinsel as guest speaker. On Jan. 2 Mrs. Helena Kruger brought our message. The four churches of our community observed the Week of Prayer. Our third school of missions was held on Sunday evenings with the adult study book entitled Under Three Flags. One evening during the school we used the film, Village of the Poor, and at another time Sister Olive Widdowson, missionary to India, was with us. A number of our children's workers attended the meeting and banquet at the Martinsburg church. A district training school was held in our church from Feb. 7—March 21, with Bro. T. F. Henry, professor at Juniata College, as teacher.—Mary R. Lindenberger, McVeytown, Pa.

Western Pennsylvania

County Line—The ladies' Bible class volunteered to have church signs erected on the various roads leading to our church. Bro. E. M. Hertzler, pastor of the Connellsville church, conducted our revival meetings. As a result of the meetings, two were received into our church by baptism. We had an exchange of pulpit program on Thanksgiving Eve. At the close of the morning service following Thanksgiving, we held a fellowship dinner in the social room. Our children's Christmas program was held on Sunday, Dec. 19. The adult pageant and white gift service was held Sunday evening, Dec. 26. On New Year's Eve, Rev. Smith of the Indian Head Church of God showed pictures of his visit to the Holy Land during the past summer. The young people's class served refreshments following the candlelight service. Our ladies' aid has been quilting as well as helping with the building fund for doing some remodeling in our church. We also made friendship packets for overseas relief. During the month of February we sent seeds and clothing for relief. On Jan. 24 remodeling was begun on our church.—Olive Nedrow, Jones Mills, Pa.

Florida and Georgia

Winter Park—Brother and Sister Harper Will have completed a week of meetings in our church. Brother and Sister Byrd returned to the church the first of September from Canada, where they spent most of their leave of absence. One Sunday morning Bro. Warren Bowman and a group of students from Bridgewater College were in charge of our services. Our women co-operated with the United Council of Church Women in the Hallowe'en crusade for funds for milk for needy children of the world. Our group of children collected enough money to buy 1,806 glasses of milk for children. Our church has made plans for an extension program for more Sunday-school rooms. Bro. Forrest Groff met with us in December for consultation in this matter. We held Thanksgiving dinner at the church. The district young people had a two-day rally at our church over the New Year's which was followed by Bro. Perry Huffaker giving a program of song on Sunday evening. Our women entertained the Winter Park Council of Church Women at a supper, followed by a talk by Mrs. Paul Cason of the Home Mission Council. We welcome any of our tourist Brethren to stop with us for worship while in Florida.—Mrs. C. E. Bower, Winter Park, Fla.

Mardela

Peach Blossom—Bro. Harry Gardner of Troutville, Va., conducted a ten-day meeting at the Easton church. Ten persons were baptized as a result of these meetings. Bro. James Renz, national temperance director, met with us. The Fairview church has organized as a separate congregation. Elder Barry Fox has been retained as elder of the Easton and Fairview churches. The Easton pastoral board is trying to secure a full-time pastor for the Easton church. Bro. Fox resigned as pastor, having served the church for thirty-five years. The ladies' aid and Sunshine Sisters groups have been making quilts and comforters, collecting clothing for relief and contributing money for garden seeds for Europe. Several times during the past year, we have had temperance and missionary sermons and films in our church. The ladies' aid contributed to the Brotherhood Fund and to Bethany Hospital. Our church is buying a parsonage for the new pastor.—Mrs. Barry Fox, Easton, Md.

Northern Virginia

Pleasant View—Thanksgiving services were held in the Wakeman's Grove church with our church and the Walker's Chapel church participating. Our pastor, Bro. Stanley R. Wampler, delivered the message. A Christmas program was presented by the children and adult departments. The CBYF and the young married class went Christmas caroling and delivered fruit baskets to the sick in our community. A covered dish supper was held at the church in observance of Christmas family night. Our school of missions was held in January. This school shows a growing interest each year. Our ladies' aid group is making comforters for relief. This is the first year our church has been able to be a member of the 100% Messenger Club.—Mrs. Reva Good Bowman, Mt. Jackson, Va.

First West Virginia

Keyser—On Dec. 19 the young people's group and the junior high fellowship went caroling. The young people presented the play, Gifts in a Stable, on Dec. 26. The young people and junior high fellowship had a watch night party at the church on Dec. 31. These two groups had a Thanksgiving banquet and also a hayride to collect clothing for relief. A group from our church attended the young people's meeting at the Westernport church, Md. Our church was host to the district youth roundtable on Sunday, Jan. 9. Five of our young people and our pastor, Bro. Fred Bowman, visited with our congressmen in Washington, D. C., concerning the universal military training program. We had community evening Reformation Day services at our church. World Community Day services were also held in our church. We joined with other churches in the community in observing Week of Prayer services at the Lutheran church with Rev. Scrogum as guest minister. Our mission emphasis during January was centered on India. We closed our mission study with the film, Valley of the Sun. The young people were in charge of the evening service on Feb. 6 in observance of National Youth Week. We participated in a leadership training school which was sponsored by the churches of Keyser. For five Sunday evenings we devoted the services to peace. The builders' class of our church is sponsoring a Boy Scout troop. Pastor Bowman attended the Spiritual Life Institute at Bridgewater. Donald Judy and Richard Liller participated in the youth political seminar in Washington, D. C. and New York.—Tempest Gardner, Keyser, W. Va.

Morgantown—Our church is progressing under the leadership of our pastor, Bro. Everett G. Beckman. The men's group has organized and has been having regular monthly meetings. A bulletin board was made and placed on the outside of the church. Eleven new members have been added to our church. The parsonage debt has been paid in full and we have purchased a new organ. Bro. Charles Zunkel was with us one Sunday. The same day a tea was served at the parsonage which had been painted on the inside. The CBYF roundtable was held in our church. The women's work group held a temperance program in November, The women's group and the Queen Esther class made and delivered baskets of fruit to the shut-ins and older folks of the church.—Mrs. Otis Fike, Morgantown, W. Va.

Petersburg—Since our last report we have had a one-week series of meetings with Bro. Robert E. Houff of Bridgewater Va., as evangelist. Four were baptized and four received by letter into our church fellowship. We had a school of missions during the month of February Our church is planning to build some new Sunday-school rooms and to ge new pews for the church. The ladies' aid did relief sewing in January. As their February project, the ladies are sending seed packages to Europe.—Grace A Shreve, Petersburg, W. Va.

"GO QUICKLY AND TELL"

AT THE HEART of Easter is the fact of the resurrection of Jesus Christ. The fact is of such overwhelming importance for mankind that it becomes a message to be shared, a gospel to be preached, a word to be proclaimed.

Early on the first day of the week the faithful women who would not neglect Jesus in his death came to his tomb. They were loyal in their devotion to his dead body but hardly prepared to learn that death could not bind him, that the tomb could not hold him, that he was risen and he lives!

But scarcely had they heard when they were commissioned with a message, "Go quickly and tell." Tell the disciples who scattered when he was arrested. Tell Peter, who denied him. Tell first his followers—and then tell the world. Here is a great commission for every faithful woman, every doubtful man, every timid disciple. The message of Easter is not only a glorious hope to be cherished but a fact to be proclaimed. Jesus Christ lives.

READERS WRITE . . . to the editor

The Gospel Messenger welcomes letters commenting on editorials, articles and news. Letters should be brief and brotherly.

An Easter Greeting

Another winter has past and spring has returned to this part of the world once again. Around us on every side the flowers are coming out, trees are putting out their green leaves and all nature seems to be smiling at us. The birds too have returned to sing for us. They cause us to look up to God from whom comes all good things.

We read in the Word of God that Jesus said, "I am the resurrection and the life. He that cometh to me shall never die." Now we know that every time that we put a seed into the ground it must die before it can bring forth the beautiful flower or fruit that is desired, and we also know that Jesus himself died and arose from the dead that we may have eternal life and live with him for ever and ever. Jesus went through death for us that we need never die—our bodies die, but our souls never die; the soul is the seed of life put into our bodies by God; when our bodies die, that is just the time we begin to live, if we love and serve the Lord.

Again we read in the Word of God, how Jesus went back to his heavenly Father to prepare a home for us. We can all walk and we can all see well in that wonderful land called heaven. Some who are handicapped like myself will run all over that wonderful land singing with all their might.

I hope that these words may be the means of bringing comfort and cheer into some lonely heart.—J. Allen Grater, Mexico, Ind.

Bro. Grater has been crippled in body, but certainly not in mind or spirit, throughout his lifetime. The above letter is his Easter greeting to his handicapped friends. Unable to use his hands, he typed the message by placing a stick in his mouth. Readers who would like to write him can do so at the above address. —Ed.

Narrow Thinking on Television

I have read letters to the editor for quite a while. I'm surprised at the narrow thinking, especially on the subject of television and theater.

I agree that there is a lot on television that needs to be cleaned up, but no one is compelled to sit and watch those types of programs. To choose the right programs all you need to do is flick the dial and you can find wonderful, clean stories, educational stories that by demonstration can open a whole new world to children and adults alike, that we never could have hoped to see before television, and more than any reading can because we are privileged to see history in the making.

I have derived religious help from This Is the Life, Cadle Tabernacle, Bishop Sheen, Five Minutes to Live By and all the wonderful religious programs on Sunday morning that bring the church to you when sickness keeps you home.

Instead of condemning a wonderful thing, why not write to the stations and complain about their programs to them? If you don't approve, you may turn your set off until a suitable program comes on.

I hate to see a thing torn down by people who don't even have a TV set, or haven't the will power to change the program.

As a young Christian mother of three children, I look for the good and believe the bad can be made better. — Mrs. Lois Ann Rinehart, Hagerstown, Ind.

Right Way or Best Way

Quoting from Readers Write, Messenger, March 5: "The Best Way Not the Easy Way." How true and how sad it is, Ellis G. Guthrie, that too often most of us take the easy way instead of the right way, or as you say the best way. Would you agree to use the way God taught us instead of the best way? I believe there is danger in using such terms as the best way. Too often it means my way. Who of us can say our way is the best way? I do not believe I will ever quite reach the perfection God would have me reach. I firmly believe it is his will and most necessary that I strive to get a little nearer that goal each day. To help meet that goal, I must share the thinking and experience of the rest of my brethren. Like you, Ellis Guthrie, many of us get so concerned and fearful that the trend of our church people appears to be away from God. Is it so important the way we do things? What does it profit any of us, if we did all the church customs that you term the right or best way, at love feast twice a year, at church on Sunday, etc., if we are not humble, do not serve our fellow men instead of our own selfish ends every day? It has been my experience that often we who must have things just so forget about them in our everyday work.—Carroll S. Rinehart, Westminster, Md.

The fact that God raised Jesus from the dead enables us to see life in its true perspective-- instead of disaster,

The Shining Possibilites of Life

John C. Middlekauff

DURING the months of the London "blitz," an English preacher found that he had to spend long hours each day in underground air raid shelters. And instead of doing nothing as so many people did, he began to translate the letters of Paul as he believed Paul would write them today. As a result, J. B. Phillips has given us a most stimulating version of the letters of the New Testament. I must confess that he has given me many, many new insights and helped me understand some of the difficult passages in the letters of Paul.

Sometime ago, while reading Paul's second letter to Timothy, I came across this great sentence: "For Christ has completely abolished death, and has now, through the gospel, opened to us men the shining possibilities of the life that is eternal."

Here is a message that our age needs to hear—for there are a great many people in our world who do not look on life as having shining possibilities. As they look at the world with its conflicts between the East and the West, between communism and democracy, and with the threat of atomic warfare hanging over humanity's head like the sword of Damocles, they see no shining possibilities but rather dark tragedy.

Now we Christians see the storm clouds on the horizon and we take a realistic view of the dangers that threaten civilization but we see all things through the eyes of our faith—a faith born in our hearts by the resurrection of Jesus Christ. The fact that God raised Jesus from the dead has opened our eyes so that we are enabled to see life in its true perspective and, being able to see things as they really are, we see, instead of disaster, the shining possibilities of life!

Life That Conquers Death

The first thing that makes the life in Christ such a shining possibility is the fact that it is a life that conquers death.

All of us know quite well that sooner or later death will claim us and these bodies of ours will return to the earth from which they were fashioned. No matter how wise we are or how rich or how healthy and strong, we know that death will strip us of all these things and we shall be forced to leave behind all the treasures of this world which we have so laboriously accumulated. Into all our families and our circles of friendship, death has come to rob us. John Knox of Scotland spoke an undeniable truth when, referring to death, he said to Mary of Lorraine that God sends messengers with whom no man is able to jest. Then along comes the gospel of Jesus Christ, not only with its cross but also its empty tomb and declares that "Christ has completely abolished death."

Now Paul was not trying to tell Timothy that people who accept Jesus Christ as Savior and Lord would never die—but he was saying that the resurrection of Jesus has destroyed death as one of man's greatest enemies. Death is no longer defeat; death is no longer to be feared. We shall all die, but in Christ we shall continue to live—and instead of being defeated, we shall find that death merely opens the door to victory and eternal life.

It is true that God has dropped a veil between this life and the life beyond the grave. But we know that Christ is there; we know that God is love; and we know we can put our entire confidence in his promise of everlasting life. John Baille tells the story of a dying man who was informed by his doctor, a devoted Christian, that the end was very near, and when he asked his doctor if he had any convictions as to what awaited him in the life beyond, the doctor paused while he found words to express his faith. But before he could speak, there was heard a scratching at the door and his answer was given him. "Do you hear that?" he asked the patient. "That is my dog. I left him downstairs, but he grew impatient and has come up and hears my voice. He has no notion what is inside that door, but he knows I am here. You do not know what lies beyond the door, but you know your Master is there."

Life That Conquers Sin

While Paul does not say it in so many words in our text, he said it in the verse just previous to this one and he implies it here, that the life which offers men such shining possibilities is a life that conquers sin. "He has rescued us from all that is really evil and called us to a life of holiness" (vs. 9).

When Paul penned that great chapter on the resurrection—1 Cor. 15—he concluded by exclaiming: " 'Death is swallowed up in victory.' 'O death, where is thy victory? O death, where is thy sting?' The sting of death is sin . . ."

Yes, sin is our great enemy. It is evil that disfigures our souls, blights our characters and alienates us from a loving, seeking God. Young people have a tendency to laugh at older people when they try to warn them of the awful power of sin to blight, disfigure and destroy. But any man who persists in the way of evil, sooner or later comes to the place where he frankly confesses that there is no power in all the universe so terrible as the power of sin. Oscar Wilde was one of the most gifted literary figures of the last century but he had little use for conventional moral standards. In 1895 he was imprisoned for two years because of sexual immorality. It was during this period that he wrote what one man has called the most terrible words in the English language. "The waters have gone over me, but out of the black depths I would cry to all these who have but set a foot on the perilous flood. Could a man look into my desolation and be made to understand what a dreary thing it is, to see destruction and have no power to stop it and yet to feel that all comes from himself, to perceive all goodness emptied out of him and yet not be able to forget a time when it was otherwise, could that young man feel the body of death out of which I cry with feebler and feebler outcry, it were enough to make him dash aside the most pressing and subtle temptation."

Sin has the power to kill our souls but, thank God, through the gospel of his Son, Jesus

Life Begins at Easter

Harold Wagner

IT HAS been said that the church goes into the tomb when Christ comes out. Why should this be? To be sure, the average pastor looks upon Easter as about the best season in the year to train children and adults in a membership class, to baptize these candidates into the fellowship of believers, to receive members by letter, and to preach to the largest congregation which he will face at any time during the church year.

Also, most churches look upon the Easter season as an opportunity to gather the fruits of stewardship and evangelism with only brief emphasis given to training and education.

Why should not the church capitalize on the high victories of the pre-Easter season and let the gains made before Easter serve as stepping-stones to greater enthusiasm and larger success after Easter? Why should the high peak of the church year be over when we come to Easter, the day of victory and triumph? Easter is "the glad day of Christianity" and should serve as a starting point for greater victories for Christ's church.

Let us not think of Easter as a day of climax. Should not Easter be the prelude so that life in its fullest and finest sense would really begin for the local church at Easter?

"Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven" (Matt. 5:16).

A Doctrine Set to Music

ONE OF the great masterpieces among religious music is the Messiah, an oratorio by G. F. Handel. Although it was composed in the short period of twenty-four days it is a monumental work that covers the whole life of Jesus, beginning with Old Testament prophecies of his coming, continuing with his nativity, his ministry and his passion and concluding with his resurrection and the assurance that he rules forever and ever.

In spite of its seriousness and length (the entire oratorio requires more than two hours listening time) this musical interpretation of the life of Jesus was almost immediately popular in Ireland and England, where it was first given. It continues to grow in popular acceptance as local community choruses as well as college choirs attempt to master its technical demands. A few of our districts now have choruses preparing for annual renditions of the Messiah.

Although an oratorio should never be confused with an opera, it may have its moments of drama. A composer like Handel will not hesitate to let his musical score set off the contrasts that are implicit in the scriptural text. Especially effective are the passages in the Messiah that picture the suffering of Jesus. Isaiah 53 supplies a goodly portion of the text to which Handel has set quite appropriate music.

But the composer has done well by more theological scriptures also. Paul's great discourse on the resurrection in 1 Cor. 15 supplies material for a soprano soloist, "Now is Christ risen"; for a duet between alto and tenor, "Death, where is thy sting?" and for a stirring bass solo, accompanied by trumpet, "The trumpet shall sound."

And there is a brief chorus that seems especially designed to set a great doctrine to music. In a minor key the chorus sings, softly and without accompaniment, "Since by man came death," only to follow with a thunderous contrast, with full orchestra and organ support, "By man came also the resurrection of the dead." Then the minor mood returns as again somberly the chorus sings, "For as in Adam all die" but the resolution of the sentence requires a blast of pealing, joyous singing, "Even so in Christ shall all be made alive!"

Paul could hardly ask for a better commentary on his resurrection message. Here are the dark shadows of Good Friday resolved into the eternal sunlight of Easter morning. Here is the Christian understanding of sin placed in perspective with the Christian assurance of victory over sin and death. No wonder the oratorio goes on to say: "Thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." He is the one who shall reign forever and ever.

This Easter season may give us the opportunity not only to listen to glorious music on the theme of the resurrection but to ask ourselves if such a victory over sin is evident in us. The resurrection is an event we sing about, but it must also be an experience we know at first hand. Just as we see so definitely how defeated we can be in the face of our own mistakes, we ought to find in the triumph of Christ that measure of grace that can bring victory into our own lives. Paul said to the Romans, "You also must consider yourselves dead to sin and alive to God in Christ Jesus."

Alive to God! Here is far more than the persistence of personality or intimations of immortality. Here is a radical change in the quality and purpose of life. To live no longer by force of habit or for selfish reasons, but to be alive and alert with a new awareness of God and one's brothers, a new vocation, a new step, a new vigor, a new spirit by which one can go forward walking "in newness of life."

It is thrilling to hear the most important truth in the world set to music. It is a hundred times more thrilling to see that truth come alive in a human soul that is "risen with Christ."—K.M.

In the Face of Christ

A NOTED Italian artist has made a clay model of what he thinks to be the authentic picture of the face of Christ. He used the outlined features that appear on a linen sheet now held in a cathedral and supposed to be the shroud in which the body of Jesus was wrapped following the crucifixion.

As pictures go this representation of the face of Jesus may rank with the best attempts to describe his likeness. But we are inclined to think it portrays only one person's vision and is still far from any true likeness of Christ.

But do we need to know exactly how he looked to his disciples and friends? Paul's dynamic witness to the power of Christ was based on an experience in which he saw the resurrected Christ, and Paul counts himself among those to whom his Lord appeared, though "as to one untimely born." Actually we need no portrait of Jesus, and certainly no marks on a shroud, to tell us that we may see "the glory of God in the face of Christ," though we walk by faith, not by sight. —K.M.

The Perfect Day

Ellis G. Guthrie

But the path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day" (Prov. 4:18)

IT HAS been over four hundred years since Sir Thomas More wrote Utopia. Since then the word utopia has come to mean an ideal existence or perfection. Today, after two world wars and amidst the fear and confusion of the cold war, we no longer have much faith in a time or place of an ideal existence. In fact, we are likely to tap our heads to describe the mental balance of one who offers a formula for the perfect life.

Knowing all of this I was somewhat taken aback when I discovered this dream of utopia in the pages of the Bible. This hope was put forth and written down hundreds of years before Sir Thomas More penned his dream. The wise men wrote in Prov. 4:18: "But the path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day." Here we have not only the hope for a perfect day but the formula whereby it may be attained.

Now while we do not accept, as a society, this dream of utopia we do hold to it as individuals. We dream of finding for ourselves the ideal life, or the perfect day as described in Proverbs. What guarantee can the Christian religion give us in our hope for the perfect day? Some experts have estimated a hundred years of conflict before we can envisage a world of peace. Indeed, it would appear that we have reached the time of which Jesus spoke: "And ye shall hear of wars and rumours of war: . . . For nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom: and there shall be famines, and pestilences, and earthquakes, in divers places. All these are the beginning of sorrows" (Matt. 24:6a-8).

Whether we are actually coming to this time or not matters little. A hundred years of unrest, of frustration and war will see all of us gone without having tasted of a perfect place or society or day, unless there is more of a spiritual interpretation than we have been wise enough to give. What light does the Word of God have for us?

First of all we need to realize that we are not promised the complete blessedness of the perfect day in our lifetime. This may seem harsh to us. It would seem that he who works hard in this life should enjoy the fruitage of his own labor. But it is not always so. Thousands of Europeans have had the fruitage of their labor taken from them. Fine substantial farms have been taken by the Communists and the former owners are living in poverty and disease in refugee camps. Professional men—doctors, lawyers, teachers—have been reduced to the same helpless, hopeless estate. Many of them must perish with their dreams of the perfect day that never came and with their memories of that near perfect day that is forever gone.

It would seem that God has been asleep or is indifferent to allow this to happen to any of his children. However, we must realize that God suffers with us in our losses. In one of the smaller churches of Italy there is a picture of the crucifixion in which the nails are driven through the hands and feet of Christ into the hands and feet of God who can be seen in the shadow back of the cross. This reminds us of the verse: ". . . God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself . . ." (2 Cor. 5:19).

As we have said the perfect day is not promised to us in this life. Also it is not synonymous with success in the business world or with money and possessions. Much that the world looks upon as a part of utopia is perishable. The perfect day is nonperishable. Whatever else it might be it is, at least partially, a mental attitude, a beautiful spirit, a conquering soul. Therefore, it is not necesary to accumulate possessions or to win esteem in the public eye in order to enter into the perfect day. Rather, it is necesary to be true to the call of God within us. So in perilous times such as this we need to say with the psalmist: "The Lord is my defense: and my God is the rock of my refuge" (Psa. 94:22).

We have intimated something as to when the perfect day might come and what it is. How do we enter into it? Our text charts the course for us: "But the path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day."

In a world of injustice and inequality the Christian is to be just in all of his dealings. The story of Shylock in Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice tells us that true justice is tempered with mercy. The whole story of redemption makes it clear that God has tempered eternal justice with mercy. Otherwise none of us could ever see eternal life. In the Lord's Prayer we pray: ". . . forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors" (Matt. 6:12). Jesus enlarges on this a little later by saying: "But if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your father forgive your trespasses" (Matt. 6:15). Justice and mercy cannot be separated. If we are to enter into the perfect day we must not take advantage of others and when others injure us our actions must be merciful.

There is another word that is indicated by the word just. That word is faith. The Apostle Paul wrote: "The just shall live by faith" (Gal. 3:11b). This is not faith in man primarily or in possessions or machines but in God, faith in the purpose and goal of history, a faith that the universe is basically friendly, a faith that God will bring order out of chaos, victory out of defeat, good out of evil.

He who has faith like this will live radiantly and victoriously no matter what the fortunes of his personal life are. Mable Dodge Holmes illustrates this with the following story. A certain student of human nature, visiting a prison one day, became very interested in an artist who was unjustly accused. He had a very sensitive face and appeared to have talent. His visitor found a soiled napkin and gave it to the artist, asking him to paint a picture on it. "Every day while the artist awaited his trial the visitor came to see how his picture grew. The napkin was nailed upon the wall, and every day the artist prayed, as he painted, 'Lord God help me to paint a picture of thee that shall win men to thee.' And every day the touch of the brush brought out more clearly the radiant face of Christ in a picture so beautiful that afterwards it was hung high in a cathedral. Yet before it was touched by the transforming genius of the artist it was only a soiled and wrinkled

ETERNAL LIFE--Longing

George A. Buttrick

Luoma

Springtime is not sign enough of the fulfillment of our longing for eternal life, for spring turns to winter

THERE is no doubt about the longing for eternal life. In Japan a young couple kneel at the graveside to pray to their ancestors. In India a thin corpse is carried to the Ganges, for if the ashes are scattered on the sacred stream the man may receive eternal life. In Egypt, tombs that were filled with food and clothing that the dead king might need in the next world, have a false door through which the soul or kar made its journeyings. In the U.S.A.? Skyscraper office-lights are left lighted so as to make an immense cross against the night. Corliss Lamont, having written a book to disprove the Christian hope, now edits an anthology of the noblest poems on immortality, his longing being still stronger than his arguments. There is no doubt about the longing.

What of the fulfillment? Only God can give that, for man is born to die and can no more escape death than he can escape gravitation. God must give the sign. Yet a sign would not be enough; God must break the prison wall of our mortality and show us a glimpse of another world or we cannot gladly believe. The sign of springtime is not enough; it turns to winter. The sign of our own longing is not enough; it could be like a dead child, beautiful but unutterably sad. Besides, every hope in us is beset by as strong a fear. This fear: suppose we are not worth saving: angels must be all out of patience with our present planet. This fear: suppose death is final, as final as it seems, the last breath being the last breath. Only God, from beyond our world, yet within our world, can give fulfillment to our longing. Otherwise we shall long and fear with wavering hearts.

"Blessed be God"; single out that word! That has the right sound. At least the man is looking in the right direction. "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ." The man is concentrating now on one fact: Jesus Christ. The mysteries and the merchandise, the prizes and the penalties are pushed aside as of no account. That could make sense. You and I would like to be judged by our best. We would like our neighbors to say of some good in us, "That shows his essential character." Perhaps we ought so to judge God—by Jesus Christ, if any man may dare to judge God. The best can explain the worst sometimes, as the miserliness of a French village mayor was explained when he willed all his money to build a viaduct to bring water where had long been drouth. So if Christ is taken as the best clue to God, what seems worst may be explained; pain may be needed discipline and evil could provide choice for the heroic will. But if evil be taken as clue, how can Christ ever be explained? So it makes sense to say, "The God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ."

People think the New Testament is a book of argument. They go to it for what they call "an interpretation of life." But it is not that kind of book. It and Fulfillment

"Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who according to his abundant mercy hath begotten us anew to a living hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, to an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you!" — 1 Peter 1:3-4.

does not offer a philosophy, still less bolster up a guess by a plausibility. It testifies to an unquenchable joy. The real answer to the idea that the resurrection story is illusion is this: the New Testament sets men free from illusion. Its writers were under the illusion that Calvary was the end and suddenly God showed them that it was not the end. One moment they said sadly: "We trusted this had been he who should have redeemed Israel." The next moment they cried aloud: "Blessed be God!" The change in them was so complete that they can describe it only as a new birth: "Begotten us anew into a living hope." So New Testament men cried when the great event lifted them from the bondage of earth and time. Why should we think them wrong and ourselves right when our poor wisdom has brought our planet to the verge of wretched destruction? If their hope is living, we can receive it. So look at it closely—with expectation.

"By the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead"; single out that word. The faith has so permeated our world, even for those who do not accept it, that it is hard for us to realize what a "blessed" revolution it brought. We see Good Friday and Easter Sunday as one event, but suppose Good Friday had never ended. Suppose every day to the end of time is Good Friday. Pain seems a senseless thing. Oscar Wilde once vowed there was enough misery in any London lane to prove that God is not good. Yet when Jesus rose nobody would have wished that he had died comfortably in his bed. Would anyone covet a sleek Christ with smooth hands and bland brow? No, he is nobler in his pain, which means that pain can be the road to nobleness. In Thailand I watched men melting silver in a tiny crucible, then shaping the molten silver into a bowl, then hammering it and hammering it until Thai figures appeared in relief, so that soon it was a thing of loveliness. Men can go through flame and hammering thus, and come from the ordeal wearing some image of Christ. This we know through the resurrection.

The resurection changed death into a "covered way to life." "It is so final," said a young husband of his wife's death. So it is, and in that onset every man is helpless. No easy word of easy comfort should be spoken. But Christ never was an easy word; he is a sure word. Some may ask if it is right to make him, one instance, into a universal faith. But why not? He is more than another instance. His truth is universal; his love joined him with all mankind. And an instance, whether one or many, is better than any argument. A fact is better than the largest web of supposition. An event is better than the most shining hope. The event happened; out of it was born, "begotten anew," both the New Testament and the church. Christ is the opening of the cave of mortality. Through him we catch a glimpse of a green land nourished by the "river of life." We cannot see much, but in him we see enough. We must live for a while in the shadows, not trampling on other people in the cave, not grubbing the walls for what we can find as if we would live here forever, but proving ourselves homelike here until the call comes to go home to that orchard country and its river.

OUR EMMAUS ROAD

ORA W. GARBER

For only two disciples of the Lord,
On that remote post-resurrection day,
Was it the privilege all might desire—
To walk with him along the Emmaus way.
And few disciples through the centuries
Have walked those miles in memory of him;
To most that glad experience with the Christ
Is but an oft-heard tale, at best but dim.

But the Emmaus road may be our lot
Wherever our accustomed paths may lead,
Wherever we can humbly walk with him
To meet with love some urgent human need.
In kindly ministry to those in pain,
In sharing someone's heavy, crushing load,
In helping other souls to know our Christ
We too may walk with him the Emmaus road.

Easter changed Good Friday into the road to nobleness, the "covered way to life"; the resurrection changed sin into pardon

The resurrection changed sin into pardon. Perhaps men would never have known death or never feared it, but for sin—and the awareness that sin is followed by judgment. Suppose Good Friday had been the end. The best would then have been victim of the worst; that would have been the verdict. For Pilate with his sneer, "What is truth?" and the soldiers with their wanton sadism against Jesus were empire at its worst. Annas and Caiaphas, sending Innocence to his death rather than risk an 'incident" or any threat to their temple office, were the religious community at its worst. The disciples of Jesus, vowing allegiance one moment and the next running from him at the danger point, were friendship at its treacherous worst. And the crowd, gaping at him as if at a dog fight and then going their indifferent way, was public life at its worst. If Calvary had been the end! But he met them on the road; "Blessed be God!" What other exclamation could any man make? You have read of people dying intentionally or unintentionally of carbon monoxide gas in a closed auto. Our planet would have been that car, a messy little vehicle in which people died from their own hateful breath. But God opened the door from the outside and let in the breeze and sunshine of his world—such sunshine that the Christ who on the cross prayed "Father, forgive them," is now forever at the right hand of the throne. "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ!"

But the story cannot end there or we shall be like people on the very edge of life, yet never stepping over into joy. So single out the other word: "An inheritance for you." An "inheritance"! We did not earn it. It is a legacy from God's goodness in Christ. None of us, not all of us together, could have contrived him who is God's sheer grace. But we can live on our unmerited fortune. Here is a living hope. It is not that poor thing called the "immortality of influence," for influence could not persist if the heart spring of it runs dry. It is not that poorer thing called the "immortality of the race." What does it matter that a figment called the race should continue if every beating life in it goes to the dust heap? That thin comfort never made any man exclaim, "Blessed be God!" No, a living hope—a hope that is life at fullness of joy and work and friendship, a hope so rich that it is a new birth.

This man tries to describe it, though his words fail. "An inheritance incorruptible." There is no smell of dead flowers. The orchard brings forth its fruit every month, says the Book. "An inheritance undefiled." There is no smirch of man's wickedness on it, for the cross gathers in the wickedness as the sky gathers in our chimney smoke. "An inheritance that fadeth not away." There is no wear and waste of time on it, for Christ rules the eternity that flings the shadow called time. Therefore, the saints have said: "Everything matters; nothing matters." Everything matters because everything gives a man a chance to bear witness to Christ; nothing matters because Christ has overcome the world. Therefore, a certain Duke of Hamilton, when death approached, called his younger brother to his bedside and said with a smile: "Soon you will be a duke, and I shall be—a king." That also is in the Book, part and parcel with this man's exclamation: "Jesus Christ, the first begotten of the dead, who loved us and washed us from our sins by his blood, and hath made us kings and priests unto God." This is the wonder of the Christian hope.

If you will believe it! The word means "trust"; if you will trust yourself to it. Where has your trust been placed? In the market? It is never sure. In health? It will go. In politics? It is the fitful trouble of fitful men. In human skill and goodness? The present world hardly justifies the faith. It should not be too hard to make a new affirmation: "I believe in Jesus Christ, living, dying, rising." Everything depends on what a man believes.

"An inheritance for you"; the word almost means "waiting through ages until you came." Dr. R. W. Dale was writing his Easter sermon and having a hard time when suddenly he said to himself: "Christ is risen!" You have sung it. Have you said it quietly: "Christ is risen. So Christ is here—with me, closer than my own thoughts"? Claim your inheritance! So believe. So pray—now. So live—always to him. "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who has given us new birth into new joy, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, unto an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you."

Christ, there is the shining possibility of life that conquers sin. If we will accept his Son, God will forgive our sins and by the power of the living Christ in our hearts, we may have the victory over temptation and be delivered from the enslaving chains of sin.

Life That Is Abundant

In the third place, I should like to suggest that the life that Christ gives to us in his gospel has the shining possibilities of the life that is abundant.

Jesus said that he came "that they may have life, and have it abundantly" (John 10:10). So many of us are like one of the characters in the novel, The Parasite. This girl, the daughter of very talented parents, says: "We're living little lives today, doing little things, thinking little thoughts, while all of the time we know we can do more than we are doing. We are living on the brilliancy of the past. In other words, we are parasites, just parasites on yesterday. Life must be more than that."

Not only must life be more than that but the glorious truth of the gospel is: it can be more than that. Most of us know from observation and from experience that when men give themselves unreservedly to Jesus Christ, there flows into life a power that enables men to reach undreamed heights. Francis of Asissi began his life as the dissipated son of a wealthy man and probably would never have been known outside of his home town—and then only during his lifetime—had he not given himself to Christ and allowed Christ to fill his life with an abundance that is a blessing even in our day. Or take Florence Nightingale. Destined to be a social butterfly, Miss Nightingale gave herself to Christ in Christian service and her name and influence make our world a better place in which to live. What Christ did for Francis of Asissi and for Florence Nightingale, he can do for us, for the life he offers to men through his gospel has the shining possibilities of the life that is abundant.

Life That Is Eternal

Last of all, through the gospel there has been "opened to us men the shining possibilities of the life that is eternal."

The joyous message of Easter is that Christ has conquered sin and the grave and that by faith in him, we may come into possession of the life that is eternal. Jesus comes to us today with the glad message that your life and mine are but a preparation for immortality. These bodies of ours are but tenant houses and some day we shall move from them into the "Father's house" with its "many rooms." For Jesus has promised that God has for us a lovelier lodging, a statelier mansion; there is a garden waiting for us that is fairer than anything we have ever seen on earth, more beautiful than anything we have ever seen on earth, more beautiful than anything we have seen in our dreams. There is a life waiting for us that is free from all the limitations of earth and in which we shall have nobler work to do than anything we have done here on the earth. This is the great message of Easter—"the shining possibilities of the life that is eternal."

And what do we have to do to gain possession of this life with all its possibilities? Simply accept the gift of God by believing in his son, who was crucified on Good Friday for the sins of the world and raised on Easter to conquer death and to place the seal of God's approval upon all his gracious promises.

napkin, tossed aside into a dusty corner."

This story has two meanings for us as we travel toward the perfect day: (1) No matter how low it seems that someone may have sunk we must not scorn or despise him. We are all made in the image of God. (2) No matter how fate seems to have stacked the cards against us we must still use our talents in working for God. We must never give up. The psalmist says: "Thy word have I hid in mine heart, that I might not sin against thee" (Psa. 119:11).

In our mistakes, frustrations and reverses we need to look forward to a more perfect setting for life. We are right in looking to the Christian religion for help to attain our desire. But it is not easy to keep up our faith in a world so full of tension and danger. Our faith is deeply tried when we see what has happened to literally millions of people who have lost their homes and jobs in the aftermath of war. But it is here that we need to

WHY I AM A CHRISTIAN

Jacob F. Replogle

IF SOMEONE stopped you on the street and asked you the question, "Why are you a Christian?" what would you answer? Some would say that the only reason I am a Christian is that my parents were. There is a lot of truth in that. None of us quite appreciate the influence of godly fathers and mothers. For that reason we adults should be sure of the patterns we set.

Others will say I am a Christian because of my environment. Because I was born of a certain race, amid a Christian culture, therefore, I naturally became a Christian. All of us can thank God for our homes and land and culture. But are they the only and basic reasons?

Many of us had the experience of accepting Christ as a young child. We sort of grew up in the Christian church. But we have come, later in life, to question and weigh our Christian faith. A greater and more mature reason for our faith developed or else we gave it up entirely.

In the days of Paul, people were religious in all things. It might be the Greek gods, the Hebrew Jehovah or the Egyptian sun worship. On Mars Hill, Paul noted they had an altar even to an "Unknown God." Today, many have no religion, are not pagans so much as they are atheists, irreligious, except as they have made materialism their god.

What of you? What of me? Why are you a Christian? Why am I a Christian? Well, first of all, I would grant there are certain broad and basic ideas held in common by many religions.

1. There is a "Supreme Being" of some kind.

2. Most religions hold that the basis and ground of all reality is spiritual. There is something back of the material universe. Unless I believe in God, I cannot believe in thought, in good and evil, in anything.

3. It is a common belief in many religions that there is a moral order in the world, not something man has invented. Mohammedan, Christian, Jew hold that the moral law is the will of God for our world. But Christianity is more than moral goodness and a Supreme Being.

For a Christian, God is more than a Creator and Sustainer of the universe. He is a personal God—Father of our spirits. He is interested and concerned for each human soul, which brings us to the heart of why I am a Christian.

I am a Christian because the problem of sin needs an answer. All peoples are anxious about their wrongdoing, their sins. The Old Testament is filled with the efforts to deal with sin. The blood sacrifices of rams and bullocks, of doves, even of humans, were man's effort to cleanse himself of sin. Even Isaiah, the great Hebrew prophet, saw that "we are all as an unclean thing, and all our righteousnesses are as filthy rags." (Isa. 64:6).

Micah could cry out: "Will the Lord be pleased with thousands of rams, or with ten thousands of rivers of oil? shall I give my firstborn for my transgressions, the fruit of my body for the sin of my soul? He hath shewed thee, O man, what is good, . . . but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God."

Man cannot heal the breech.

Christ is the answer to the world's needs and to the needs of the individual and the group

Christianity is not man seeking God, but God seeking man. God would not let us go. God so loved his creation that he gave his Son. Or as Paul put it: "But God commended his love toward us, in that, while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us."

What we could not do for ourselves, Christ has done for us. Calvary is God's sign to everyone that all is forgiven. That is the difference in Christianity. Why am I a Christian? Because the love and forgiveness of God is revealed perfectly in Christ. God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself. We remember Christ's parable of the father sending at last his son to the wicked husbandmen. So it was with Christ.

I am a Christian because the church is the body of Christ, a redemptive society of the fellowship of the saints. It is not an end in itself but according to the purposes of God, it is the agency for bringing men into a saving knowledge of God in Christ.

But there is still another side for my being a Christian. Christ is our ultimate authority. Only he could say to Thomas: "I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh to the Father, but by me" (John 14:6).

I am a Christian because Christ is the way. Christ and only Christ is the answer to the world's needs and to my needs. When we want to see human life lived at its best, we go to him. When we want to see what God is like, we look to him. When a Negro woman in Jamaica first heard the gospel, she turned to a neighbor and cried out, "I knew it! Didn't I tell you that it must be so? My mother's heart was sure God is like that."

Christ shows us the way back to God. George Bernard Shaw is quoted as saying: "I am ready to admit that I see no way out of the world's misery but the way which would have been found by Christ's will." There is no other way.

Those were true words of Thomas a Kempis: "Without thy way there is no going; without the truth there is no knowing; without the life there is no living." Christ is the perfect guide. Life is confusing at its best. We know not which way to turn, to go. I heard of a man asking which way to go to Portland, Maine. "Well, the way you're going it is 25,000 miles. Turn around and go this way and it's only 2 miles," was the answer of a native. We need to turn from our egocentric lives and go his way.

I am a Christian because Christ is the way for groups and nations to live together. The way of Christ is the way of peace.

But more than this, I am a Christian because Christ is the truth. We live in a transient world but "Christ is the same, yesterday, today and forever." The concepts of the world will fail and let us down. They are shallow and have no foundation. But remember Christ's word: "He that heareth these sayings of mine and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock."

How we get our values all mixed up! It is Christ who gives the highest insights into right relationships and the true values in life. The worth of the individual, the worth of the soul finds its true value in Christ. A Christian is beyond the prejudices of the world, beyond the petty standards of speech, of conduct, of action. For a Christian, Christ is the final truth.

Dear Family Counselor,

When parents cannot work together, what is the future for the young people?

Mother married a man who said he was a Christian, but he never had any love and affection for her and us girls. They are parted at this time, so I don't know whether they will ever live together again or not.

How can you tell if two young people have real love and affection for each other? How do you know if you have chosen the right mate for marriage?

I am a girl who doesn't jump into these things, but likes to have good clean fun in the right way.

Do you think that going to church might help? Sometimes I don't know what to do or think, as I have no help from my parents, who make it a hard life all the time. They think it is all work, and you don't have to take time to have a happy home life together.

Peggy

Dear Peggy,

Many young people — perturbed at the rising rate of marital failures — are asking the same question, "How will I know?"

Mutual interests and shared experiences tend to point the trend and weld two people together. These experiences ought to include the church, but they ought to include also hobbies, recreation, intellectual interests, social concerns and economic attitudes. In short, the best rule of thumb is "Do you have similar interests and enjoy doing things together?"

You are right in implying that there is a difference between affection and love. There is usually no question about a mutual affection. Our impulses and glands take care of that. The subtler aspects of love in its more inclusive role requires careful analysis.

In recent years the newspapers, the magazines and the book publishing trade have been flooded with information—most of which is quite helpful. I will suggest one in each catagory. In the newspaper variety, something similar to Dr. George W. Crane's Worry Clinic may be available to you, since it is quite widely syndicated. In the magazine category the Ladies Home Journal offers the most extensive help. One issue picked up at random listed the following article: How To Be Marriageable (second of a series); Can This Marriage Be Saved? a continuing feature under the direction of Dr. Paul Popenoe, director, of The American Institute of Family Relations; Making Marriage Work, by Clifford R. Adams of Pennsylvania State University. In the book form I suggest Duvall's Facts of Life and Love for Teen Agers—if you are of the younger set—or her more recent book, co-authored with her husband, When You Marry, if you are post high school.

Harry K. Zeller, Jr.

a Christian because Christ is life, now and eternally. Apart from the Lord Jesus one does not really live. A young lad testified: "It's a heap more fun being a Christian than going to the devil."

There is a joy and peace which the world cannot give. Paul writes to the Galatians that "the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance: against such there is no law." The gospel is good news and joy is a distinctly Christian word and attribute. The trouble with many is that they have just enough religion to make them miserable and not enough to make them joyful.

We have no hope of eternal life without Christ. "I am the resurrection and the life. He that believeth in me shall never die." His own resurrection is eternal proof.

Yes, I am a Christian because surrender to Christ means new life in him. He called it the new birth. Paul declares "that if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature."

Your life is committed to something or someone. I find when one is surrendered to Christ there is not defeat but victory. It is not weakness but power. A young Russian was asked, "Why throw out Christ?" His answer was, "Well, he'd do —if he hadn't failed in you." The Christian's answer: "He hasn't failed. We have failed him!"

Still he calls to you and me. "Follow thou me!" In him is the way, the truth, the life.

Small Children at Church

WHILE many feel that the church should serve young families entirely through its work with parents, there are those who feel that care for the youngest should be provided in the church, on occasion. Let us now consider the question of care groups in the church, looking separately at the two-year-olds, and at the babies under two.

Two-Year-Olds

Many feel that some two-year-olds are ready for limited experiences with other children outside the home. However, this should happen only under very carefully planned conditions. Most churches will find it impossible to plan adequately for the twos unless a separate room, apart from other age groups, is provided for them. Otherwise, there is grave danger of overstimulation and frustrating expectations which exceed the young child's capacities. The group must be small, preferably not more than ten children, with two adults.

These youngest children should never be expected to function as a "group," but every provision made for individual activity. Sufficient play equipment appropriate to two-year-old needs is a must. A number of denominations now provide printed guidance material for those churches who have two-year-olds coming to church.

Every church having a room for the twos should recognize that not all two-year-olds are ready for even hour-long separation from parents away from home. With children who are not ready, separation should not be forced! Parents should be helped to accept such a lack of readiness without any feeling of shame or impatience, and either stay with the child, or keep him at home on Sunday mornings a bit longer. Even with those children who are ready, separation should be gradual and careful, and parents always on call if needed. First experiences at church must build security and happy associations—not destroy them!

Every precaution for physical safety and health must be observed. There should be a rule, completely understood by parents and carefully observed by them and by the teachers, that no child with a cold or any symptoms of what could be the early stages of communicable diseases should be in the group.

Even if two-year-olds are brought to church, the major portion of the church's ministry to nursery children is necessarily through its service to the parents and the home. The enlistment and training of teachers should take this fact into account. Two-year-olds will be "taught" as the teachers talk over with parents the needs of the children, provide materials for them to read, and in various other ways work with parents to provide those experiences and conditions that contribute to Christian growth. Working with the two-year-old at church, the skilled teacher can demonstrate to parents effective ways of meeting their needs. (In most cases it is possible that the needs of two-year-olds can be better met at home than in the church building.)

Only the church which is ready to meet these high standards is ready to include a room for two-year-olds in its church school.

Those Under Two

Some churches feel that they must provide nursery care for babies in order that parents may attend church. Others take the position that group care cannot meet babies' needs. They realize that it is fraught with so many dangers both physically and emotionally that some other way must be found to meet the needs of young parents for active participation in the life of the church. A previous article (April 2) dealt with ways of serving the needs of young families, other than providing in-church care for babies. There are countless other possibilities open.

If a church does provide care for babies under two, many feel that there should not be more than four in one room or well-screened space and in the care of one adult, with another adult on call, and that those who can walk should be in a separate room from those who cannot walk.

All precaution should be taken that play pens, toys and all other equipment are kept according to the highest sanitary standards. The adult in charge must be qualified to recognize and meet physical needs (some advocate a trained nurse), and to give the babies the warm, understanding and individual attention that their deep need for security demands. It is even more important than with the two's that separation from parents not be forced and that individual tendencies and reactions be respected. The adult in charge needs to know how to use her contacts as an entree for working with parents.

Even with these high standards met, there is still serious questions as to whether in-church care can be provided in complete accord with the needs of babies under two. At this point there is wide difference in opinion, and a church needs to take into account all available evidence in making a decision.

Whatever a church considers doing for babies, there is one criterion which must be thoughtfully and conscientiously faced—namely that the contemplated service shall be good, not only for the convenience of adults, but for the babies themselves, in the light of all their needs.

The church's ministry to the youngest is not marginal concern. Careful planning at the point is imperative. For what is done for today's babies determines in no small measure whether they as adults will be emotionally mature and secure people, able to handle themselves and influence their environment with Christian courage and creativeness.

Clark and Clark

Not all young children are ready for separation from parents away from home; with such children separation should not be forced realize that we have been equating physical security with God's highest gifts or the perfect day. Fortunate is the man who has a good job, a fine home and money in the bank. But this is not the ultimate in life. Certainly we want to work for these things but we should not be discouraged if we live in an age that threatens our ever possessing or keeping them. For the Christian the perfect day begins when he becomes a follower of Christ. The man who has been born again has joy, love and peace. These things are the result of spiritual achievement, not of physical endeavor.

KINGDOM GLEANINGS

A pulpit and three chairs of substantial make and oak finish are available for purchase. Write to J. H. Shaulis, R. 1, Waterloo, Iowa, for information.

Robert Kraning, Jr., was licensed to preach by the English Prairie church, Ind., instead of ordained as was reported in the March 5 issue of this paper.

Kenneth W. Hollinger has again been invited to be guest minister on the radio and TV program, The Church by the Side of the Road, for Mother's Day, May 8. The program is heard each Sunday over radio station WLW (700) and over TV stations WLW-T, WLW-D and WLW-C at 8:30 to 9:00 a.m.

Facilities will again be made available at Grand Rapids for the recording of Annual Conference proceedings. Since there will need to be a limitation on number, individuals interested in bringing their recorders are asked to register with the Visual Education Service, General Brotherhood Board, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill. Registration fee is $2.00.

The mass meeting marking the opening of the camping season at Camp Mack, Milford, Ind., will be held on June 5. Norman Baugher, general secretary of the General Brotherhood Board, will give the addresses at the afternoon and evening sessions. Middle Indiana men are in charge of the program. Annual Conference Lodging Arrangements

The Annual Conference Arrangements Committee suggests that you arrange for your lodging at Grand Rapids, Mich. before arriving at the Conference. You can do this by writing directly to the Convention Bureau for lodging in the homes or to the following hotels: Pantlind Hotel (headquarters hotel), Grand Rapids 2, Mich.; Hotel Rowe, Grand Rapids, Mich.; Morton House, Grand Rapids 2, Mich.

In an early issue of the Pastor's Packet in April there will be cards for the Pantlind Hotel and a listing of rates in the Rowe Hotel and Morton House, also the listing of rates in private homes.

In writing Pantlind Hotel be sure to indicate that you are attending the Annual Conference of the Church of the Brethren in order to secure the hotel rate before prices were advanced. The dates of the 1955 Annual Conference are June 14 to 19.—Galen T. Lehman, chairman.

Brotherhood Theme: Seek First His Kingdom

Six persons from the December Brethren Volunteer Service unit were assigned to Europe: Le Roy Burdick of New Enterprise, Pa.; Lorene Clark of Mayfield, Kansas; Ray Crim of Windber, Pa.; Dale Mankamyer of Easton, Md.; Robert Mendenhall of Covington, Ohio; Jan Thompson of Ludlow Falls, Ohio. The men are serving their alternative service term. The address of all, until their two-month orientation period is up, will be % Brethren Service Commission, Witzenhauserstrasse 5, Kassel-Rothenditmold, Germany.

Report of Commission Meetings

Joseph Dell was appointed the director of the West Coast material aid center just opened at 1010 Ninth St., Modesto, Calif. This new material aid center will be operated by Brethren Service on behalf of Church World Service and Lutheran World Relief.

The Ministry and Home Mission Commission approved the securing of a nurse to be added to the staff of the Lybrook Indian mission in New Mexico and asked Mrs. Margaret Reish to serve as a staff assistant and house mother on the project at Flat Creek, Ky.

The Brethren Service Commission made plans for Brethren representation at a conference on Church and Social Welfare to be held in Cleveland, Ohio, in November. A committee composed of Desmond Bittinger, J. H. Mathis and Aldene Ecker was asked to make a study of welfare needs and activities in the Church of the Brethren in preparation for this conference.

The service commission also reported that it would be unable to send a team of relief workers to Korea because of changes in the program of the United Nations Korean Reconstruction Administration, which had originally planned to support financially a program of village rehabilitation work.

The Ministry and Home Mission Commission approved capital gift grants to seven congregations as a means of assisting in building new churches or making major developments in existing churches. These grants totaled $64,500. The commission also made grants for pastoral support to nine churches which totaled $12,000. These are home mission projects representing new churches or major developments. Two of these represent new congregations, a third church in the city of Detroit and a new church in Springfield, Mo.

Plans were made to use several home mission pastors in camps and conferences and other contacts as a means of interpreting the opportunities in home mission work.

The Foreign Mission Commission gave its approval to the holding of a missionary conference at Grand Rapids following Annual Conference. This will bring together all missionaries who are home on furlough, members of the foreign missions staff and members of the Foreign Mission Commission. Approval was given also to the new constitution for the Hillcrest School at Jos in Nigeria. This will make it possible for other missions in Nigeria to join in financial support and the direction of the Hillcrest School, which provides a boarding school for missionary children.

One activity at the Kassel House is a youth group of Germans and Americans which meets once a week for recreation, crafts and worship. Through activities such as these a definite contact is maintained with the community

That All May Be One

Paul Sargent
McPherson, Kansas

WE HAVE heard much of the Brethren House. Our daughter spent a few weeks in the summer of 1952 in a work camp there. She came home proudly showing callouses on her hands, proving she had helped lay the foundation, which was made of blocks composed of rubble from the bombings of this German city. The Brethren House is built well and a fine tribute to the many hours of devoted labor by those who chose to give their time to make a testimony for peace.

This building is located on a hill, with much space around it, which would indicate the feeling of the authorities of Kassel regarding its importance. Youth of Kassel play on the lawn around the house and enjoy fellowship with the Brethren Service workers.

You enter the House and find the receptionist at her desk to greet you. To the left on this floor is the very attractive library with current periodicals and a collection of peace books. The service workers and visitors from many sections of Europe find the library very valuable. This is especially true of those who return to Kassel for visits from their project locations.

On this same floor is the chapel which will some day have the equipment needed for worship services. The lounge with a piano and comfortable chairs is between the chapel and the dining room. Here the group gathers for worship periods, for fellowship, for singing. In the dining room you enjoy meals like the ones you have at home. There is a kitchen next to the dining room supervised by the housemother with help from some German women. The volunteers stationed at Kassel take turns at the necessary job of assisting in the kitchen.

Office space is provided on this floor for the director of Brethren Service in Germany, the business manager of the House, director of the Heifer Project, director of student exchange, material aid department and refugee resettlement. On the next floor you find a guest room where visitors are welcome for the night. On this floor are the living quarters for the director in Germany, now being occupied by the Wilbur Mullen family. Another part of this level has dormitory rooms for girls and the next floor up has dormitory rooms for boys. Even higher are more dormitory rooms, and at times all of the space is used. The week after we left, they were to have a group of about thirty German youth from the East Zone who were coming to Kassel for a music festival. We felt that the Brethren House with its fine Christian atmosphere was a splendid place for these young people.

The program that is carried on from the Brethren House is the reason for the building being so important. If you are privileged to visit there you should have several days to visit projects. Some will thrill you because they seem so successful and others will discourage you because they seem so hopeless.

A recent issue of the Readers Digest tells of Germany taking into her boundaries in the Western Zone, over 10,000,000 refugees from the East Zone. You should ask to go with Herr Geisen as he visits groups of people who depend on Brethren Service for some of the necessities of life. Herr Geisen is a very unusual fellow who has worked for the Brethren six years. He tells you he is an "enemy of war." He is hoping for good leadership in Germany that will keep them at peace. You feel sure that the feeding of the hungry will help in the cause of peace. You are thankful that over 7,000 heifers have been sent in the name of Christ from your America.

Max Snider will take some time to show you some of the heifers that have been located under this most unusual program. Some of these people have affection for these animals far beyond reason, probably because these heifers have provided their children with milk to drink.

Rachel Garner will take you on one of her trips to deliver food to needy families. The material aid department also provides shoes, clothing, wool for knitting and cloth for sewing. A mobile unit has been sent out (staying about a month at one location) for craft work. Hundreds of boys from Sanbostel are grateful for this chance to do basketry or weaving. In this camp there are about 700 young men who have fled from the East.

People we talked with think the student exchange program is a most important project, and it has been cut in half the past year. It is sponsored by our government and could be better sponsored by our churches. There were 20,000 German youth who applied for the exchange program last year, but only about 250 could come.

From Kassel you can visit Schwarzenau, where you are thrilled at the beautiful peaceful valley where our church was born.

Kassel is building furiously after having been so badly destroyed. They say they are seventy-five percent rebuilt (it had been eighty percent destroyed) and hope to get through by next year when the International Flower Show will be held there.

There are many Brethren in Europe besides tourists and Brethren Service workers. Some of these people are in the armed forces and are always welcome to come for a visit to Kassel House. A graduate of Manchester College was there when we were. He said, "This is the finest week end I have had since I have been in Europe, so relaxing and such fine fellowship." There is much college spirit at Brethren House as many of the volunteers are graduates or have attended Brethren colleges. It would be good for any G. I. to join in the Christian fellowship of this place.

This article has meant to say this—The Brethren House in Kassel is a wonderful place and it makes you proud to be a Brethren because of the work of these "activists" for peace.

The Role of the Local Church

Paul H. Bowman
Timberville, Virginia

THE local congregation occupies what is perhaps the most strategic place in the program of the Christian church. It is the front battle line of the kingdom and the point of real contact between the forces of right and the forces of evil. Most of the administrative and promotional machinery of the whole church has little meaning except in terms of what happens where the men and women of the church live. It is there that the church moves forward in triumph or stands on dead center in futility and failure.

Where does the church of Christ move against evil in the hearts of men? Where does the church attack entrenched evil in business and government? Where does the church promote evangelism? Where are family altars established and maintained? Where do we experience a deeper spirituality? It is at the level of the local church. It is there that the church of Christ moves forward or it does not move at all.

The Christian church in its local administration, experiences many impediments and handicaps.

First of all, membership in the church is voluntary. No pastor or evangelist can compel anyone to come into its membership. It wins people by the power of the gospel and they come into membership by voluntary commitment and dedication.

In the second place, the work of the church is carried on mainly by voluntary workers. Officers and teachers of the church receive no wages or salaries. They serve for the love of the cause and out of loyalty to their Lord.

The pastor cannot and should not undertake to do all the work of his church and no congregation can employ staff personnel to perform all of its tasks. Service is an element of life for every Christian and the church proceeds on the feet of those who serve voluntarily. This can be its glory and joy or its defeat and shame. On this account, the role of the pastor is exceedingly difficult. He cannot dismiss those who neglect their duty. If officers and workers fail, he must make the most of it in patience and in forbearance, even though the work of the kingdom is terribly retarded.

The modern church, like the apostolic church, must find its objectives in the spiritual hungers of the people whom it seeks to serve

In the third place, the objectives of the church are sometimes very obscure. The machinery of the local church is vast and complicated. It includes a church building with its sanctuary, classrooms, offices, musical instruments, charts, maps, baptistry, pulpit and many other physical facilities. It conducts a variety of services which claim the time and energy of many people. There are ministers, deacons, teachers, officers, choristers, secretaries, ushers and a host of busy workers. What is the meaning of all this activity? What end does it serve? Where is the church going with all this machinery? Do we move about blindfolded? Are we just treading the dreary road of countless activities with no clear goal to guide and inspire us?

The modern church, like the apostolic church, must find its objectives in the spiritual hungers of the people whom it seeks to serve. These are reasonably clear in our modern life and the church must take account of them as she defines her purposes.

Objectives of the Church

First: The people in our parishes are in desperate need of knowledge about the realities of religion. Children and youth are woefully ignorant of the Bible and its message. Our adult members are no better informed. They, too, are ignorant of the message of the Bible and of its significance for the problems of our day. God, Christ, the Holy Spirit, consecration, Christian duty, immortality and other great elements of Christian faith are a strange language to many modern church members.

The church must aim, therefore, to educate. Its task is always and forever to teach, teach, teach.

Second: Our people stand in need of an undergirding religious faith. The average Christian of our day is unable to offer an intelligent defense of his faith. We have been living on spiritual capital which a past generation created for us and we forever cling to religious practices without possessing the Christian belief which supports them. For that very reason, our lives are impoverished and our worship becomes mere lip-service to a God whom we dimly know and to a Christ who is merely a name to us.

The church must, therefore, aim to impart to the people a supporting faith for their ministry in the world as Christians.

Third: The modern church must be concerned about the basic attitudes of its people.

The main currents of human life flow out of the fundamental attitudes which we hold toward life and its experiences. Nothing can appear right to the man whose basic attitudes are wrong. The church needs to resist pride, selfishness, cynicism, hate, bitterness, stinginess, and those qualities of spirit which poison and corrupt the very fountains from which the currents of life flow.

Our people need to have their horizons widened and their sympathies broadened. The circle of our life must include all races and people, all values and cultures, all good and all truth.

Thus, the church must keep the problem of constructive attitudes in the focus of her purpose.

Fourth: Our people need to make their commitment to great causes. "Ye shall be my witnesses," said Jesus to his disciples. Power from heaven is not promised to those who serve small and ignoble ends. Thousands of men and women in our churches need to come out of the shell which encloses their lives and become advocates of great causes which center in the kingdom of God. "Ye shall receive power," said Jesus, "when the Holy Spirit is come upon you." Commitment is one condition of power from above. The church must include in its ministry the ancient and the ever new task of calling men and women to repentance and to the better life.

All of this must be done at the level of the local church or it will never be done at all. It is clear then that the local congregation is the most strategic center in the program of the Christian church.

"On Which Side Are You?"

IN THE world of sports, one is alarmed when a member of an athletic team turns traitor to his team and while professing loyalty to it actually plays in such a manner that he is helping the opposition. One should be much more alarmed when a follower of Christ turns traitor to him and while continuing as a member of his church lives in such a manner that he joins forces with the opposition.

Christ made it very emphatic that there is no neutrality regarding him; that everyone must be for him or against him. "He who is not with me is against me, and he who is not gathering with me is scattering abroad," says the Master. Either we are building with him, or we are tearing down what he is endeavoring to build up.

When he walked upon this earth many said to him, "I will follow you, but first . . ." something else. Many are still saying, "I will follow you, but only on my own terms." His answer then and now is clear and definite, if he is not first, we don't really follow him. If anything else in life—family, job, money, pleasure, self—comes first, then we do not follow him.

On which side are you? Does Jesus know that you are on his team? By the way you attend church services? By the way you give time and money for the advancing of his cause? By the way you work and the way you pray? If you are not with him, you are against him and if you are not helping him with all your might, you are helping the opposition. On which team are you as he sees you? Can he count on you?

Every person renders his own verdict and thereby chooses destiny!

India's Door Is Open to Missionaries

A. Russell Stevenson

IN HIS daily search for what is news in India, the New Delhi correspondent of a major U. S. newspaper or press association may learn that the Indian government has refused a visa to an American missionary, hopeful of representing his church there. Rightly he files a story, and it appears next day in a thousand newspapers all over the U. S.

Theoretically this may happen, and doubtless has happened, a dozen times in the last two or three years.

It has also happened that other stories cabled to the U. S. have cited extremist statements by right-wing Hindu nationalists, condemning the whole Christian missionary movement in India as "imperialist" or "colonialist" and calling for wholesale expulsions. These utterances, too, were news, and as such have been carried by U. S. dailies from coast to coast.

Now in their primary function of telling us what happened yesterday, if not today or an hour ago, newspapers and news-gathering agencies have not the remotest responsibility to give us also the whole context along with the news nugget. That may have to wait for a feature story or columnist's commentary, which the casual reader of nuggets does not always catch in his read-and-run day.

The unhappy result of this, as far as the missionary movement in India is concerned, has been the growing impression across the U.S. that India has no place for Christian missionaries from the U. S. And that, in fact, the day of missionary endeavor there is fast drawing to a close.

The truth is the exact opposite. American missionaries are needed and wanted in India today. The door is open, and large numbers of American missionaries are freely carrying on their ministry of preaching, healing and serving.

True, they are doing this, not as their fathers did, with the entire responsibility resting with themselves and their boards back home. They are working in co-operation with their colleagues in the new, and ever strengthening, Indian churches. But they are there, they are working freely and usefully, and they are welcome.

That the role of the foreign missionary has changed, all will agree. He now goes not only as a partner to work side by side with the Indian Christian. He goes at the invitation of the churches within the country.

Moreover, recent conversations and developments between leaders of both church and government in India give clear indication that we may anticipate manifold opportunities for the free and open preaching of the gospel in the years ahead.

During her visit in America not long ago, Raj Kumarai Amrit Kaur, the minister of health in the Indian cabinet, said, "India is not anti-missionary in spite of rumors to the contrary." She went on to say, "At a recent meeting of the cabinet, all but one of the ministers stood with me in my championship of the work of foreign missionaries." (The lone exception is without doubt Home Minister Katju, who on numerous occasions has expressed before the Indian Parliament his opposition to the presence and activities of foreign missionaries on Indian soil.)

Another distinguished Indian leader who believes we should face the future with confidence is Mr. C. P. Mathew, a member of parliament from the state of

Executive secretary, Joint Office for Southern Asia and the Near East of the National Council's Division of Foreign Missions

Travancore-Cochin, and recently a member of the India delegation to the General Assembly of the United Nations. At a luncheon given by the South Asia Committee of the National Council of Churches, Mr. Mathew said, "I take pride in the new Indian constitution which guarantees to all freedom of religion: freedom of belief, of worship, and freedom to propagate." He added that recent decisions in the Supreme Court have supported this guarantee. "This fundamental right, 'freely to profess, practice and propagate,' must prevail for all who live in India," Mr. Mathew said, "and must not be denied to foreigners as some Hindu leaders have insisted."

Christian people in America must look at India, at the role of the missionary and at the task of carrying on a Christian witness, in the light of the startling changes that have taken place since India achieved her independence in 1947. Change in itself is no guarantee of progress, but in India the progress that has accompanied the change has been notable. Under the leadership of Prime Minister Nehru, the Indian nation has established itself as a sovereign, independent republic. India has adopted a constitution consistent with the aims of a secular state. Untouchability has been legally outlawed, economic and social reforms have been carried out, and India has taken her proper place in the United Nations as an equal partner with other nations and as the ardent champion of those nations which are still subject to colonial rule. In 1952 India held her first nation-wide elections. In a dramatic demonstration of political democracy 107 million people went to the polls to elect representatives to national and local offices.

The Christians of India, numbering close to ten million, have not remained aloof from this change. They have been a part of it and, to a degree out of proportion to their numbers, have been instrumental in the progress so far. They are concerned that their life in the churches shall evidence a similar growth. The churches of India are anxious to achieve complete independence and autonomy, to build up Indian leadership, to develop their own ways of witness and worship and at all points to be free of foreign control.

These are worthy goals. They are goals which both the churches and the missions must seek to realize. Toward that end the missionary from the West is welcomed as a "partner in obedience." In that partnership and in that obedience the Christians of India and America will find their place in a fellowship that can never be limited by national boundaries, a fellowship that is world-wide.

The missionary is necessarily one who is sent. In fulfilling their missionary obligation the churches of America have been sending their representatives to India for a period of more than 140 years. This involves the churches in dealings with other governments and those dealings have become increasingly complicated, particularly in the years since the last war.

We can be grateful for the large degree of freedom and opportunity that has been accorded to American missionaries during the years that they have served in India. The missionary has traveled widely, he has founded institutions, established churches and proclaimed the gospel. That God has blessed these efforts is evident to all. Christianity is firmly rooted in India.

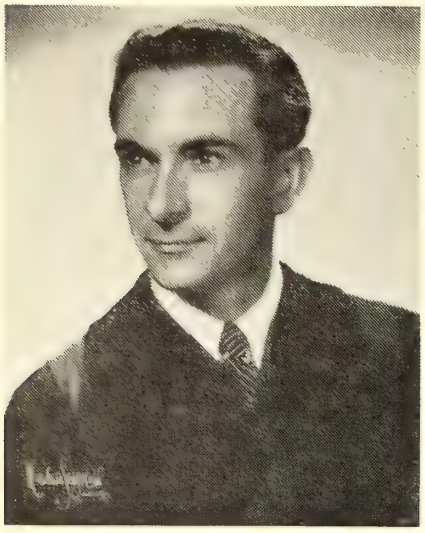
Today, however, the Indian nation is caught up in the tensions that prevail the world over. There are political and religious tensions within the country. Giving voice to India's special religious tensions is the highly vocal Mahasabha Party. Through the Mahasabha, Hindu extremists are openly working for the establishment of a Hindu state, a state that would deprive religious minorities of equal rights and would establish Hinduism as the national religion. These extremists charge that missionaries act as political agents, that they win converts by offering material inducements and that the adoption of Christianity is tantamount to giving up Indian nationality.

It is encouraging to note that Indian Christians have protested against these irresponsible attacks. The New York Times of Jan. 2 reported on the resolutions formulated by the All-India Conference of Indian Christians. They warned government leaders that these attacks against foreign missionaries are widening into attacks against Christianity itself. In its statement the conference declared, "Foreign missionaries will be welcomed as valuable co-workers."

The government also faces external tensions. Communist-dominated states lie to the north, and to the east and the west lie the two sections of a country with which an uneasy truce still exists. Missionaries are foreigners and the government considers it necessary to be informed of the activities of foreigners living within the borders of India. We must, therefore, be sensitive to the situation which the presence of American missionaries creates.

The government has made it clear that certain restrictions are in order. Missionaries will be most severely restricted in those border areas where foreign agents seek to penetrate or where unrest is caused by dissatisfied tribal groups. Missionaries must not, on their own initiative and without due clearance, open up work in new areas. Should expansion be planned, use should be made of Indian personnel, unless the need for a foreign missionary can be demonstrated. Further, mission boards should not anticipate an increase over the number of missionaries now in India. Instead, every effort should be made to train more Indian leaders. Where possible, work should be turned over to Indians. Lastly, it should be left to the churches of India, together with the National Christian Council or some such body, to invite the missionary and to establish with the government the need for his presence.

The Southern Asia Committee of the National Council of Churches recently adopted a statement in which it set forth certain basic principles to govern the entry and work of American missionaries. These principles should come as no surprise. They recognize the changes that have taken place and yet they are not born purely of expediency. They are principles that have been supported by missionary statesmen who, from the earliest times, have sought to build up strong, independent churches free of foreign control. It will be noted that in two instances (Items 2 and 4) the statement of principles is in complete agreement with present government policy. The principles are as follows:



1) In all matters affecting the work and development of the Christian churches in India the primary place of authority and responsibility rests with them.

2) The development of Indian leadership must continue to have priority.

3) Missionaries should be intellectually and spiritually strong. They should be prepared in every way to make a positive contribution to the well-being of the people of India.

4) It is primarily for the churches

E. Jerry Walker

We are here presenting to our readers the story of the marvelous transformation that is taking place in St. James Methodist parish in Chicago. It was my privilege to hear the pastor of St. James church tell this story to the students in chapel at Bethany Biblical Seminary recently. I asked him to share with us this story that we might inspire the Brotherhood by what another denomination is doing in ministry to a changing community. It is my hope that many of us will be inspired to take a new look at our own local church situations and prayerfully face the responsibility that is ours in ministering to these, our neighbors, in our changing community situations. All of our churches ought to be "full ministry churches."—Charles E. Zunkel, executive secretary, Ministry and Home Mission Commission.

The St. James Story

E. Jerry Walker
Pastor of St. James Methodist Church, Chicago, Illinois

THIS is a "before and after" story: what was happening to our church before we became nonracial and what has begun to happen since.

St. James is a city church. It stands in the midst of Chicago's once luxurious South Side. When Negroes came, most white people fled to the suburbs, but held jealously to their beautiful cathedral church.

From 1948 to 1953 the complexion of the community turned. From seventy-eight per cent white it shifted to eighty-five per cent colored, and St. James church found itself a white island in a predominantly Negro community.

When I was appointed minister in the summer of 1953, I found declining congregations. We lost by transfer ten times as many people as we welcomed into membership that first year. Youth groups had disappeared. There was no choir. The Sunday school numbered less than the seventy-five rooms in the parish house. Pessimism had set in like rigor mortis.

The building itself also forms an interesting part of the "before" picture. A grand, Gothic structure, it is the largest and one of the best equipped Methodist churches in Chicago. On arrival I found fifty-four holes in the stained glass windows of the sanctuary. Chalk and crayon marks reached up the sides of the building as high as little hands could put them. Papers and broken bottles littered the hedges and varnish was peeling from the massive doors at the narthex.

On many week days the only people in the building were the custodian's family, who lived in a third floor apartment, my secretary and myself. It was a frustrating, hopeless feeling that hit me as I heard hundreds of youngsters passing the building on their way to and from school in the next block. After school they would be playing in the streets while our big gymnasium lay idle.

When questions were raised about serving this new community, answers followed the pat type: "We're not ready yet." "It's still too soon." "We don't want to rush it." Of course, in such situations the time is never "right."

And I don't think a man can stick out such a frustrating experience except for this: he knows the problem is not his. It is God's problem! And if we can relax long enough to give him a chance to reveal his plan and then dare to follow, it will work out. Our people proved equal to the challenge.

One more facet of the "before" picture was the community itself. Within a block of the church were nine abandoned cars, some losing wheels, propped up on crates and boxes. No one seemed to care. There did not appear to be much—if any—community pride.

The "before" picture, then, was one of a handsome but depreciating building with a fading congregation in a declining neighborhood.

So, what to do?

Traditionally, city churches in this plight do one of three things: sell and run for the suburbs; hold on with tears for the past until holding on becomes impossible; or, face up! Many have done the first two. Few the latter.

I asked Dr. Jitsuo Morikawa, minister of Chicago's First Baptist church, which has been interracial since 1945, how his church went about it.

The St. James Methodist church on Chicago's South Side ministers to the interracial community

"We just opened our doors," he said. But I soon learned that the problem of opening long-closed doors is one each congregation must face for itself.

Our program began with the children of the community. Here was an obvious need that even the most prejudiced would have difficulty ignoring. But where could we find leadership? Most of our people had moved some distance away. So we looked outside the church and, in this, I feel, we found a fundamentally sound principle for city churches with good buildings but limited leadership — put up your building against someone else's personnel. In our case we found the answer in the Y.M.C.A.

The "after" picture in this phase of our program now shows two full-time and one part-time workers with offices, girls' and boys' playrooms, craft shop and gymnasium in use every weekday afternoon, many evenings and all day Saturday. Over a hundred fifty boys and girls are dues-paying members.

With the "Y" program progressing we turned attention to our church school. When some teachers refused to teach interracial classes, we started a second church school on Sunday afternoons. As with the weekday program, leadership was imported from outside. Other churches, both white and colored, provided teachers. Six students came by station wagon from our theological seminary in Evanston.

During the first months a vigorous teacher-training program was begun. Now, a half year later, we have consolidated church school programs into one morning Sunday school. We have our own staff of teachers and are not dependent on outside help. The school is still small for our big building, with 287 registered, but the picture continues to look better.

Our morning congregations entered the fall of 1954 at one-half their 1943 attendance level. On Oct. 31 we took in our first class of members to include Negroes — seven white, seven Negro. Immediately our congregations began to grow. Ten weeks later we had the largest congregation the church had seen in three years. The next Sunday we topped that!

And the "after" picture of the building shows new life, too. We've not had a broken window in the sanctuary in eight months. Even Hallowe'en left no crayon, soap or chalk marks on the building. Inside, another transformation is taking place. Instead of feeling sad about leaving, the Women's Society is having the church parlors redecorated. The ladies plan to stay and enjoy it!

Meanwhile, with the co-operation of the police department we are trying to help build community spirit. Abandoned cars are being towed away. Monthly family nights in the church draw large crowds to hear such celebrities as cowboy singer, Bob Atcher, baseball star, Jackie Robinson, and the Fowler puppets. As many as 1,250 people have been in the church for a single program.

The story of "before and after" has only begun. Already the contrast is evident. Instead of 16 new members like last year we estimate 130 from October through June this year, with at least a fourth of these new white members.

One of the outspoken opponents of the program visited a recent worship service. "If I hadn't seen it myself," she said, "I wouldn't believe it."

I recalled the words of my Baptist friend, Jitsuo Morikawa. "We just opened our doors," he had said. It was good advice.

India's Door Is Open

in India to state how many and what kind of missionaries they need, and to present those needs to the government.

5) All concerned should continue to uphold the principle that the Christian belongs to a world-wide fellowship. By the very nature of his allegiance to the Head of the church, he has the duty to share his deepest convictions with all who care to listen and observe.

The door is open in India. There is a place for the American missionary, a place that is recognized by leaders in both the government and the churches. That place was well defined in the words of Mr. Mathew, who in addition to his government responsibility is a distinguished layman in the Mar Thoma Church. He said: "The Christian church is supranational. When some Christians in our country therefore speak of having a purely Indian national church with no foreign connections, one can only think that it is because they have not grasped or appreciated the church's universal character. Most of the churches in India want the help and continued presence of their fellow workers from foreign countries who are here not as masters but as comrades and fellow workers."

Church News

Northern California

Paradise—Brother and Sister L. S. Shively spent an evening with us in the interest of Christian education. Bro. Robert Sink of Raisin, Calif., conducted a two-week evangelistic meeting in our church. The officers and adult leaders of the young people's regional conference met at our church to plan the regional work. Preliminary plans are being made for the first Pacific Coast youth conference, which is to be held on the Chico State College campus in August. The birthday money from our annual church birthday dinner was divided between the General Brotherhood Board work and the district work. Since our last report, there have been eight baptized and seven received by letter. Sister Ella Ebbert, returned missionary to India, spoke at one of the sessions of our school of missions. The school closed with a program in which each department told of its studies of India. The offerings from the school went to Bethany Seminary.—Margaret Schmorleitz, Paradise, Calif.

Southern California and Arizona

Glendale, First—Quarterly council was held Jan. 19, with Pastor C. LeRoy Doty presiding. We are now working under the constitution and bylaws which were accepted at an earlier council. A church library is being started. Brethren Noah Sollenberger, Paul Taylor, John Ellett and Robert Cripe were elected deacons. The men's work group is sponsoring a young people's basketball team. The young people are planning a trip to our Navajo Indian mission during the Easter vacation. The Sunday school gave a pageant at Christmas time with a white gift offering for the Navajo Indians. A new class for the younger married people has been organized in our Sunday school. Our Sunday-school superintendent and five teachers attended the union leadership training school in Los Angeles. A Fireside hour is held each Wednesday evening for singing, a period of prayer and Bible study. Brother and Sister Chester Keller and Brother and Sister Lynn Blickenstaff were with us for our school of missions.—Mrs. Ruth E. McCann, Glendale, Calif.

Pasadena—Bro. Harold Fasnacht, president of La Verne Colege, officiated at the installation of Pastor and Mrs. Paul Studebaker. The December family night included a Christmas program and featured a play written and directed by Mrs. Dan Hollinger entitled Christmas Eve With the Brethren Family. On the afternoon of Jan. 23 our church conducted the service at the Brethren Home in Greenville. George Mendenhall, who was recently licensed to the ministry, preached a sermon on the Lord's Prayer. One of our young men, Robert Mendenhall, will serve his B.V.S. period in Europe.—Miss Ethel Manning, Covington, Ohio.

Eaton—Since our last report eighteen members have been received into our fellowship by baptism and five by letter. On Thanksgiving we united with the churches of the town in union services. Our church is making plans to be host church for the district conference this fall. On Dec. 5 Miss Betty Debels, a native of Latvia, spoke to us after a fellowship luncheon and social hour. At Christmas time our primary department collected

MAID OF ISRAEL

Tolbert R. Ingram

"Lord, open the eyes of these men." So prayed the indomitable prophet, Elisha, after he led into the capital city of Israel the five hundred fully armed Syrians who sought to take him prisoner.

This episode is a part of a much larger story, told in the Bible and vividly recreated in Maid of Israel. This is an exciting Old Testament novel, a love story as well as an account of corruption and intrigue in a nation that had turned from God.

The steadfast faith of the young girl in the story will stir your imagination.

money which was divided equally among the work at Chosen, Fla., Falfurrias, Texas, and Flat Creek, Ky.; the juniors sent their money to the Lybrook Indian mission in New Mexico. A resettlement committee has been appointed to investigate the possibility of locating a D.P. family in our midst. We have just concluded our school of missions. A German student talked to us on Jan. 9. The pastor and ministerial board are planning an evangelistic campaign of visitation and personal evangelism. Our spring communion was held April 7. Bro. Chester Petry conducted a series of services beginning April 14. Our men's work group rented a farm as their project. An offering was received for the S.O.S. fund. Don Miller showed slides and gave a talk of his two years' work with Brethren Service in Germany and Austria.—Mrs. Elizabeth Gauch, Eaton, Ohio.

Conewago—Bro. Michael Markey of York, Pa., delivered the Thanksgiving message at the Bachmanville church. Our council meeting was held Dec. 2 at the Bachmanville church. Brethren Carl Zeigler and Nevin Zuck officiated at the ordination of Brother and Sister Earl Eshelman and Brother Robert Young to the eldership. Installation services were also held at this time for Bro. Herman Brandt and his wife and Bro. Emmert Aldinger and his wife as permanent deacons. Bro. Ralph Schlosser of Elizabethtown conducted a Bible institute at the Bachmanville church. Ray Kurtz of Richland brought a temperance sermon at the Conewago church. A missionary sermon was preached at the Bachmanville church by Howard Bernhard.—Bertha M. Shissler, Elizabethtown, Pa.

Lancaster—Our new pastor, Bro. John D. Long, and his family began their pastoral work with us the first of January. Installation services and a reception were held for the Longs on Jan. 7, with Bro. Carl Zeigler of Lebanon officiating. Our new parsonage was completed before the arrival of the Longs. At our last council meeting our pastor presented a challenge to the members—an average attendance of 300 at morning worship and 25 new members before Easter. It was also voted to give three assurances for a refugee family from Germany. During the month of January, a school of missions was held with classes for children and adults each Sunday evening. At the last session Sister S. Olive Widdowson, who has been a missionary to India for forty years, was our guest speaker. We have recently organized a mothers' club for the mothers of preschool age children. These meetings are held monthly in the members' homes. Ten of our members enrolled in the leadership training school which was sponsored by the United Churches of Lancaster County.—Grace W. Evans, Lancaster, Pa.

Long Run—Since our last report Bro. Joseph Moyer of the Indian Creek congregation brought a morning message after which seven persons were baptized into our fellowship. Bro. Linford Rotenberger of the Quakertown congregation also brought a Sunday morning message for us. Bro. Hiram Gingrich conducted a two-week evangelistic meeting in our church. Bro. Perry Liskey was guest speaker for our rally day service. One Sunday morning the young people from the Bareville church were in charge of the services. We had an all-day homecoming service with Bro. Linford Rotenberger bringing the message. Our young people attended the district youth rally at the Spring Creek church and were presented the district banner for having the highest percentage present for the meeting. The children of the Sunday school gave a Christmas program on Sunday evening, Dec. 26, after which a candlelight service was held for the dedication of a baby. We had a combined watch night service with the St. John's Lutheran church with Rev. Lukens bringing the message.—Marguerite Ritter, Richlandtown, Pa.

Monocacy—Our church held a preaching mission with Bro. Lee Weaver of College Park, Md., as the speaker. As a result of these meetings, nine persons were baptized. Delegates to district meeting were Bro. S. R. Weybright and Sister Denda Renner. A group from our church attended the dedication service at the Fahrney-Keedy Home. The ladies' aid is working on the district project and has sent clothing for relief. The men's work group is repairing the cemetery fence. Delegates to the men's work meeting were Brethren D. S. Weybright, Orville Smith and Kenneth Whitmore. Installation services for the CBYF officers were conducted by Bro. Harold Bomberger. Our children's work sent an offering to the Navajo Indians and to the migrant children. They also collected new and used jewelry for the Mental Hygiene Society Christmas project. These articles provide individual gifts for patients in these hospitals. The children's work held a dedication service for their friendship packages which were sent at Christmas time. They also collected clothing for relief and glasses and parts for repair work. Visiting ministers assisting in our morning worship have included Bro. Oren Garner and Bro. Brodish.—Mrs. Denda Renner, New Midway, Md.

First Virgiina

Crab Orchard—A music school was conducted by Bro. Jim Stanley Jan. 24—Feb. 4. The first hour of the evening was devoted to the children followed by the session for the adults. Bro. Arnold Deck has returned home, having served two years in alternative service at Nappanee, Ind. He is now serving as an attendent on a cattle boat to Europe. Bro. Oswald Cummings is now serving his second year in B.V.S. at Falfurrias, Texas.—Mrs. Russell O'Neal, Crab Orchard, W. Va.

Richmond—Since our last report eleven have been received into our church by letter. We have changed the name of our women's group to the Friendship Circle. On Jan. 12 Mrs. Baker J. Cauthern spoke to our women's group. Our December family night was a covered dish supper with a mitten tree project for the children. The mittens were sent to New Windsor for relief. Bro. Clyde Shallenberger of Hopewell is conducting a series of discussions on Brethren doctrines. The Sunday-school department presented a Christmas program in song, verse and drama. Guest ministers have included Bro. Ora DeLauter and Bro. Joseph Glick. Our winter council was held on Jan. 22. Plans are being carried out to secure a full-time pastor beginning in the fall.—Mrs. Raymond Moore, Jr., Richmond, Va.

Roanoke, Central—Progress is being made on our new educational building. Our Sunday-school attendance is on the increase. Mrs. Carroll C. Flora became our church secretary the first of September. The proceeds from the bazaar which was held by the service society will be used for the new kitchen equipment. The various organizations have been helping with community missions including a children's nursery, youth detention home, city rescue mission, old folks' nursing home and baskets to shut-ins. Of special note are programs and parties sponsored by the young people at the city's detention home. Handel's Messiah was presented by the Brethren choir of Roanoke for the first time on Dec. 19 under the direction of Phil Trout. Our senior choir presented this famous oratorio in the church with the help of several guest singers and soloists from the Roanoke area. For the month of January a Sunday evening school of missions was sponsored with Mrs. A. D. Miller as director. Classes for young people and adults were held for study of the books, Under Three Flags and God in the City. These were followed each evening by a guest speaker, film or panel discussion. On Jan. 18 Bro. Bob Richards showed moving pictures of India which were taken on his goodwill tour for the State Department. —Miss Margaret Flora, Roanoke, Va.

Troutville—We have elected D. Price Hylton of Roanoke as our elder. We held a recognition service for our new members. Most of our teachers attended the district children's workers' conference at the Cloverdale church. Union Thanksgiving services were held at our church with the Baptist minister, Rev. Jesse Tate, delivering the message. Some of our boys have joined the newly organized Boy Scout troop which meets in the Mountain View—A women's work group has been organized in our church during the past year. Our church co-operated with the Mathias church in a Bible school. Bro. F. M. Helsey held a one-week revival service, closing with the love feast and communion. During the meetings ten were baptized into our church fellowship. An all-day service was held in connection with a mortgage-burning ceremony. Bro. Helsley brought the morning message and Bro. Joseph M. Mason was the afternoon speaker. Since the Lower Lost River congregation has been divided, we are known as the Mountain View congregation. Our Christmas program was held Dec. 23. During the month of January some of our people attended the school of missions at the Mathias church.—Naomi D. Kohne, Mathias, W. Va.

Unity, Bethel and Fairview—Our church met in quarterly council with our elder, Bro. C. E. Nair, presiding. Bro. D. W. Huffman was chosen to succeed Bro. C. E. Nair as elder-in-charge for the coming year. Bro. Walter Mahan of Maryland conducted a week of evangelistic meetings at the Fairview church, closing with communion service on Sunday evening. Eleven were added to the church by baptism. Brethren O. R. Emswiler, Paul Roller, C. F. Whitmer and Sister Eva Huffman represented our congregation at district meeting. The Bethel women's group sponsored as guest speaker Miss Carolyn Ikenberry of Bridgewater, Va., who shared with us some of her experiences as an exchange student to Germany. The women's work groups continue to contribute to relief. Union Thanksgiving service was held in the Fairview church with Rev. Galt of the Christian church bringing the message. A fellowship supper and consecration service was held in the Bethel church for Alice Higgs and Florence Harpine, who have entered B.V.S. The Sunday schools of both churches presented Christmas programs. A number of our young people attended the district watch night party at the Harrisonburg church on New Year's Eve.—Mrs. David Huffman, Broadway, Va.

Southern Virginia

Laurel Branch—Bro. Clyde Hylton was ordained to the ministry. Elder Luther Bowman brought the message at our home-coming service. The film, Our Bible, How It Came To Be, was shown on three different occasions during November and December. Some of the men from our church attended the district men's banquet. On Jan. 30 the laymen of the church had charge of the morning services. The youth of our church have been holding monthly meetings and attending other activities held throughout the district and region. A Christmas play was presented by our young people. The women's work was organized during the early part of the year and is holding monthly meetings. They have tacked several comforters for relief. The church is in the center of a community improvement project which has done much in creating more co-operation and an improved community.—Reva Reed, Floyd, Va.

First West Virginia

Wiley Ford—The CBYF was in charge of the morning worship service on Youth Sunday, with Norman Harsh, district fieldman, as guest speaker. The young people also presented their annual Christmas play, A light Through Darkness, which was arranged by two members of the group and directed by Mrs. Amos Lambert. The Sunday school also had a Christmas program. Mrs. Carter Malcolm will serve as dean of our Bible school. Our evangelistic meeting was held by Bro. C. O. Brubaker of Lima, Ohio. Twelve new members have been received into our fellowship. The evangelism committee is making plans to go out two by two into the community for an evangelistic campaign. At our quarterly council meeting on Jan. 17, plans were made for our pre-Easter services which will begin on Sunday, April 3, and continue through Wednesday, April 7. These messages will be given by the deacons of the church. Gary Hutt and Jerry Shanholtz have entered B.V.S. The undersigned plans to serve on the Youth Caravan this summer. —Darl Hinkle, Wiley Ford, Va.

"Adding Life to Their Years"

A RAPIDLY changing world, where new inventions, new developments and new problems constantly thrust themselves upon us, is a disturbing world for older people. It is a difficult world also for those younger in years, but they are more resilient if not basically more adequate for meeting the demands of changing times. Many who are older, like this sister in the rocking chair who still reads by her lamp and who lays aside her knitting to pick up the Bible, need the reassurance that the unshaken message of an eternal gospel can give them. They also need the church, not only as a friendly institution that may help provide food and shelter, but as a fellowship in which older people, as well as others, have a vital share. Only as the church makes them an integral part of its life can it succeed in "adding life to their years."

The Gospel Messenger welcomes letters commenting on editorials, articles and news. Letters should be brief and brotherly.

Stand for the Whole Gospel

For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believes. We should not be ashamed of the true gospel. There are many ministers today who are not preaching the true gospel but are preaching a false gospel. There are many church leaders today who do not believe in the blood of Jesus Christ and the second coming of Jesus Christ.

Let us stand for the whole gospel. I believe the whole Bible, not just part of it. How can we dare preach or teach anything else but the whole gospel! For without the shedding of blood there is no remission of sins. There are many church people who are following man's ideas instead of God's way. The Bible is the inspired Word of God. Why should men today change the meaning of the Bible?

The reason I believe is that it says in the Bible in the latter days men will not endure sound doctrine but will heap to themselves teachers having itching ears. They do not want to hear the fundamental gospel. Unless we obey and take the Bible as it is written we will be led astray and be lost eternally.—Harry C. Meyers, Maugansville, Md.

Right Here at Home

Why is it that the Church of the Brethren begins her ministry to the Negro people in the "uttermost parts of the earth," instead of here at "Jerusalem," at our very doors, here at home in America? Is there not a glaring inconsistency in the fact that we can recognize the spiritual needs and soul welfare of the African and completely ignore the sixteen million Negroes right here at home. This is not to say that we are not interested in the African or our work there, but not primarily so. It is to say, and emphatically, that we are justly convicted and deservedly humiliated by the continual and repeated difference between our profession and our performance. We have testified long and loud in the past against the slavery of the body and mind here in our country, and everywhere in the world where it occurs, but it is still an undeniable fact that we haven't turned a hand or a cent to save the soul of a single one of our Negro neighbors right here in our home communities.

The Emancipation Proclamation, now almost a hundred years ago, laid squarely at the feet of the Church of the Brethren, one of her mightiest challenges to practice what she had hitherto so loudly preached and to demonstrate with concrete action, the only possible Christian position on race relations, namely, absolute equality. Of course this could only mean our complete willingness to pay the ultimate price of truly following Christ all the way. Could some one name for us all the Negroes who have gone into Christian service under the inspiration and challenge and preparation and blessing of the Brethren?

The Communist is screaming his boast for all the world to hear, how they are accomplishing their mission work, taking enormous areas of this world and millions upon millions of souls among the earth's dispossessed and underprivileged, and converting them to a Christless communism. In God's reckoning day, what will our answer be? And let no one dare to say the opportunities are limited or nonexistent. If the gospel of Jesus Christ knows no racial barriers, as we all well know it does not, then we must admit that God has given us an eternal and inestimable opportunity to prove this right here at home. Is it not grossly presumptuous, as well as utterly ridiculuous, for us to tell other countries that in Christ there is no color line, and then deliberately separate ourselves from our Negro neighbors?"—H. M. Coppock.

Christian Worship

I want to express deep appreciation for the meditation by John Barwick in the March 12 Messenger. It seems to me that he has genuinely communicated that sense of worship within the total Christian community of which we stand in so sore need today. One hesitates to add any truism to a meditation that communicates so very well the meaning of Christian worship. But should not each one of us raise the question with himself as to whether he finds in the particular vocation to which God has called him that combination of worship in the invisible church and relief of the distressed, which, taken together, define the Christian's life? Surely the gates of hell will not prevail against this church, which nourishes its life in worship with all the saints and which confesses before the world the One who is Lord of the church.—G. Wayne Glick, Lancaster, Pa.

Grow old along with me!
The best is yet to be,
The last of life, for which the first was made:
Our times are in his hand
Who saith, "A whole I planned, Youth shows but half; trust God: see all, nor be afraid!"
—Robert Browning

Adding Life to Their Years

KATHERINE LEE WAHLSTROM, has written a book on activity programs in homes for the aging. The title of this book is Add Life to Their Years. Her concern is that we add life to years, not just years to life.

The problem of aging is very much with us. The 1950 U.S. Census shows that in the decade following 1940, the population of persons 60 to 65 years and older grew to 18,329,012, an increase of 33%. In the U.S. there are more than 30 million persons over 50 years of age; 16½ million over 60; 6 million over 70; 1½ million over 80.

Science has lengthened the life span; the Christian religion has the responsibility to help make those added years creative, serene and satisfying. Our homes for the aging are based on the "inasmuch" philosophy of Jesus not only "to live and let live," but also to help others to live. Jesus said, "I am come that they might have life and that they might have it more abundantly." We shall need more homes for the aging because there will be more and more older people who will need the care that such homes attempt to provide. There are existing homes which now have a waiting list equal to their present capacity.

These homes should be homes rather than institutions. The sooner we deinstitutionalize our homes the sooner we can get to the main business of helping and serving the needs of individual guests in our homes. Likely most of the charters and constitutions governing our older homes need to be changed because of changing concepts about the needs and proper care of the aging. Some constitutions still call the guests in our homes "inmates." It is surprising that some of those visiting a home still speak of and inquire about the "inmates." Such a term carries the idea of ridgidity and impersonality that do not fit with the newer and more enlightened concepts of proper care for the aging.

Who are guests of a home for older people? A consideration of this point is important in relation to the function of a home. It should be recognized in the first place that our modern family life is not geared to taking care of the aging. Our family homes are smaller and the members of the family work away from home. Someone has said that it was easier for a mother to care for six sons than it now is for six sons to care for their mother in her older years. Residence in an institutional home is the answer for such an aging mother.

The Christian church has the responsibility to make the older years creative and satisfying

Often those who seek admission to a home for the aging are the last of a family. Sometimes they are not wanted by other distant relatives. Sometimes the aging one seeks a place which will be more quiet than would be a private home where there are younger people and children. Then there are those who are motivated by the prevalent and quite valid concept of economic independence, using their pensions or social security benefit or state assistance in a way that will have the least degree of social involvements. Many fear what will become of them when and if illness or misfortunes overtakes them. They think that residence in an institutional home would assure not only good treatment but also wise and impartial counsel in emergencies such as adjustment to diminishing financial resources, the need for writing a will, and failing health.

A good home for the aging has few rules as such. The making of many rules invites irritation and antagonism. The best rule is to do what is right always. Rules which are usually agreed upon by all concerned should be scrupulously and meticulously respected. A good home puts emphasise on both guest cooperation and careful, fair and sympathetic management and administration.

Homes located in a town near churches, stores, barber shops and railroad and bus stations have an advantage over those located in the country on busy highways or in secluded spots where they are almost entirely cut off from the social life around them and from public transportation facilities.

Religious services should be adapted to and be an important part of the program of activities of every home. Participation in community activities such as church and other community groups is not only permissible, but is to be encouraged. A Christian family atmosphere should be an important objective in every home. It is essential that the home family be cohesive, sympathetic, patient, forbearing and Christian.

A home for the aging needs a program of rehabilitation. Each member should have an opportunity for creative activity suited to his needs, interests and abilities. The erroneous idea is sometimes allowed to take root and develop that for an aging person there is no more need to engage in normal activities and indeed that this is to be discouraged. Instead, a program of activity composed of creative work, suited to their abilities and planned co-operatively with them; of recreation and fun and fellowship, all of which have a therapeutic value, are of the greatest importance in creating a sense of usefulness and a zest in living which even an aging person should continue to feel.

Normal activity is essential to mental and physical health. Boredom and idleness breed discontent and encourage much more rapid deterioration of the mental and physical faculties than the more normal process of aging brings. Included in such activities might be service projects that will give guests an opportunity for unselfish and cheerful giving. There can be much joy in planning and making gifts for relatives and friends, for children in a neighboring hospital or home or for overseas relief. The spirit of outgoing unselfishness needs special encouragement when one is dependent on others for supplying so many of his needs.

Our Brethren homes generally do not have facilities for the care of guests who need hospitalization or for mental cases. Nor are there places for those who need constant discipline in order to keep them in line with the kind of administration which aims at the welfare of the entire group. Boisterousness, uncleanliness, slovenliness or possessiveness do not make for a whole-

A Service to Older Members

WE WOULD like to suggest to the planners who fill the church year so full of special Sundays that they set aside one week out of each month as a "no-special-emphasis" week. This would give the ministers an opportunity to preach on solid Christian themes and it would certainly be kind to editors.

It looked for a while as if every Sunday in April and May would be a special observance: Palm Sunday, Easter, College Day, Family Week, Mother's Day, Rural Life Sunday and Pentecost were only the most popular. But we found a Sunday free from other claims, so we promptly jumped in to fill the gap by devoting a part of this issue to an age group that is often overlooked by the church.

The church recognizes Children's Day and Youth Week. Mother has her day in May and Father gets a little attention in June. The laymen have their Sunday and the various causes in our church program have their emphases. But until recently we overlooked an important age group, those older members who still have much to contribute to the church and for whom the church can still render a useful ministry.

One aspect of that ministry is reflected in this issue in a leading article by Levi Ziegler and in a series of reports and pictures from our thirteen institutions devoted to "adding life to their years." We hope our readers note these pages not only as information but also as a challenge to the church to provide a broader, more adequate program for its older people.

Specifically there is an urgent need for devoted helpers to assist the staffs of our present homes for the aged. The work is sometimes heavy and the salary may not be high but the opportunity to serve where there is need is real enough. Many of our districts are making progress in providing better facilities for their aged guests, but the need for consecrated and trained personnel is still urgent—K.M.

Advertising in the Gospel Messenger

FOR a number of years the advertising which appeared in the Gospel Messenger was almost exclusively limited to merchandise handled by the Brethren Publishing House. On the recommendation of the Board of Directors of the House, the General Brotherhood Board recently went on record as favoring the opening of Messenger pages for other kinds of paid advertising. There are several reasons why this decision was made.

The costs of printing our church periodicals have increased as steadily in recent years as have other costs. Yet the subscription rates for the Gospel Messenger have been kept at the same low rates that have been in effect for years. Many readers would be willing to accept necessary price increases just as they have done for other papers and magazines they buy. But some would find it difficult to pay more; and the church paper, as a visitor that now reaches about 42,000 homes, would have a less effective ministry if a price increase limited its circulation. Instead of setting a higher subscription rate, the directors of the Publishing House have tried to encourage more hundred per cent clubs, believing that if every church would help every home to have our church paper, our increased circulation would compensate for rising costs.

The response to our club plans has been encouraging. We are gaining slowly in circulation. But each year the Publishing House has taken a loss in the production of a weekly paper at such a bargain rate. A limited amount of paid advertising from outside sources will help to reimburse the House for its losses.

We believe that with careful editorial planning a small amount of advertising space can be made available without noticeable harm to our regular features. Every effort will be made by the management of the Publishing House to secure advertising that is in accord with the purposes of our church, its program and point of view. Already some display advertising and some classified notices have appeared. Our readers may want to call this opportunity to the attention of responsible business rendering services to churches and church members.

Many church periodicals accept outside advertising and for some it may be a major source of income. Such advertising is not new in Brethren periodicals, as former readers of the Inglenook and of early issues of the Gospel Messenger will recall. However, we do not intend to lose sight of the primary purpose of a church periodical, which is to bear witness to the message of Christ as it is expressed through the ministry of the Church of the Brethren. If advertising can make possible that continuing witness and even increase the scope of its outreach, we believe it can be a blessing. If it creates problems we cannot forsee and if it threatens to compromise our witness in any way, certainly the Board will take another look at our policy—K.M

The church is God's means to an end

WHY I AM A PROTESTANT

Jacob F. Replogle

PROTESTANTISM is not a negative religious movement. Neither did it originate totally with Martin Luther about 400 years ago. The beginnings of Protestantism had its roots in the faith of the New Testament.

It is Roy L. Smith who declares that St. Paul, the great apostle, was a Protestant in principle. It is rare to see a Roman Catholic church named after St. Paul. You see, even he realized he owed no man anything for his own spiritual experience. This was something between the Lord and himself. He realized, with Martin Luther, that God's forgiveness was not based on what he, Paul, had done. The Damascus Road experience was a Protestant experience of the coming of Christ to the human heart.

The controversy later to be aired at Jerusalem was the demand of the "Mother Church" that all converts must follow the ritual she prescribed. And Paul's life and writings, especially Galatians, were dedicated to assuring new Christians that they had direct access to God. This is the Protestant faith.

It is a creative spiritual revival of our New Testament faith. A Protestant is not a pro-testant so much as "one who bears witness to his faith."

In the age when the world began to move out of its darkness, up from the Renaissance, the invention of printing, the breakdown of the feudal system, the age of inquiry, men in sundry places searched again God's Word and had a rebirth of personal spiritual power. This was the Reformation. Yes, it was the revolt of common sense against bureaucracy and corruption of an institution financing itself and its building programs by the sale of indulgences, the selling of forgiveness for a mess of pottage, even of the dead from purgatory to heaven for a price.

But Protestantism is more than a revolt of all this. It is the creative revival of New Testament faith. And the Roman Catholic Church has shared in the blessings which the revived church of Christ brought.

This is why I am a Protestant, because Protestantism has held up the New Testament light "that the just shall live by faith." The Philippian jailer found the answer to his question: "What must I do to be saved?" "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." This is the Protestant faith.

Forgiveness of God is not something that can be bought with sacrifices, vigils or penance. It is the free gift of God.

Protestantism declares that no amount of prescribed ritual is necessary except a sincere and contrite heart. This is available to all through the death of Christ. I am a Protestant because I know I have direct access to God and none who is truly penitent is ever turned away. It is not the volume of prayers that count or others interceding for us. Jesus has interceded for us.

Much as we respect and honor Mary, the mother of Jesus, it is impossible to worship her as deity. She was but the handmaid of the Lord, so she herself said. Believing we have access to God, it is unnecessary to solicit the aid of a third party, to pray to Mary for intercession. Here is a theory with no foundation in Scripture, brought in from Greek pagan culture and repudiated by popes. It cannot now be accepted as doctrine. Nothing stands between the soul of man and God but his sin taken away by Christ.

I am a Protestant because of its reliance upon the Bible as our authority and guide. The Roman Catholic Church also believes in the Bible. It believes too that the mind and will of God is recorded in the Bible for man's good. But the difference comes in interpretation. It is their belief that the church is the sole authority for interpretation. Man in himself is incapable of correct interpretation. Thus, the church has the "true teaching," and does not encourage reading the Bible without direction lest the reader be led in error.

The Protestant is the reverse. "Read the Word with an open mind and the Holy Spirit will guide you into all truth." It is one of the fundamental beliefs of Protestantism that God will always meet the honest soul somewhere among the Scripture and lead him into the way of life.

I am a Protestant because I believe the church is God's means to an end but is not the end in itself. The church is democratic in spirit, the fellowship of sinning saints. It is not primarily an institution, authoritarian in power, totalitarian in character. In fact, we oppose political dictatorship and would oppose ecclesiastical dictatorship. As one put it: "We do not propose to be ruled from any Communist Red Square; neither do we propose to be ruled from any cardinal's red hat."

This brings us to the whole matter of religious freedom, and I am a Protestant because of it. It is interesting to note that it is in those countries where Protestant traditions burn bright, that freedom of scientific inquiry, and freedom of man have prospered. As Protestants we have been called to a religion of love and not of fear, of liberty and not of slavery and bondage.

some Christian atmosphere. Getting on one another's nerves, petty jealousies, a bid for favors from the administration are problems which tax the wisdom of the administration which tries to operate in the spirit of Christ.

What is the answer to the problem of caring for the unlovely and the unloved? Is closer screening the answer? When boards of trustees decide what kind of a home they want to be responsible for, plans must be made for a staff which will keep in mind the needs of those in frail health, proper dietetics, sanitation, recreation, morale and spiritual uplift. Closer screening would eliminate applicants who could not well be absorbed. What then is the hope of those who cannot be taken in? It may become necessary to consider grading our homes, assigning a certain specialized care to a given home. Or it may become necessary to include an infirmary and nurses as functional factors in each home to care for the ill. Otherwise, such persons are faced with the possibility of going to a county home or a state hospital.

Granted that the conditions for the operation of a good home are favorable on many counts, the interest and support of the church is needed. The care of our aging people is an opportunity to exemplify the spirit of Jesus. Men's and women's groups can bring much lasting cheer to the guests in our homes by their visits and their gifts, thus letting them know that they are remembered. New linoleum on floors of halls and rooms, new screens for the windows, paint on the walls, fuel for the heating plant, flowers for the tables, improved kitchen and dining room ware, tables and chairs which are cozy and comfortable —these are all things which help. In some cases women's work and missionary societies have brought, prepared and served meals, and men's work groups have painted the outside of buildings. Pastors and their people add much to the morale and spiritual uplift of staff and guests by conducting the regular Sunday services and giving a variety of programs. Program contributions by children are very much appreciated.

The guests of our homes pay for their room and board by all sorts of means: social security, state assistance, railroad pensions, teacher pensions, blind pensions, personal funds, and the aid of relatives and war pensions. Likely most of our homes have charity guests. In some instances there are life maintenance contracts, guests coming on the basis of lump sum cash payment or assigned insurance policies. It is understandable that assigned insurance can become a financial liability instead of an asset as originally intended. Charity cases can be cared for only through the contributions of a home's constituent congregations and by sympathetic groups and individuals. Only so can financial embarrassment on the part of trustees be avoided.

Why should we be in this business? First, because aging people count on this kind of care in their older age. Also, because doing so is in the Christian tradition. When we read such scriptures as John 19:27; Matt. 25: 31-46; Luke 4:18,19, we need no longer ask, "What would Jesus do?" He would do now what he did then.

In spite of the many perplexing problems involved in the care of the aging in our homes—problems of finance, morale, loneliness, adjustment, discipline, adequate housing, sanitation, safety, dietetics, adequate staff, let us move forward and do "greater things than these."

Our homes should be under the direct ownership and control of the church. Administration by trustee boards and superintendents and matrons should be most sympathetic toward the needs of guests. Superintendents and matrons should have advance training for their jobs. They should have some acquaintance with the best thought and practice in the field. An increasing number of books and magazines of a professional nature are current.

Some knowledge of abnormal psychology and pastoral psychiatry are musts for superintendents and matrons. Members of trustee boards also should have office tenure which would allow them to render their maximum usefulness. The care of the aging by the church is a Christian adventure, an adventure which is best consummated in the idea of "adding life to their years."

Wherever I Am

Kirby Page

Wherever I am, there is God,
Every hour of every day, and
I cannot wander beyond
His love and care. He does
Not track me down as a
Divine detective, but seeks
For me as the Good Shepherd.
When I persist in sowing
Evil seed, not even his Love can prevent the reaping
Of an evil harvest. With Integrity he maintains the Moral order, ever keeping
Inviolate all his processes.
The moral law against which
We often throw ourselves is
His holy gift for our Redemption. Nothing can Separate us from his love,
Not even our iniquities.
Before ever we turn to him,
He is eager to grant us
Forgiveness and restitution,
Wisdom and power,
And radiant joy.
It is not his will that Even the least of us
Should perish, but
Have everlasting life.
Wherever I am, there is the Living Christ, as near as to Peter and John in ancient Galilee. He taught
Wonderful words of life,
Poured himself out in Loving kindness, brought hope
To the hopeless, aroused the Hostility of men of power, Remained faithful to the Will of God, was crucified,
Buried in a borrowed tomb,
Rose from the grave on
The first Easter, and, lo,
He is with us always, even
To the end of the world.
Closer than hands or feet
Nearer than breathing,
He is eager to guide us,
Empower us, welcome us
As co-workers in his Father's business.
Speak thou for he hears,
Listen thou for he speaks,
Follow wherever he leads,
And like the men on
The road to Emmaus,
You will feel your heart
Burn within you on the way.

THE CHURCH CARES FOR OLDER MEMBERS

Brethren's Home

BEAUTIFULLY located on eighteen acres of ground, twelve miles east of Gettysburg along U. S. 30, the Brethren's Home at New Oxford, Pa., admitted the first guest on Oct. 20, 1952. Serving the Southern District of Pennsylvania, the home was first chartered on September 14, 1908, and located at Huntsdale, Pa. This home was destroyed by fire January 1951. The present home has a historic background, having originally been built as a barn, converted to a hotel and finally rebuilt and dedicated to the care of the aged. It now stands in this community as a symbol of progress in the Church of the Brethren.

The three-story building of brick construction is rather modern in design. On the inside this is also true. All guest rooms are uniformly furnished and each has running water. An elevator has been installed. The main floor has one section set aside for use as an infirmary, with beds for twelve patients. The lower floor, because of the terrain, is the main floor at the rear of the building. On this level is located the dining room, kitchen, chapel, laundry, furnace and refrigerator rooms.

The grounds around the home are beautifully landscaped, with a pond covering approximately an acre. Nine acres of the ground is cultivated, a portion on which vegetables are raised for use at the Home.

Churches, Sunday schools, women's work groups and individuals throughout the district helped materially by paying for the construction and furnishing of rooms and placing equipment in the home. One of the most recent developments has been the final arrangements for the construction of a water line from the Borough of New Oxford to the home. Work on this has been started.

The home is filled to capacity. Both men and women make up the guests, fifty-five in number. Of this number, thirty-three are members of the Church of the Brethren.

The auxiliary is active in planning special activities for the guests of the home and supplying special programs. A chaplain program has been inaugurated, the work being carried out by the ministers of the Church of the Brethren throughout the district, alternating with ministers from various local Protestant churches. Regular worship is conducted every second Sunday, with Sunday school every Sunday morning.—Esther R. Pentz, superintendent

The Fostoria Home

THE Brethren Home at Fostoria, Ohio, has been serving the twenty-six churches of the Northwestern Ohio District for fifty-three years. It is located on Route 18. Thirty-two guests are being cared for.

The writer and his wife have served the home as superintendent and matron for the past five years. Their help consists of a cook, a housekeeper, two nurses and a young man in alternative service.

The pastors of the district with the help of their churches bring a worship service to the home two Sunday afternoons a month. Once a year we have a homecoming day.

A gas furnace, two electric water coolers and a new roof have been added to the home in the past year.

The women of the district help in the canning of fruit for the home. Now we are starting a new project. The women's work groups are helping to develop occupational therapy in the home. Once a month one of the groups come to the home with a potluck dinner and materials for the minds and hands of the guests. Our goal is to help the guests live a more abundant life and to strengthen the tie between the home church and the church home.

The district conference has appointed a committee to study the possibilities of enlarging the home and expanding its services. The committee is working with the trustee board which consists of Henry Torrence, chairman; Edna Etter, secretary; Claude Miller, treasurer; Dale Moyer; and Carroll Alger.—W. O. Stutzman, superintendent.

The architect's model of the Hillcrest Homes, La Verne, California

Brethren Hillcrest Homes

THE District of Southern California and Arizona in a special business meeting in 1947 authorized the organization of Brethren Hillcrest Homes, elected five directors and instructed them to provide a home for elderly people, especially members of the Church of the Brethren. A tract of six and one-half acres of land was purchased in the northwestern part of La Verne, Calif., and the organization was incorporated. All developments that have been made are on this land.

Three types of service are being offered to people above sixty-five years of age. They are as follows:

1. Lots are provided on which people may build homes and possess them during their lives. Six single residences and four duplex buildings have been erected.

2. One court of nine apartments has been built. People make donations for a life estate in these apartments. Under plans one and two all titles remain in the possession of the organization. The resident has a contract for life tenancy. The institution pays all taxes and insurance. Plans are now being made to build another court somewhat larger than the one now built.

3. The first wing of the main or central building is now being completed at a cost of approximately $60,000. To this building contributions for life tenancy are being made. This building will be completed about April 15, 1955.

This wing is only one of three resident wings of this main building plan. The entire building will provide for sixty residents. A fourth section will have the kitchen, dining room, large lounge and office accommodations.

Most of the lots on this tract have been contracted. All apartments built have been taken with some demands for more. Rooms in the main building are fast being taken.

Outside appraisers have valued the property at over $200,000. The value should be well over $250,000 by the end of this year if present plans are realized. There is a very small indebtedness.

This property will, in a few years, be completely under church ownership control. This will make it possible to give more service to people of limited means.

J. W. Lear has been a solicitor and he and his wife were the leaders in starting the work. Earl Breon is the executive secretary and to him belongs a large share of the credit for the last three years' development. The present board of directors are: the writer, president; Mrs. D. Earl Brubaker, vice-president; H. A. Brandt, secretary; J. D. Reber, assistant secretary; and J. Ross Hanawalt, treasurer.—G. O. Stutsman.

"The aging process may be a period of relative well-being for those who have something to do that they enjoy doing, a zest for life and a religious faith."

Morrison Cove Home

THE Morrison Cove Home for the Aged, Martinsburg, Pennsylvania, observed its fiftieth anniversary in August 1953. The retrospective view aroused by that event gave birth to new hopes and visions of improved facilities and expanded services in the future. Part of the desired improvement, an enlarged, modernized kitchen, was completed at that time and the shining new cabinets, sinks, island work tables, new lighting, all new floor covering and redecorated walls drew much attention.

On request of the trustees the October 1953 Middle Pennsylvania conference authorized an improvement and renovation program of approximately $65,000. That program is now under way. Rooms are being enlarged and private sanitation facilities installed for each guest. Specifications call for all new fixtures, floor covering, improved heating and lighting and redecorated walls. An enlarged utility area is contemplated also, this to include a walk-in cooler and freezer and new laundry equipment. Upon conclusion of the present renovation program attention will be given to the construction of an all-new guest unit.

The normal number of guests is forty-five but this is reduced somewhat at this time because of the improvement operations. The area served by the Morrison Cove Home is confined largely to the Middle District of Pennsylvania since the adjoining districts, Eastern and Western, each maintain a home for the aged. Middle District has approximately twelve thousand members in forty-four congregations.

The obligation of the home to the area served is comprehended in the following statement of purpose: (1) to provide residence for aged members who no longer have relatives or friends to care for them; (2) to provide Christian fellowship and a program of Christian nurture consistent with our ideals; (3) to provide for a continued Christian experience for those whose opportunities are limited by infirmity. The fine spirit of loyalty and co-operation in our people which makes all this possible is the glory of the church.—H. Paul Cox, secretary of trustees.

Girard Home

THE HOME, located at Girard, Illinois, last December celebrated its fiftieth year. At the present the thirty guests, aged from seventy to ninety-five years, fill it to capacity.

Regular church services are held in the Home three times a month; often church groups come to visit and to hold services. Thirteen different groups and organizations helped the guests to have a memorable Christmas.—Mr. and Mrs. Velner Nolen, superintendent and matron.

Neffsville Home

THE Brethren Home of the Church of the Brethren (incorporated title) of Neffsville, Eastern District, Pennsylvania, first began to operate in 1897 in Manheim, Pennsylvania. In 1910 the home was built on the present site near Neffsville. The home is owned by about one hundred and seventy shareholders and operated by a board of six trustees. Any member of the Church of the Brethren can become a shareholder by making a contribution of $10 or more to the institution. Trustees are elected at an annual meeting of the shareholders in November. The board of trustees meet monthly in the home.

There are ninety-two resident guests in the home. Two thirds of these are women and one third men. Of the total number there are forty who are past eighty years old, and seven are past ninety. Included in the number are also five couples. Most of the guests come from the Eastern and North Atlantic Districts of the Eastern Region. All but thirteen are members of the Church of the Brethren. The home is cared for by fifteen workers, four men and eleven women. Two of the men are I-W's working out their alternative service. There is also an assurance filed with the Brethren Service Commission for a refugee girl who is expected to arrive about June.

Regular worship services are held in the chapel for the spiritual needs of the residents: morning worship at 6:40 in which both guests and workers participate. Midweek service on Wednesday evening, Bible study and prayer; and afternoon worship services every two weeks on Sunday. Sunday afternoon services are conducted by ministers from churches across the districts. In addition to the regular schedule many church groups give musical and other programs on alternate Sundays. Missionaries on furlough also visit the home and speak in the chapel.

During the past year some new equipment has been added and improvements have been made. An elevator (twenty-three passenger capacity) and three new oil heating units were installed; the drives and parking lot were macadamized; the interior of the chapel and several rooms were refinished; the entire electric wiring system was overhauled, and a new drinking water cooler was installed.

When Night Draws Near

David M. Miller

When night draws near and I view the past
Of an old man's life that's ebbing fast,
The sweetest memories that come to me
Are little children on my knee.

When night draws near and my work is done
I gaze into the fading sun;
I near the scene where the golden gate
Wide open stands, where loved ones wait.

When night draws near, all the care and strife,
All the joys and tears of a busy life
Are left behind to molder away.
I look beyond to a fairer day.

Mount Morris Home

THE Northern District of Illinois and Wisconsin is served by the Brethren Home at Mt. Morris, Illinois. The capacity of the home is nineteen guests, fourteen women and five men. The home is full and several applications are on the waiting list.

The need for more room has increased for the past few years. We especially need rooms for couples, a three-or four-bed ward for bed patients and outside rooms or cottages for the staff.

In the past few years considerable improvements have been made. The kitchen was completely remodeled and modern equipment installed. All guests rooms, bathrooms and halls were refloored with asphalt tile flooring. All rooms were redecorated and outside buildings improved and rebuilt.

We have Sunday school each Sunday, and the churches of the district conduct services each alternate Sunday. Each denomination of our local community, civic organizations, schools, individuals and churches of the district bring gifts, programs and varied entertainment.

The home is trying to meet the needs of our older folk of the district who need a home.—E. O. and Clara Reed, superintendent and matron.

Fahrney-Keedy Home

COME, spend a day with us at the Fahrney-Keedy Memorial Home. We love visitors, and want you to feel at home. First let us attend morning worship in the chapel and join in our closing theme song, Let the Beauty of Jesus Be Seen in Me.

After breakfast some members help clear the tables, others prepare vegetables, act as hostess, mend, sit with invalids, care for flowers, write letters for or read to the handicapped, enjoy radio or TV, etc.

Thursdays we can expect a women's work group from one of our churches and our folks look forward to their regularly scheduled visits. Other local churches and civic groups also provide entertainment. A special fund provides small birthday gifts on occasion.

Sunday mornings we have Sunday school and church services with people of the community attending. We are in that part of the Beaver Creek congregation known as San Mar, but have our own pastor and administrative committee.

Weekday vespers are conducted by members of the home or staff, our evening theme song being If I Have Wounded Any Soul Today, Dear Lord, Forgive.

We welcome members from all parts of the Brotherhood and our present family numbers fifty-three of whom thirty-four are members of the Church of the Brethren; six occupy the infirmary and fifteen others require partial nursing care.

The churches of Middle and Eastern Maryland lend active support, making possible many improvements, including a new, all electric kitchen, remodeled dining room and furnishings for the new addition. We look forward to the remodeling of the entire old building in the near future.

A ladies' auxiliary is forming, and plans for a hobby room and gift shop are taking shape.—George W. Kunz, superintendent.

Marshalltown Home

THE HOME at Marshalltown, Iowa, formerly supported by the Iowa districts, was sold November 1, 1954, to Bro. Henry Swayer. He and Mrs. Swayer will continue operating it privately as a home for the aged, without respect to denomination. At present there are four persons in the home for whom the districts have responsibility; the districts will continue to provide for their care in the

On November 19, 1954 the enlarged and modernized Fahrney-Keedy home was formally dedicated. C. Ernest Davis, secretary of the Christian Education Commission, was the featured speaker. The new section (top), made possible by the Clarence Keedy memorial fund, provides rooms for forty-six guests, including a twelve-bed health unit. The total capacity is ninety-one. The older part where the new joins is shown at the bottom. Guest rooms will be modernized as funds are available home. In the future, each district will have the choice of sending its aged people either to the home at Marshalltown or to the regional home at McPherson, Kansas.—Lloyd W. Klotz, secretary.

Mexico Welfare Home

THE Mexico Welfare Home, now known as the Church of the Brethren Home, Inc., is located in the town of Mexico, Indiana, five miles north of Peru, Indiana, on state road 31.

This home serves the three church districts of Indiana, and at the present time has sixty-five guests. It is very ably supervised by Bro. O. A. Mathias as superintendent and Sister Mathias as matron, under the direction of the board of nine trustees —three from each district. The trustees meet quarterly. From this board an executive committee is chosen to meet monthly or as the need may require.

Recently the home underwent a complete remodeling program at a cost of more than seventy-five thousand dollars. This includes a hospital unit separate from the main building, where twelve patients can be accommodated and cared for by a twenty-four-hour nursing service. Food is also prepared in this unit for the patients. This unit has proved very helpful.

The remodeling provided a dining room for eighty persons; also a beautiful chapel where the guests meet for worship. Sunday afternoon programs are provided by the churches in this area.

The Mexico Church of the Brethren is located one block from the home, to which those who are able can go for morning worship. The latest project has been the construction of cottages near the main building which are equipped for light housekeeping. The guests in these cottages are under the same supervision as those in the main building. The cottages are not built by the home, but by persons desiring to become guests of the home during the remainder of their natural life. At their demise the cottages become the property of and under the full control of the home. Those who build a cottage also contribute a sum of money large enough to care for them on a basis of life expectancy. Seven of these cottages have been built in the last few years.

The home owns approximately one hundred twenty acres of land, now operated by a tenant. At the present time all available rooms are occupied and others are on the waiting list.—Leroy Fisher, vice-chairman of the Board of Trustees.

Windber Old Folks Home

SITUATED on a sunny eastern slope, backed up by an apple orchard, the Western Pennsylvania Home for the Aged came into existence out of a fine Christian idealism, that older folk, no longer able to care for themselves, should have a comfortable home under the Christian influence to which they were accustomed. A small farm was purchased at the western end of Windber and on this ground in 1921, the present commodious building was completed. The farm house on this site has been remodeled and is occupied by those who serve the guests. The barn, also in splendid shape, is used in the limited farming operations.

The home, like many Christian enterprises, began its existences with limited finances, suffered heavily in the 30's because of the depression and therefore leaned heavily upon the district. With the coming of state assistance for the aged, the finances of the home have improved. The trustees have been able to put the plant in fine shape, add an elevator, complete the third floor, and provide other needed conveniences. The number of guests has grown from about twenty in the beginning to eighty at the present time who are being cared for by a staff of sixteen persons.

Last year, the writer assumed the responsibilities of a pastor-superintendent and Mrs. Paul became home mother. A splendid relationship exists between the supporting district and the home. The pastor has appeared in a number of the churches in the interests of the home; the churches were most generous in the fall harvest festival. The ministers of the district conduct the Sunday afternoon worship period in a very helpful manner.

Physical and spiritual needs of the guests are well provided for. A difficult area, and a needful one, is that of providing interesting leisure-time activities. A beginning has been made for the men with the construction of a shuffleboard court and providing a place to play horseshoes. Plans are to do more for both men and women.

An average of two or three applications for admission are received each week, testifying to the fact that the care of the aged is a growing national concern because of the increase of the life span of man.—I. C. Paul, superintendent.

The Cedars

THE CEDARS, a Church of the Brethren home for the retired citizens of the Western Region, has a capacity of thirty-two guests. A part of the employes use some of the rooms for living quarters. We are at present caring for twenty-two guests. The area of the Brotherhood that The Cedars serves is all districts of Kansas, Nebraska, Oklahoma, Middle and Southern Missouri districts.

Churches and individuals have helped in many ways, given money for a room, raised enough money for a new piano, new hymnals, etc. Many organizations and groups give special programs for which the home is very grateful. The Council of Churches of McPherson takes care of the Sunday afternoon chapel services.

We are starting twenty-four-hour nursing care and adding some new equipment so that we will be in better position to care for convalescent guests and those that need special care. The future plans for The Cedars as money becomes available is to build two more units, a part to be used for hospital service.—Orval Wagner, manager.

Greenville Home

THE Brethren's Home of Greenville, Ohio, is located at the southwestern edge of the city on forty acres of farm land. It is on state route 121 and U.S. 36. This home was started in 1902 to care for the unfortunate children and the aged who needed help in our district. Later the home was closed to children and the buildings were enlarged from time to time until at present it can accommodate about sixty residents. The new addition, which was completed during 1953, provides twenty-two additional rooms, including an office, a six-bed invalid room, a lovely living room where the residents can entertain themselves with television or can entertain their guests. The new elevator makes the second floor accessible for those who find stairs a hardship.

Our beef, pork, poultry and some vegetables are raised here on the farm and we process our own meat and enjoy the convenience of a walk-in freezer and cool room.

The chapel was enlarged, redecorated and is a most attractive worship center for the residents and visitors. The various churches of the district lead a devotional program each Sunday afternoon in the chapel.

The management has felt that the people who make this their home should have a continuing interest in the general work of the church. At various times we have educational pictures, such as slides and filmstrips, showing the work of the church; also, we have invited missionaries and others to give programs for the folks here. Last Christmas we decided to use the money that we usually use for exchange of gifts to buy a heifer for the Heifer Project. Last fall this home was host to the trustees and superintendents of the homes and other interested persons in this region. This meeting proved very beneficial to those privileged to attend.—Ira C. Mikesell, superintendent

WHEN "LET" MEANS "HINDER"

Luther A. Weigle

IF YOU will turn to your Webster's New International Dictionary you will discover that there are two verbs spelled and pronounced exactly alike, let, which come from two distinct Anglo-Saxon roots. The one verb let means to hinder, impede or prevent; the other means just the opposite, to permit or allow. Both were in current use in 1611; both are used in the Bible and in Shakespeare. But only the second remains a part of living English today; the first survives only as a noun in the legal phrase, "without let or hindrance" and in the game of tennis, where anything that interrupts or hinders the game and requires a point to be played again is called a "let."

In Shakespeare's Henry V, the Duke of Burgundy, suing for peace with England, and speaking of the ruin that continued war entails, says:

"My speech entreats
That I may know the let, why gentle Peace
Should not expel these inconveniences
And bless us with her former qualities."

When Hamlet's friends seek to restrain him from following the beckoning ghost of his father, he cries:

"Unhand me, gentlemen.
By heaven, I'll make a ghost of him that lets me."

This obsolete use of the verb let appears three times in the King James Version of the Bible. In Isa. 43:13 God speaks through the prophet: "There is none that can deliver out of my hand: I will work, and who shall let it?" The revised versions have "who can hinder it?" Paul writing to the Romans (1:13) tells that he had "oftentimes purposed" to come to them, but that he "was let hitherto"; the Revised Standard Version renders this, "I have often intended to come to you, but thus far have been prevented."

The other occurrence is in 2 Thess. 2: 6-7, where the King James Version reads: "And now ye know what withholdeth that he might be revealed in his time. For the mystery of iniquity doth already work: only he who now letteth will let, until he be taken out of the way." The obscurity of these verses is increased by the use of the word "letteth" in verse 7 for the Greek word which was translated "withholdeth" in verse 6. The Revised Standard Version reads: "And you know what is restraining him now so that he may be revealed in his time. For the mystery of lawlessness is already at work; only he who now restrains it will do so until he is out of the way."

Down the Middle of the Road

Richard A. Grumbling

AS WE think of the many, many, different brands of so-called Christianity, we are made to wonder what has happened back along the roadway of life and whether this could possibly please our Lord. In our own esteemed Protestantism, the variations are so numerous that the average person begins to wonder just where the middle of the road is.

There have been many good folk who have left the middle of the road, all the way down through the history of Christendom; some of them bumping along on the berm for a while and then finding their way back onto the road, others getting off entirely on one side or the other. A study of the causes will divulge the fact that in practically all cases their attention had been diverted by someone or something along the road.

No matter how good a driver one may be, in our motorized age if he wants to stay on the road he must learn to keep his eyes on it. This holds true just as well in keeping on the "straight and narrow" road, that we enter upon when we become Christians. The only possible way to stay on this road is to keep our eyes fixed steadfastly on Christ and his Word and contend for the faith that was once delivered to the saints.

Let us take a brief look at some of the possible reasons why so many individuals and even many groups of people fail to keep in the middle of the road. We will not try to enumerate the various diversions that get people to veering off to one side or the other. If anyone will just take the time to look around at the multitude of new doctrines and teachings that continue to pour forth through the mails, and sometimes over the radio, he will have his own answer to this perplexing problem.

Now for a glimpse at our own beloved church to get an idea of what I am trying to say. We certainly must believe that back in 1708, when our church was founded, those eight sincere souls started down the middle of the road, after groping their way back to it out of Pietism and state controlled religions. Then early in the history of our church we read of a group getting off the road and of several other groups during the first two centuries, that seemed unable to keep their attention focused in the right direction.

But as we look back at the things that diverted their attention and led them (so to speak) astray, we must admit that at least they were aimed at separation from the world, namely, such things as mode of dress and other aspects of the so-called simple life. And even though it might seem like much foolishness to some of our present-day Brethren, yet we believe that they were conscientious in what they did. Therefore, we might even allow that perhaps they did not get off on the wrong side altogether. Because we did not follow them gives us no right to condemn them. But what about the beam in our own eye?

By taking a little inventory of our present-day church we will be able to see how good our steering has been in keeping in the middle of the road. When we see all the secularism, socialism and the host of man-made doctrines, creeping into our churches and diverting the attention of the Brethren, it can only make you wonder how anyone can remain in the middle of the road. These things are all too real. We should realize that when anyone leaves the spiritual highway, through letting such things divert their attention, they are without a doubt gone off on the wrong side.

What can we do about it? First, we must get back into the middle of the road by sincere repentance; a general call to repentance by our leaders would be in order. Then we will have to forsake everything that would tend to blur our vision or interfere with our steering. Second, we must remain there by constant vigilance, study of the Word, revival of our prayer life and a daily reconsecration to the Master by turning away from friendship with the world and from the reading of the conglomeration of false literature that is sent or handed to us. Third, by letting our light shine before men through the personal witness of a dedicated life and a testimony of Christlike living, inviting others everywhere to join us in this wonderful journey down the middle of the road that leads to that eternal City of Zion.

Reviews of Recent Books

Books are reviewed here as a service to the church. A review does not necessarily constitute an unqualified recommendation. Purchase can be made through the Brethren Publishing House, Elgin, Illinois. Titles recommended for church libraries are marked with an asterisk (*).—Editor.

The Orbits of Life. Jack Finegan. Bethany Press, 1954. 160 pages. $2.50.

Here is a book of richly documented, Bible-centered essays which would have been excellent college chapel talks or good sermons for any church. The messages are most practical pointers for achieving Christian nonchalance toward peril, things and fears, and Christian growth in patience, wisdom, service and righteousness.

Dr. Finegan is a brilliant, widely learned young Bible teacher, already well known for several varied volumes both scholarly and popular. This book would be most helpful reading for youth, as well as for those who must often deal with the great questions youth ask.—Edward K. Ziegler.

How to be a Modern Leader. Lawrence K. Frank. Association Press, 1954. 64 pages. $1.00.

In this little book you will find the latest insights on the old problems of leadership. Careful attention to the message of this book will enable you to avoid some mistakes and will improve your chances of success in the work you are called on to do with groups, large or small.—C. Ernest Davis.

KINGDOM GLEANINGS

Secretarial Help Needed

Applicants for the positions now open in the Brotherhood offices must have either business training beyond high school or satisfactory office experience or both. Shorthand is not essential and in one position some literary ability and interest in journalism is more important than typing speed. Qualified secretaries can render significant and needed service to the church. If interested, write General Brotherhood Board, 22 South State St., Elgin, Ill., for information on openings and working conditions.

Those planning to make recordings of the 1955 Annual Conference sessions are reminded to register with the Visual Education Department, General Brotherhood Board, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill. Registration fee is $2.00.

Wendell Eller of Salem, Va., now employed in the audio-visual department of the Division of Christian Education, National Council, in Chicago has accepted the call of the General Brotherhood Board to the position of director of audio-visual education. Bro. Eller will assume this position sometime during the summer.

Brethren living in St. Petersburg, Fla., held services for the first time this past winter in the homes of the members. A promising number of the forty known to be living in the city attended services looking forward to the organization of a new church. Those knowing of Brethren residing in St. Petersburg please send the names and addresses to M. E. Kruger, 320 Kingston St., S., St. Petersburg 7, Fla.

The second annual retreat for pastors and their wives is planned for June 14 at Grand Rapids, Mich., by the Pastor's Association and the Ministry and Home Mission Commission. Dr. Joseph H. Jackson, pastor of the largest Negro church in the world, located in Chicago, will be the guest leader. Session will be planned for the pastors and their wives together and some for pastors and wives separately. The annual pastors and wives dinner will be on that evening. Sessions for this retreat will be held in the Black and Silver Room of the Civic Auditorium of Grand Rapids.

A new congregation of the Church of the Brethren has been organized in the Madison Heights area of North Detroit, according to Ernest R. Jehnsen, Michigan district executive secretary. The new church is the outgrowth of local, district and Brotherhood co-operation. The district board has purchased a used church building on Eleven Mile Road and Brush Avenue as a temporary location for the congregation. Bro. William Kidwell, a Bethany senior, has accepted the call to become pastor of the church. An official name will be chosen soon and formal services will begin on May 1.

Lanark church, Ill., invites any Brethren from the West going to Conference to stop and worship with them. The members will provide free lodging on both June 11 and 12 and a basket dinner after worship on Sunday morning. Lanark is on U.S. 52 and state routes 64 and 72 and directly west of Chicago. Lorrel S. Eikenberry is pastor of the church.

The Hymn Society of America is seeking new hymn texts that express the needs and aspirations of people in the churches and communities of rural America. The hymns should be written in well-known meters to be found in standard church hymnals. More than one can be submitted by an author and should be sent to the Hymn Society at 297 Fourth Ave., New York 10, N. Y., not later than May 1.

Act Now or Forever . . . Prepare for War

The UMT-National Reserve Plan bill (was H. R. 2967 now changed to H. R. 5297), which intends to fasten a permanent universal military training and compulsory reserve program upon the nation, has been undergoing revision since it was not satisfactory when it first came before the House Armed Services Committee. Only government and military spokesmen were invited to sit in on this revision — no opponents of the bill were invited! It now appears that after all the sifting and pruning, the subcommittee has come out with a form of the bill that grants the Pentagon almost exactly what they originally requested.

Evidence seems to reveal that few desirable changes are coming out of the revision. The whole proposition with all its military implications will be voted on by the full committee on April 18. In spite of the opposition that has already been brought to bear, we must do more. Your congressman may be home over the Easter vacation (April 1-13). If so a group from your church should plan to visit him. Your pastor and superintendent have been receiving weekly reports on the progress of this bill. If it is not possible to visit him, write your congressman today and also to Carl Vinson, Chairman, House Armed Services Committee, House Office Building, Washington 25, D. C., and to other members of the House Armed Services Committee.

Presbyterian U.S.A. Board Votes to Transfer Indian Property Titles

The transfer of the titles to all property held in northern India by the Presbyterian U.S.A. Board of Foreign Missions to "properly constituted and approved" native trust associations was voted by the board at a recent meeting. In the future missionaries will be known as fraternal workers and the mission will turn over its "rights, duties and responsibilities" to the Kolhapur Church Council. The latter action includes work assignments for missionaries, request for new personnel and responsibility for all institutions.

Survey Charts Population Trends

America is becoming more and more a land of preschool-age youngsters and aging adults, but the nation's churches still gear their programs to other population groups now in actual decline. This fact was revealed in the findings of a study of population trends by the Division of Christian Education of the National Council of Churches.

In twenty years the number of Americans sixty-four or older will jump from about fourteen million to more than twenty million, while the increase of children under five years of age will outstrip all other age brackets. Both age groups of the fastest increase are largely leisure-time groups.

Evangelical Church for Peace and Reunion

A church conference was held at Hanover in Germany, consisting of members of all the Evangelical churches on both sides of the iron curtain. In accordance with the suggestions made by this conference, the Council of the Evangelical Church in Germany decided to send the following message to the churches in Eastern and Western Germany:

"The Evangelical Church feels that it has a clear task at the present time. Like all the German people, it urgently desires the reunion of the German people and will do whatever it can to help bring about this reunion. The church warns people against the false hope that the existing tensions in the world, and particularly the splitting of Germany, could be overcome by means of war. The church of Christ works to promote peace."

Evangelicals Launch Newspaper Ad Campaign

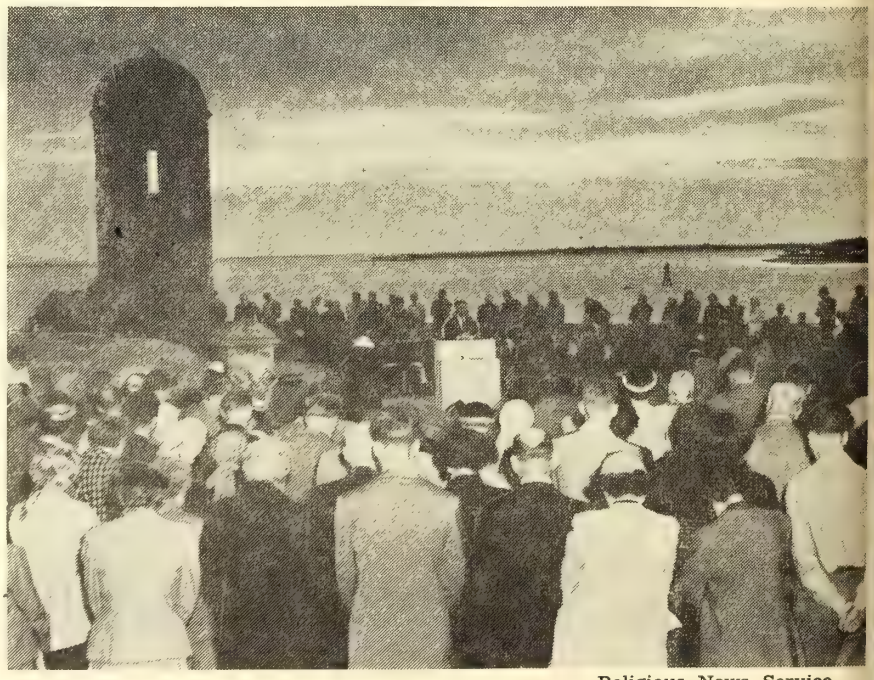
The launching of an advertising campaign by the National Association of Evangelicals to expound "the evangelical Protestant position as based on the Word of God" was announced by Dr. Clyde W. Taylor, the organization's secretary of affairs.

The association plans to provide free of charge to local groups that will sponsor them in community newspapers, mats for an initial series of thirty ads in three groups of ten each. Dr. Taylor said the ads were designed to meet a long-existing need for clarifying the Protestant position.

Report Growth of Lutheran Churches

Membership in Lutheran churches throughout the world is now estimated at more than 75,000,000, according to Bishop Hanns Lilje of Hannover, the president of the Lutheran World Federation.

Protestant leaders from three iron curtain countries, who attended the annual meeting of the Lutheran World Federation's executive committee, reported that their churches were able to work "unhindered by our governments." This statement was made by representatives from Poland, Hungary and Romania. There are now 220,000 Protestants in Poland, over 500,000 in Hungary, and the number of Romanian Protestants has increased from 100,000 to 220,000 since the war.



List Principles for German Television

The Protestant and Catholic Television Commissions have worked out principles for the German television program and sent them to the authorities responsible for German television. Concerning the protection of religious sentiment, the principles state:

"Television must not broadcast any program which might disturb religious concord. If God is referred to or described, and when different forms of worship and church symbols are represented, this calls for great reverence. Nothing must be shown that is blasphemous, contemptuous or destructive of faith or which might prove hurtful to religious sentiment."

Olathe Church of the Brethren

Mrs. Blanche Kramer

THE COMPLETELY remodeled structure of the new house of worship for the Church of the Brethren of Olathe, Kansas, was dedicated Oct. 31, 1954.

The Olathe church was organized in 1891 with approximately twenty families as charter members. They held services in schoolhouses until the existing church was built in 1893. Bro. George Wise was the head carpenter of the building and his helpers were Brethren N. W. Riffey, S. R. Riffey and son, Alva, William Brunk, J. W. Morgan and J. Hollinger.

During the ministry of Bro. L. A. Whitaker the basement was completed, providing a dining hall and classrooms.

The new structure provides an assembly room, two classrooms, baptistry, rest rooms, basement under main building with classrooms and kitchen facilities. The addition of a spire has enhanced the appearance of the building which is located on the corner of Elm and Pine Streets.

The project of building a new church proved to be of great inspirational value to the entire membership. All took part, giving of their time and labor which was a great saving on the cost of the building.

The church on which the remodeling was done was built in 1893, remodeling began March 24, 1954, and was completed Oct. 31, 1954, costing approximately $8,000.

The present officers of the church are Leonard Lowe of Topeka, Kansas, elder; James Hickman, minister, Robert Kramer, Clarence Harris, Glen Buckman and Rudy Whitney, trustees.

Dedication services were held Oct. 31, 1954, at 2:30 p.m. with 184 attending. Milton Early, pastor at Morrill, Kansas, gave the dedicatory address on the subject, This Our Church.

Unitarian, Universalist Publications to Merge

Two of the oldest continuously published religious journals in the United States, the Universalist Leader and the Christian Register (Unitarian), will be merged into a single monthly publication. The reorganization is being undertaken as part of the unification of the publications divisions of the American Unitarian Association and the Universalist Church of America.

An impressive list of great names in American literature and public life have written for one or another of these Unitarian and Universalist publications. Among them were Henry David Thoreau, James Russell Lowell, Ralph Waldo Emerson, Theodore Parker, and Clara Barton.

Evangelisches Hilfswerk in Austria

Hans Schager

Reprinted from the Information Bulletin of the Austria "Inner Mission," November 1954. One third of Brethren Service material aid supplies sent to Austria are distributed by Hilfswerk. Paul Weaver, Huntington, Indiana, Brethren Volunteer, is on the Hilfswerk staff.

THE scene was the first postwar winter. To the hardships and terrors of the past year, to the uncertainty of the following days was added the trouble of caring for daily life, especially in the metropolis, Vienna. During this time Pastor Traar, in accord with the bishop, appealed to the communities of the provinces, Upper Austria and Burgenland, to donate food supplies to meet the need and relieve starvation especially predominant in Vienna households. The potatoes and vegetables which arrived in Vienna from these two provinces as a result of the appeal of Pastor Traar and the bishop seemed to the recipients like a miracle sent by heaven.

Through this action—without the participants realizing it—the Evangelisches Hilfswerk was founded. When, in 1946 Pastor Heinrich Hellstern and Pastor Richard Stahelin came to Vienna as the first brethren from abroad and among other things extended an invitation to a secretaries' conference for interchurch aid, Pastor Traar was appointed by the bishop. . . . Shortly after, the writer began his work with Evangelisches Hilfswerk, and has continued to the present as business manager. The first shipments of food and clothing followed soon in a steady flow of goods from the World Council of Churches, the Lutheran World Federation, the Brethren Service Commission, the Norwegian, Swedish and Danish churches and others. . . .

Tens of thousands have been assisted. Priority in the distributions was given to people who had suffered from bombing, to expellees, to old people, to single persons and to many others. Through the opening of a feeding kitchen warm noon meals could be served to approximately 2,500 persons per day. All these programs were carried through not only in Vienna, but also in other provinces of Austria.

The vast majority of the gifts was and is still being used for individual relief. The work of Hilfswerk covers the entire nation of Austria. Our work though would not be possible without the co-operation of the individual parishes. Through the work of Evangelisches Hilfswerk in Austria the feeling of belonging to a parish should be strengthened. In addition to this principle, members of the parish should receive the feeling that they are not alone in their plights, but that the world-wide brotherhood is aware of their needs and sorrows and is ready to help. Thus it is clear that the selection of needy cases is the responsibility of the parishes. If the persons who are considered to be covered by a distribution are refugees, they are additionally assisted by the respective provincial offices of the Evangelisches Fluchtlingshilfe (refugee aid), which maintains close working contact with Evangelisches Hilfswerk. We are further charged with a special responsibility for the existing Protestant homes and institutions. It is also primarily food and clothing which is distributed to them. Although it is not possible through this material help to cover all the costs involved in providing places free of charge or places at a reduced price for people needing care in old folks' homes or other institutions, it still helps make possible that homes and institutions are often in a position to help in special emergencies.

During the summer months there are vacation programs which enable youngsters who live in barracks all year, to spend four weeks in a completely changed environment. Many weak and undernourished children have recovered strength through sufficient and nutritious meals.

In 1954, a food contribution of 44,000 kilos (1 kilo is approximately 2 pounds) to cover 110,000 days of feeding was made available. Many children were given a much needed vacation through the joint efforts of Evangelisches Hilfswerk and Evangelisches Fluchtlingshilfe.

A matter of special interest for Evangelisches Hilfswerk are the various international work camps. These work camps received as much aid as possible from Hilfswerk regardless of the project.

Besides the activities listed above, Hilfswerk is always prepared to relieve need in all special emergencies. The last emergency help Hilfswerk gave was during the flood in Austria. Prior to that, assistance was given to the victims of the great avalanche catastrophe. The feeding programs for pupils which have been set up during the first years after the war were continued and assisted further by Hilfswerk.

To close this article a few figures taken from the nine months report of 1954 might illustrate the work carried out by Hilfswerk.

During the period of nine months (first nine months of 1954) a total of 400,000 kilos of food supplies and 100,000 kilos of used clothing and shoes were distributed. The distribution of 50,069 food packages along with a total of 258,827 kilos shows a considerable increase over the past year. Through direct distribution to individuals 4,152 persons have been assisted. In addition to this many thousand cases have received help through the clothing we have distributed to the parishes.

We have first of all to be very grateful to our brothers and sisters in the wide world who make it possible for us to administer aid in such a large scale in our home country. Among many others it is especially the Brethren Service Commission, the Hilfswerk of the Evangelical Churches in Switzerland, Lutheran World Federation and the World Council of Churches whose assistance and co-operation makes such a generous service to others possible.

BRETHREN VOLUNTEER SERVICE

Eighteen are enrolled in the present B.V.S. unit, which began training on March 1, 1955. This is smaller than the rest of the units during the year, but a little larger than the unit last March. If the enrollment for the June unit continues as expected, the year will be a record year for B.V.S.

The new unit members are as follows: Donna Baker of Hollansburg, Ohio; Donald Ballinger of Marion, Ohio; John Becker of Elizabethtown, Pa.; Vivian Blough of Hollsopple, Pa.; Glenn Haldeman of Manheim, Pa.; George Jenkins and Charlotte LaRue, both of Rodney, Mich.; Gareth Lease of Frederick, Md.; Shirley McCracken of Jonesboro, Tenn.; David McRae of Berkeley, Calif.; Ronald Moyer of Vernfield, Pa.; Heinz Regenbogen of Kassel, Germany; William Sherman of Kansas City, Mo.; Curt Weddle of Girard, Ill.; Donald Werner and Wilma Werner, both of Milledgeville, Ill.; Jack Wilt of Scalp Level, Pa.; Shirley Zimmerman of Bridgewater, Va.

GERMANY

Harold Brubaker tells of his work at the Lichtenau hospital near Kassel. The hospital is also equipped as a trade school for crippled boys between fourteen and twenty years of age. Harold works on construction and maintenance work for eight and one-half hours each day and five on Saturday. After this assignment he will go to Berlin to a permanent assignment working with refugees in that city.

Donna Sooby reports on her time for the past year assisting in a children's home in Krefeld, Germany. She worked an average of sixty-five hours per week. In the children's home she did the usual work of helping care for children in a situation where everyone needed to work hard as these homes are almost always understaffed. In the material aid program she served 449 families (approximately 2,500 people) during 32 distributions.

Joanne Nesler reports, "Last week the weather was very cold and many, many people came to the office asking for food. It is very difficult to turn these people away with nothing when you know that the little money that they do have has to be spent for coal to heat their one room and then there is not enough left to buy food for their families to eat. We are trying to work as closely with the organizations as possible. We usually give them a bit of fat and a pound of butter and then recommend their going to one of these organizations. There were also some people coming from the East Zone trying to get a start here in the West Zone.

PUERTO RICO

Walter Keiser reports 300 baby chicks, 7 baby goats, 1 calf and 29 baby pigs. Many of these babies will go to 4-H club members and to individuals who wish to improve or start better stock. The agriculture department is furnishing materials for a new bull pen and donating a purebred bull to the project. This is in co-operation with the program to improve livestock on the island.

Dr. Friesen reports an increase in extractions, from 442 in January to 566 in February; eight dentures and five bridges were completed besides other dental operations.

Is the Church Meeting the Needs of Older People?

H. L. Hartsough
North Manchester, Indiana

WE DARE not ignore this question. In five years one out of every eleven of us Americans (more than fifteen million) will be over sixty-five years of age. After a rather extensive study of the problem, I would like to answer it in the affirmative. At least we are on the way. We must put our heart into this business.

If a man in our community is hurt by an accident, we do all we can to help him. We must be as deeply concerned if he is hurt by old age. Older people want reasonable respect and a chance to live. They want something to live for. If you are not old, you are on the way. Prepare for that day in character and disposition as well as in material things. If we do, our last years will be a climax rather than an anticlimax. There is a real awakening in this field, Will the church be out in front?

The greatest hindrance to our ministry in this field is our failure to recognize the need. For some time the church has been giving special attention to children's work, to the building of an adequate program for junior high youth and our young people and to our growing adult Bible classes. These has been a serious neglect of our older people.

In order to make a rather comprehensive study of our ministry to older people, I asked fifty pastors of the Central Region what special ministry they are giving to older people. Evidently that was a rather sensitive question. Perhaps it is because our pastors are modest in discussing their achievements. At least, many of the answers I received were apologetic. There is evidence that this is a neglected field. However, records show that our pastors are trying to give a constructive ministry to their older members. The following are a few of the sixty answers given by the pastors:

We have a special church service once each year honoring our older people.

We try to help them forget their age and be normal.

Plan a Golden Year party for all past sixty-five.

Remember their birthdays in a special way.

Have helpful literature available for them.

Organize them into a club for study or hobbies.

Record the morning service for shut-ins.

See that they get invited into homes for fellowship.

Use them in preparing church programs.

Give them an opportunity to call in homes.

Let them help in evangelistic calling.

Entertain at Sunday dinner its older members.

Ask the older ladies to give a lift to busy mothers.

See that the older ladies get to aid society.

Get the older men to the men's meeting.

Hold group prayer meeting in homes of older people.

Use older people on boards and committees when possible.

Take home department literature to shut-ins.

Encourage them to help in material needs of the church.

Ask them to do odd jobs at the church.

Purchase library books especially for their use.

Have a committee to find things for older people to do.

Recognize people celebrating fiftieth wedding anniversary.

The little study I have made of our ministry to older people has revealed more than I expected. It gave me another look into the pastor's heart. Each letter I received from the pastors who were trying to explain what kind of ministry they were giving to older people unconsciously revealed the true shepherd heart. Almost without exception they said, "We have not done enough." There you have it. The shepherd reaching out to outdo himself in kind, helpful service. Always condemning himself for not doing more. Again I take off my hat to God-called, sincere pastors who are giving themselves to their ministry.

Corson from A. Devaney

All people should constantly prepare themselves in character and disposition, as well as in material things, for the leisure time that will be theirs during the years of their older age

At the Anderson Youth Conference last August two young persons look over the National Youth Project display. In 1953-54 CBYF groups supported the Brotherhood Fund "around the clock . . . around the world" for one full week

Youth looks at

The Almighty and the Dollar

SUMMONED by the current CBYF theme, For the Glory of God and My Neighbor's Good, many youth are striving to witness Christian beliefs in personal and social relationships. In response to this call, Brethren youth are demonstrating that time, abilities, possessions and money are all vital in seeking his kingdom.

Through the sharing of time and talents, hundreds of Brethren youth have spent weeks, months or years as full-time workers in church-sponsored relief and rehabilitative, educational, evangelistic and missionary projects. Glorifying God and witnessing to neighbor has engaged the time and talents of 680 Brethren Service volunteers, 500 alternative service men, 1,200 work campers, 28 youth caravaners, and hundreds of CBYFers in local and district programs.

Coinciding with the giving of time and talent, Brethren youth are also discovering a joy in the stewardship of money. Whether received as compensation for time and talents or as an allowance, all money is a trust from God. Offerings through the church represent personal investments in Christian work.

Last year giving by young people to programs within the Brotherhood Fund increased forty-five per cent over giving of the former year. A major factor in this increment is the new concept of their giving to the church program. Rather than singling out specific needs, the young people contributed to total Brotherhood Fund program, encompassing home and foreign missions, Brethren service, Christian education and general services. For periods of time ranging from two minutes to two hours, scores of local youth fellowships provided support for the Brotherhood work "around the clock . . . around the world."

Last October the National Youth Cabinet enthusiastically adopted the total Brotherhood Fund program as their project for this fiscal year, increasing the goal from $24,452 to $32,055. Last year's goal was for one week's support; this year's, for nine days.

During April and May many CBYFs are establishing goals which they expect to realize before the end of the fiscal year, Sept. 30. The cost per minute for underwriting the total Brotherhood Fund program is $2.47; per hour, $148.40; per day, $3,561.65. CBYF leaders are urged to report goals soon to the Brotherhood Fund Department, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill., for publication in Horizons. Remittances, to be sent through district youth treasurers or directly to the General Brotherhood Board, are accorded credit for the Brotherhood Fund giving of churches and districts as well as for the National Youth Project.

Active participation in the church launches youth into a life committed to the glory of God and to their neighbors' good. The fulfillment of stewardship practices helps focus on Almighty God as central and on dollars and abilities and time as subservient in seeking his kingdom.—Howard E. Royer.

Nine days' support of the Brotherhood Fund — a goal amounting to $32,055 — was adopted as a project by the National Youth Cabinet convening in Elgin, Ill., last fall. Many CBYFs are currently establishing goals to be reached by Sept. 30

Harl L. Russell, secretary of the Brotherhood Fund, points out to two Bridgewater College students that stewardship embraces the right use of time, talents and money. The background exhibit also appeared at the National Youth Conference

Brubaker

YOUR parcel of lovely little dresses came last week and today I want to tell you a little about some of the girls who have received the dresses. It seems that each one has a story all her own.

Hyelni (God gave me) is Hirku's daughter. She is an older girl in the family and sometime ago Hirku had twins. I am sure you have heard something about what usually happens to twins in this land. In many places they are just put out in the bush to die. Some places one is killed or left to die without food. In the old Buraland twins very seldom grew up not only because they were thought to have evil spirits but also because often the mother could not furnish them with enough milk. But Hirku was here near the hospital. She was farther away from the old pagan family ties, from those who would have told her that twins were very bad luck. And that is where Hyelni comes into the story because since here a baby goes everywhere on its mother's back, Hirku, of course, needed another back. And Hyelni must do her big sister's part and take care of one of the babies. Usually when one baby wakens and wants to be fed mother and daughter trade babies and the one who has been with mother takes a nap on big sister's back while they go to carry water from the river or to hoe.

Six of the girls are leprosy patients in our Leprosarium. Some of them had to leave their parents and families and come many miles away to stay here in the Leprosarium where they can get medicine. The parents at home are really supposed to support their children here but in many cases there are so many other mouths at home to feed and almost no cash in the family coffers from one year's end to the next that Pastor Maisule found these six little girls in real need. How glad they are to have bright new dresses to wear to church today.

Jiami is the daughter of Yadkia, who has served the mission here for many years. He helped with the translation of the New Testament into Bura and did much preaching and teaching in the villages. His hair is growing white now but each Sunday morning we see him in his place in church on the front row. He has quite a large family and the mission has been giving him some help rather like a pension. Jiami will be glad for a new dress, too.

Lami is Bata's daughter. Bata is a widow with several children. During the dry season Bata works carrying water and earns a little money and one of her older children works quite regularly but mostly the burden of caring for and raising and supporting her children rests squarely on her shoulders. And rather weak shoulders they are. She has just recently had a series of injections. One of her children was very ill and in the hospital for a long time in June. Lami's new dress will mean much more than the actual value of the dress to this mother who is doing her best to make a home for her family.

These are some of the girls who received dresses from among those you sent. There are more like these. Do you think your work was worth while?

At Home in India

Leon Neher of Quinter, Kansas, is spending a year in India as a student at the Government School of Agriculture at Anand. Here he tells of some of his first experiences in India.

AS THE train continued to rattle along I soon realized that we were nearing Anklesvar, where I was to receive my first real introduction to India. Never before in my life have I felt so inadequate as I did that night. I stepped out of the train compartment into darkness as black as the cypress bogs at midnight. As soon as my eyes adjusted to the darkness, I could see a kerosene lamp flame glimmering through a cracked windowpane. By walking closer I could tell that it was the railway station.

After making sure that all my luggage had been put off the train I tried to gather my wits and muster up enough courage to begin my struggle of trying to make the stationmaster understand who I was and where I wanted to go.

Just then I saw a most welcome sight. Amsey Bollinger had just driven up in the jeep. He immediately began explaining things. We were soon bouncing through the rough, narrow and dusty streets to the mission compound.

After a hearty welcome from the rest of the Anklesvarites and a couple of glasses of lemonade, I soon decided that I was still on earth, even though I was in a land of oxcarts, bicycles, dogs and millions of people.

I was tired; so it did not take much coaxing to get me to "hit the sack." I turned the lantern out, tucked in the mosquito net firmly and made inspection with my flashlight, checking for prisoner mosquitoes inside with me. The last thing I remembered before going to sleep was the sound of pom-pom drums in the distance, the singing of dancers and occasional shrieks of tropical birds and wild animals.

Thus began my year in India. Many thrilling and educational days lie ahead.

The following three weeks proved to be among the most exciting and inspirational weeks that I have ever experienced. I visited all our mission stations, except Umalla, which I hope to visit soon. It is thrilling to witness the great work which is being done in this country for our Lord. It is plain to see that the church has taken root in this land.

By the time I arrived at Anand for my school work, I had received such a good orientation to Indian life and culture, that I found that it was not too difficult to adjust to my environment. The first evening was spent with several fellows who helped me buy necessities in the bazaar. They all looked me over from head to toe, dozens of times, trying to decide just what kind of creature I was. They knew that they must beware, because I was surely some type of gangster that would get mad and beat them up, if they made a bad move. They still can't figure out how it is that an American does not smoke, drink, carry a revolver and throw money around. The thing that really got them was when I started to wash my dishes and clothes and sweep my floor. That was far below my dignity.

I have a room by myself, which looks pretty much like home, now. My bed is of solid slats with a thin pad on it. I do not mind it at all. For the first month, I ate in one of the student mess clubs, sitting on the floor with my legs crossed. This was a good experience.

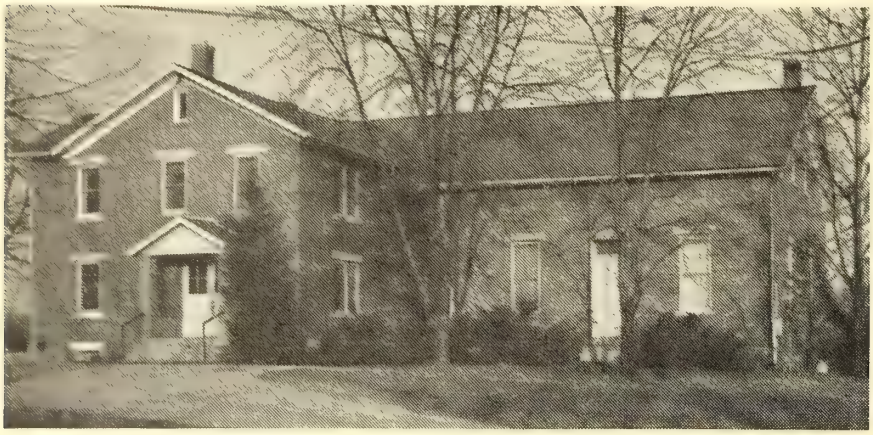
I am now studying plant pathology, agriculture botany, soils, and agriculture economics. I think my time is being spent in a very worth while way. The professors are very friendly and helpful.

At least half of my time is spent in fellowship with the boys. We have excellent talks about everything. I hope that I have been able to clear up many false ideas about my homeland. The week ends are spent out in various villages with different boys. I am having some rare opportunities.

It is my feeling that this is not a time for us to become discouraged by the elements which are working against the mission work. The criticism and persecution should be more wood on the fire, driving us out to work harder than ever, for the night is coming.

Meet Your Missionary

Ella Ebbert



FOR thirty-seven years Sister Ella was a missionary of our church to India. For most of the time since 1917 she has been in charge of our girls' school work in that country. Her greatest labors were in the schoolroom where she worked with growing girls. Sister Ella taught and inspired young women of India to become teachers of others. With those whom she associated Sister Ella instilled a respect for education and a love for the Christian way of life.

In 1925 Ella Ebbert wrote an article, Why I Like My Work. Here, in part is what she wrote: "I love my work, not because it is so easy and because there are no disappointments, no defeats, no perplexities, nothing that gets on my nerves; not because there is no tendency to fret and stew when things do not go as they should, but rather because of the inspiration that causes me not to give up to disappointment; because of the inspiration that prompts me to rise from defeat to go on; the inspiration that urges me toward the goal, and, like the Mt. Everest climbers, not give up till death overtakes me.

"I like my work, not because I have the opportunity of teaching the heathen the terrible wickedness of their idolatry and evil practices, but rather because of the privilege of presenting to them Jesus Christ in all his beauty and love and godliness and purity; showing them by practice and example the better way; leading them into opportunities that will develop right habits and attitudes which will persuade them to accept the good and forsake the wrong."

On Feb. 1, 1955, at the age of sixty-nine, Sister Ebbert retired from our active missionary staff. For the love she showed for her work, for her devoted service to Christ, for her contribution to the church of India, the Brotherhood extends appreciation.

Lower Miami church in Southern Ohio pioneers in human relations

Edward T. Angeny
Pastor, Lower Miami Church, Ohio

Ministering to the Negroes Locally

LOWER Miami church of the Brethren in Southern Ohio illustrates the idea we run across quite often in our day, that the pioneer spirit of our forefathers is still needed in regard to the application of Christianity to our time. In other words, just as the challenge of extending our geographical frontiers existed in days gone by, so the challenge exists today to extend our frontiers in the realm of human relations. The Lower Miami church is a pioneer church in both regards. This was the first Church of the Brethren west of the Miami River, one of the tributaries of the Ohio. The strength and vigor of its early founders are attested by the fact that from this church came many of the other present-day churches in and around the city of Dayton. Jacob Miller, whose grave is close by Lower Miami, and his successors through the long years were true pioneers in the sense of establishing the church in new territory.

Lower Miami still faces new territory, a changing community; new people are here needing the ministry of Christ and the church. The demand for courage, fortitude and Christian faith is just as necessary as it ever was and the rewards will be as far reaching as the effects of the labors of the earlier pioneers. There is granted to us the possibilities of seeing some of the "greater works of Christ" as the Christian gospel is applied to areas where prejudice, misunderstanding and discrimination now exist. What answer does the church have to the problems which are plaguing and destroying mankind? Does Christian love have any power? In other words, the opportunity that each local church has to demonstrate the Christian ethic and ideal no matter what the situation might be has national and international implications and relation to the total growth of the kingdom of God in the whole world. Because we are not alone we can always feel the force of Christian objectives and the total fellowship and, above all, the presence of Christ as we strive toward the goal of God's kingdom of love and peace.

When we found new people moving into our neighborhood there was nothing we could do except to welcome all alike. People are people and they cannot be raised as an issue; the decision does not rest with us as to what we are going to do about them. Skin color does not change people nor does it determine Christian attitudes. We knew that the struggle would not be easy; neither would the battle be won over night. We realized it would be a slow process. Conversion is never easy, but Christ can save our souls and his victory will be glorious. We are just now tasting some of the fruits of victory. At a combined meeting of the official board and the church administrative board the following resolution of Annual Conference of 1953 was adopted as our own: "We shall begin in our local churches to resist with greater vigor every form of discrimination based on race, color or creed and to extend the rights and privileges of a free Christian society to all people."

A few Negro children are regular members of our Sunday school; the teachers have visited in their homes. Our vacation Bible school for the last two summers was privileged to include Negro children from the community. In our visitation evangelism campaign a few Negro families were visited by laymen. Occasionally a few colored adults have been in our morning worship service. The attitudes of the majority of our people have been admirable toward all of this.

As pastor I have tried not to run too far ahead of the people in this educational process. I have kept in touch with the officials in connection with every step I thought it was necessary to take. We are learning together. I visit every new family regardless of color to extend to them the welcome of the church. The majority of Negro people are also reluctant to break existing patterns. What will happen when a Negro seeks membership in the church? The ministerial board has already faced this. We shall extend Christ's invitation to all and as one member of the board expressed it: "That will be a deepening spiritual experience for all of us."

Early New Year's Day the phone rang and one of our Negro mothers said that her children would not let her rest until they would wish our family "Happy New Year." One after the other, four little children called out their wishes and I felt that perhaps we had ministered in a way to people who needed the friendship of the church. We are hoping that incident was a sign of progress for the coming year. There is real pleasure in coming to know all kinds of people. Everyone has something to contribute to the total welfare and happiness of all.

Pioneering days are not over. With the disappearance of geographical frontiers comes the challenge of the human frontier and to extend freedom and opportunity to all people in this great land. The motto originating in the West seems to fit our present challenge; "Give us men to match our mountains." Now that the physical resources have been explored we need real men to use them for the progress of civilization and the glory of God, "that men might walk with freedom in their eyes."

The Family Counselor

Naomi Will H. K. Zeller, Jr. Jesse Ziegler

The Family Counselor welcomes letters of inquiry. They may be addressed: Family Life Department, General Brotherhood Board, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill.

Dear Counselor,

What should we do about a child who goes into a tantrum over having to pick up toys, eat food he does not like but which he needs or having to take an afternoon nap? Our son is an unusually lovable and responsive child but when the tantrums come on we are worried. Sometimes he holds his breath; we are afraid he might some day harm himself. Please advise.

Perplexed Parents.

Dear Friends,

Your question about temper tantrums will doubtless be of interest to almost all parents of small children. The tantrum tends to be frightening and sometimes very aggravating, not to say humiliating if guests are present.

Drs. English and Pearson in Emotional Problems of Living and Dr. Spock in Manual of Infants and Child Care (35c on newsstands) give wise and sane counsel. They would agree that some temper tantrums are universal in childhood. If, however, they are very severe and prolonged, they may be considered as abnormal.

Abnormal temper tantrums are usually traceable to three different kinds of situation. (1) If a child has had no frustrating experiences but has had his own way almost completely, he has had no opportunity for developing his own inner control system and will react primitively to deprivation. (2) If a child has been forced to do too many things, to grow up too quickly, to take too much responsibility too soon, to become independent before he is ready for it — this may lead to temper tantrums that are severe. (3) If the child feels rejected by the parents and feels he must do everything to please them so as not be further rejected—this may eventuate in severe tantrums.

For the first kind a consistent, mild training by kindly, friendly parents, teacher or nurse will cause the child to find more pleasure in doing what needs to be done than in the tempers. For the second two psychiatric help may be needed in convincing the child that he only needs to take responsibility commensurate with his age, and in convincing the parents that expectations should be geared only to the age of the child.

Often it is true that if there are many shows of temper all that is necessary is for the parents to relax a little in their demands and expectations. Strangely enough, a few months later the child will come to doing the very things that the parents were demanding. Now the child does the things because he is ready to do them and wants to do them.

With regard to eating, this is a good place to be pretty relaxed about what you expect. Studies have shown clearly that the child will be hungry for and want to eat over a period of time the things that his body needs. If daddy and mother consistently are eating a well-rounded diet, the desire to emulate them and to satisfy his own hungers will pretty well take care of the situation. This may not mean that his place will be clean each time.

While the child is in a temper tantrum there is little to do. He does not hear anything you say. Probably the best thing to do is put him in a room by himself and pay no attention until the tantrum is over. Then act as though nothing had happened. He is unlikely to do do any serious damage to himself.

I commend to you especially the little book by Spock for further reading.

Jesse H. Ziegler.

Southern California and Arizona

Santa Ana—Our pastor, Robert G. Mays, conducted a membership class on Saturdays which was followed by baptismal services on Dec. 19. In January Sunday evening services were devoted to mission study. In the first two meetings our pastor conducted a class on problems of the city church and Vera Newcomer taught a class on India. During the last two evenings Merlin Brubaker, who recently returned from the Africa mission field showed moving pictures and slides and told of the church's mission work in Nigeria. A reception and shower of food stuffs were given to the Merlin Brubaker family as a welcome back into our church fellowship. Sara Shisler, missionary on furlough, gave a description of work and needs in Africa. Hazel Landis showed pictures of mission activities in Africa at our New Year's Eve watch social. In a recent evening meeting of the women's service circle, Joyce Mays showed slides of Italy, where she and Bro. Mays spent two years in Brethren Service work. On Feb. 6 at the evening service, a La Verne College deputation team presented the play, Our Father Who Art in Heaven. Our annual birthday banquet was held on Feb. 18, with Rev. Dennis Savage as guest speaker. We are co-operating in the released-time religious education program which is sponsored by our city council of churches. In the latter part of each month our Sunday-school teachers meet together in a preview study of the lessons for the following month.—Iva A. Carl, Santa Ana, Calif.

Northern Iowa, Minnesota and South Dakota

Lewiston—Bro. D. D. Harner is conducting a Bible study class on Sunday evenings. Bro. Clarence Sink is elder of our church. The young adult class sponsored the film, The Pacific and Alaska, made and shown by Julian Gromer. A committee of five chosen by the church council is making a survey and study of the congregation, its field of operation and nature and size of its responsibilities. Union Thanksgiving services were held with the Presbyterian church in Lewiston. The McPherson instrumental quartet was with us in December. A United Nations Day program was held with a round-table discussion on the UN by natives from China, Puerto Rico, Ukrania, Greece, Czechoslovakia, Germany and Columbia—all students or teachers of St. Mary's College.—Mrs. Wiliam E. Wright, Lewiston, Minn.

Southwestern Kansas

Garden City—During the time of our pastor's absence, guest speakers for our worship services were Brethren A. L. Elrod, Harold Crist and Eugene Eisenbise. Our lawn was landscaped and seeded and a new sprinkler system installed. A new Sunday-school class was organized for young married couples. A five-week study course on Christian doctrines was held through January followed by a church doctrine study. Our youth group attended the sub-district rally at Larned in February. Youth Week was observed ending with the youth having charge of the morning worship on Feb. 6.—Mrs. Clifford Husband, Garden City, Kansas.

Northern Illinois and Wisconsin

Maple Grove—Since our church burned last June, we have been holding services in the Church of Christ building. Our new church plans are in the hands of Bro. Forrest Groff, and we plan to begin building in the early spring. Our Bible study group which began eight years ago had an average attendance of twenty-four during this past year. The ladies' aid group made stuffed toys for the Falfurrias, Texas, project and sent several bags of relief clothing.—Mrs. Walter Miller, Stanley, Wis.

Southern Illinois

Oakley—Our pastor and four other persons from our church attended the Ecumenical Institute at Bethany. Anna Mow was speaker for our home-coming services. Several from our congregation attended the leadership training school in Decatur. Our church was host to the women's work workshop for our section. The sectional youth conference was held at our church. An hour of prayer is being conducted each week at the homes of shut-ins. The children's department made and sent friendship packets to children overseas. We have started a quarterly teachers' meeting to help make better use of our teaching time and materials. We participated in a union Christmas program at Cerro Gordo. Several from our church attended the evangelism institute at Girard. For the first time our church prepared a directory. Last year we started remodeling—a vestibule was added with a stairway to the basement and now classrooms are begun in the basement. We have had a big increase in attendance. A school on Christian living was held during the month of February.—Mrs. Paula Brown, Oakley, Ill.

Northern Indiana

North Liberty—Since our last report four members were received into our church fellowship by letter. Christmas programs were given by the children. On Jan. 9 the St. John's Baptist melody singers of South Bend presented a musical program for us. Bro. Owen E. Price, director of relief work at Nappanee, gave a talk and showed pictures of his trip to Europe. At the morning worship service on Jan. 30, a deputation team from Manchester College was in charge of the program. The young people of section one held their conference at our church in the afternoon and evening of Jan. 30. In the absence of our pastor on Feb. 6, Charles Cripe of Bremen had charge of our morning service. On Feb. 13 Bro. Mark Y. Schrock of Middlebury, brought our morning sermon and was in charge of the service of ordaining Brother and Sister Carl Kime to the ministry. At the morning service on Feb. 27, the Manchester College a capella choir was with us. The ladies' aid is working on relief sewing and friendship packets for the district spring rally. The church kitchen is now completed.—Mrs. Agnes Gorby, North Liberty, Ind.

Osceola—Due to the need for more classroom space, we started a remodeling program last spring. Dedication services were held for the improvements and we are nearly finished except for a few minor details. Bro. Galen Lehman of North Manchester was our harvest day speaker. Bro. Paul Thompson of Lima, Ohio, was evangelist for our revival meetings. One of our special speakers, Bro. George Poole, a Youth for Christ representative who had been in Japan for some time, gave a timely and informative sermon. Our Christmas program was presented by the children's department. As a special project the intermediate class gave toys to the boys at the Bashor Boys' Home in Goshen, Ind., at Christmas time. The ladies' aid group recently held a drive for relief clothing. Bro. Charles Stouder was re-elected elder for our congregation. We have had thirteen new members added to our church by letter and baptism. A father and son banquet was prepared and served by the ladies. Coming events include a service at the St. John's Baptist church in South Bend as part of our racial program, co-operative pre-Easter services, mother and daughter banquet and a revival service beginning Sept. 18 with Bro. Ralph Rarick of Michigan City as evangelist.— Geneva Bloom, Elkhart, Ind.

Southern Indiana

Arcadia—We welcomed Sister Anna Mow for our home-coming observance. One evening the filmstrip, Unto These My Brethren, was shown, this was followed by a farewell for the James Hodshire family who are leaving our community. A service using colored slides of local scenes was held at Thanksgiving time. At Christmas the children presented the play, The Miracle of the Wooden Shoe. A pageant, Christ, the Answer, was also presented recently. The missionary committee is planning a special service one evening each month. At the first of this series, Sister Annis Heiny showed pictures of Puerto Rico.—Carolyn Bolton, Arcadia, Ind.

Windfall—Our revival meeting was held by Bro. Eldon Petry of Anderson, Ind. As a result eleven persons were baptized and four were reconsecrated. During the revival meeting, installation services were held for Sister Winnie Richey, who is serving in the office of deacon with her husband, Bro. Frank Richey. A fellowship meal was held in the church basement on Sunday, Feb. 6, for Bro. Petry and his family. New pews with foam rubber seats were dedicated at our annual home-coming services. Later we bought pulpit furniture which consists of chairs and a desk in matching color; Bro. J. W. Grater of Mexico was in charge of the dedication services. The Sunday-school classes contributed to the purchase of seeds of hope. The ladies' aid group meets once each month to quilt and knot comforters. The group made baby layettes for the district project. We had a watch service on New Year's Eve.—Mrs. Beulah Johnson, Sharpsville, Ind.

Michigan

Pontiac—As a result of our revival services by Bro. George Jeffreys, nine persons were baptized into our church. One Sunday Bro. Charles Bieber, missionary to Africa, gave the morning message with a fellowship dinner at the noon hour. The women's work meets every two weeks to sew for relief. The children gave a Christmas program on Dec. 26. All the services have been well attended during the winter months with a variety of programs each Sunday evening. We meet each Wednesday evening for prayer and Bible study with our pastor as teacher.—Susan P. Shafer, Pontiac, Mich.

Southern Ohio

Poplar Grove—On Jan. 28 our church suffered the loss of our elder and pastor, Bro. James M. Moore, at the age of seventy-nine years. He had served our church for the past nine and one-half years. Bro. Moyne Landis, district fieldman, met with us to select a new elder. Bro. Kenneth Long was chosen to fill this vacancy. Bro. Levi Blocher was chosen as a delegate to Annual Conference. Our parsonage should be ready for occupancy by this fall. We invite any one traveling by car to stop and worship with us whenever it is convenient to do so. Our church is in Darke County, located between Greenville and Union City.—Homer Halladay, Greenville, Ohio.

Potsdam—Our church met in regular council with Elder Philip Lauver presiding. On Dec. 12 the Miami County CBYF took a treat to the children's home in Troy. The ladies' aid has been making comforters and other articles for relief. A group of our young people attended the district CBYF conference at New Carlisle. On Dec. 19 the children presented their Christmas program for the morning worship and the CBYF gave the play, The Guiding Star, in the evening. Some of our young people attended the youth seminar at Washington, D. C. We have received five new members by baptism and two by letter. At our special council meeting the church decided to remodel and enlarge the church during this year. On Jan. 30 Pauline Rodgers gave an illustrated talk of her experiences for a year in an Austrian home. Each Monday evening in February the pastor held a class in church membership for the intermediates.—Mrs. Velma Heck, Laura, Ohio.

Eastern Pennsylvania

Midway—A musical program was given by the Chiques male chorus one Sunday evening. Our evangelistic services were conducted by William Longenecker of Mt. Joy. Fourteen were baptized into our church fellowship. The county W.C.T.U. institute was held in our church. Stewart Kauffman, regional secretary, spoke one Sunday morning in our church. The CBYF had a toys-for-overseas project. This group also entertained several other groups at a watch night service. Ralph Schlosser conducted our Bible institute. The Elizabethtown College a capella choir presented a musical program one Sunday evening. In observance of Youth Week, the CBYF had charge of a Sunday morning service using the theme, Youth Serves. During the month of February a teacher's training course was taught by Rufus Eby of Hershey. A race relations program was sponsored by the men's work with Wiliam White as speaker.—Mrs. Mark Meyer, Lebanon, Pa.

Mingo—Since our last report one has been received on former baptism and two have been baptized. One Sunday evening a quartet from Elizabethtown College had charge of the service. The Coventry church choir was with us for a special program one evening. Bro. Charles Bieber missionary to Africa, showed pictures of the work in Africa at both the Mingo and Skippack churches. One of our members Betty Hartley, R.N., is serving as a nurse in the hospital at the Brethren Service project in Puerto Rico. One Sunday morning our church services were recorded on tape and sent to the workers at the project in Puerto Rico. We also are sending feed bags to the project for the making of clothing as well as a contribution to help the hospital purchase an incubator. Both of our churches have erected new bulletin boards. We started a new library at the Mingo church. Ou

Altoona, Twenty-eighth Street — Our church has made an increase in church membership since the first of the church year. Visits have been made by classes and the church to the home for the aged at Martinsburg. Brother and Sister C. H. Cameron represented our church at district meeting. Some of the members have been visiting in the various homes in our congregation. During the absence of our pastor Brethren F. J. Byer and Chester Baird of Altoona and Paul Yoder representing Juniata College were guest speakers. The film, The City Story, was shown at an evening service. Some of our men attended the district men's work banquet at the New Enterprise church. Our women were represented at the World Community Day services, which were held in the Grace Lutheran church. The women of our church were hostesses to the district spiritual life program at which Bro. Nevin Zuck was speaker. Our church has sponsored the 100% Messenger Club. The members of our church and our pastor co-operated with the churches of the sixth ward for the union Thanksgiving and Week of Prayer services. We were happy to have with us Miss Else Peterson of Denmark, who has been with the Brethren Service group at New Windsor and is currently with the Roaring Spring church. During the months of November and December our pastor conducted a class in church membership. For the second year our church helped with the Christmas parade and depicted the scene, No Room at the Inn. Our pastor was one of the radio speakers for the morning devotions by the Altoona ministerium. Eight of our children's workers attended the children's workers' banquet at Martinsburg. Bro. John Middlekauff was with us one evening and showed slides of his recent trip to the Holy Land.—Martha Mentzer, Altoona, Pa.

Pine Glen—Bro. Paul Yoder of Huntingdon, Pa., was guest speaker for our rally day service. Bro. Joseph G. Moyer of the Indian Creek congregation conducted evangelistic meetings in our church. As a result of these meetings, nine persons were received into our church by baptism. One week end last fall Bro. Ralph Schlosser of Elizabethtown, Pa., held a Bible institute in our church. Bro. Luke Bowser of the Spring Run church officiated at our love feast and communion. Bro. Harrison Frantz was guest speaker one Sunday and visited several days in our congregation in behalf of the nurses' home at Bethany Hospital. Community Thanksgiving services were held in our church with five ministers of the community participating. Sister Helena Kruger of Annville was with us Jan. 2 in connection with the refugee resettlement program of the church. We are studying the Book of Hebrews in our Sunday evening services under the leadership of our pastor, Bro. J. Richard Gotthall. On Jan. 23 we celebrated the sixty-second anniversary of the dedication of the church house. Three persons were present who had attended the dedication services. We have elected a planning committee so that the work which was dedicated sixty-two years ago may be enlarged.—Myra F. Yoder, Mattawana, Pa.

Pittsburgh—A school of missions was held during the month of November on the theme, The City Church. The last session of the school included a trip to the Hope Rescue mission, where the group took part in the service. The food from our harvest home service was sent to the Brethren Home at Windber. Friendship packets were sent to New Windsor. Follow-up calls have been made among the membership in connection with the every-member canvass which was conducted last summer. The all-church Christmas dinner and children's party was held Dec. 11. Harold and Olive Wolfe were installed into the permanent office of deacon on Dec. 12. The church Christmas program was presented Dec. 19 in the form of special music and pageantry. Church directories for 1955 have been printed. The Juniata College choir appeared in our church on Feb. 1. Our church is joining with the Protestant churches of the area in conducting a survey canvass of 18,000 residents of Squirrel Hill in co-operation with the Allegheny Council of Churches.—Lillian Straub, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Ten Mile—Our church had been closed for a period of six years, but in September 1950 it was reopened and since that time we have been making progress in the spiritual area as well as in receiving new members. We are under the leadership of Brother and Sister Frank Rehm, who have been with us since the reopening of our church. We have done extensive remodeling to our church building. Electric lighting and an automatic gas heating system have been installed and the rostrum has been enlarged. Our church is the second oldest congregation in the district. We are now conducting a survey of the unchurched persons living in our community.—Mrs. Daisy Holsopple, Marianna, Pa.

Tire Hill—Eight were baptized into our church as a result of the evangelistic meetings which were conducted by Bro. John Clawson. Harvest home service and cash rally was held with the offering going to the building fund. Our church accepted the resignation of our pastor who has accepted a charge at Miami, Fla. Trimming a Christmas tree with useful gifts for the Navajo Indians of New Mexico was the Christmas project of the children of the Sunday school. On Dec. 17 the children gave a program at the morning church hour. This was also the time of our white gift service. New Brethren Hymnals were presented to the church by individual donations from many of the members. Dedication services were held for the hymnals the last Sunday of the year. Mission school was conducted four Sunday evenings in January on the theme, India, Pakistan and Ceylon. The mission film, Village of the Poor, was shown. Mrs. Clyde Carter spoke about their work in India. Miss Ruth Yoder, a Mennonite relief worker in Puerto Rico, told of her work and showed her filmstrips.—Mrs. Dorothy Blough, Johnstown, Pa.

Florida and Georgia

Jasksonville—The young people had charge of an evening service. They emphasized the areas of the CBYF. We have a film one Sunday night each month. Our Christmas program was held Dec. 19, followed by the picture, Holy Night. Bro. Forrest Groff visited our church to consider plans for a suitable location and the needs of our church. Brother and Sister Leatherman conducted our revival meeting Jan. 9-16, closing with a love feast service. One person was received by baptism into our church. At our Wednesday evening prayer meetings, our pastor is conducting a series of studies on the history and doctrines of the church. On Sunday evening, Jan. 30, our young people had charge of the services and gave a program on the life of Fannie Crosby. We would be glad to have any one passing through Jacksonville to stop and worship with us at 4065 College St., Jacksonville, Fla. Our aid society is making garments for the hospital in Puerto Rico.—Mina Smith, Jacksonville, Fla.

Okeechobee—A farewell party was held at the parsonage for our pastor and his wife, Brother and Sister Walter Replogle, prior to their leaving for their home at Fruitdale, Ala. On Jan. 12 our new pastor, James McAvoy, and his family began their work in our church. Guest speakers have included Fred Hollenberg, Blake Million and D. O. Cotrell. There has been one member received by baptism into our church since our last report.—Mrs. Victor Domer, Okeechobee, Fla.

Middle Maryland

Longmeadow—A stewardship conference was held in our church. In observance of Laymen's Sunday, Bro. Chester W. Seilhamer brought the morning message. An all-day harvest home-coming meeting was held with Brethren David R. Petre, Ralph E. White and Robert A. Schreiber as speakers. Special Christmas services included a Christmas Eve program by the youth and a play by the children. The children's special Christmas offering was used for the education of one student in India. The women's work group of the church sponsored a covered dish supper to which all families were invited. The music department of the church sponsored a hymn sing on Jan. 9. A program was held at the Fahrney-Keedy Memorial home by a group from our church. Two were received into the church by baptism recently. At the present time we are considering a project to enlarge our church building. On Feb. 6 the Christian Volunteers quartet of Waynesboro, Pa., presented a program in our church. The youth fellowship assisted in the morning services on Youth Sunday.—Mrs. Mark Keener, Hagerstown, Md.

Middletown Valley, Myersville—The proceeds from a farm auction which was sponsored by the women of our church was used for our organ fund. A number of our women attended the district women's rally in the Martinsburg church. Our church contributed to the Children's Aid Society of our community. As a result of evangelistic meetings held in our church by Bro. A. R. Showalter, three persons were baptized into our church fellowship. The Myersville community service was held in our church. Dedication services were held for our new organ with Bro. A. R. Showalter, guest speaker, Miss Ruth Weybright, organist and Charles L. Rowland, chorister. Friendship kits for overseas were prepared by our members at Christmas time. A number of our young people attended the district watch night party at the Hagerstown church.—Mrs. Helen Summers, Middletown, Md.

A RACE TO RUN

IT IS still a few weeks until graduation but these two step aside from the academic procession simply to call attention to Christian college day. Their caps and gowns, therefore, are worn proudly not merely to show that they have completed certain required courses, but also to signify their preparation for making their vocations Christian. Since they have absorbed the atmosphere of a college where spiritual values are uppermost, they cannot be satisfied to seek husbands or wives, jobs or careers, or professional advancement only. They know that they are surrounded by a great cloud of witnesses, not only friends and relatives and classmates, but by inspiring teachers, prophetic leaders, heroes of faith about whom they have learned as well as heroes of the current struggle to confront a pagan world with faith in God. If their education is Christian they must have learned the need of discipline, to lay aside excess baggage and to develop latent strength, for the contests that await them. They have a race to run, an obstacle course to surmount, and distant goals to reach. If their training is Christian, they will not run aimlessly but toward "the prize of the upward call of God."

READERS WRITE . . . to the editor

The Gospel Messenger welcomes letters commenting on editorials, articles and news. Letters should be brief and brotherly.

Agree With "Conference Reflections"

The sentiments expressed by Bro. A. Jay Replogle of Windber, Pa., in his letter, "Conference Reflections," certainly were in harmony with those expressed by the Brethren from Maiden Creek who attended the Conference of 1954.—Ben Yoder, Centerport, Pa.

Include More Brethren

I would like to share some personal thinking relative to two letters that have appeared in the March 5 and 12 issues of the Gospel Messenger. I refer to the letters written by Brethren Ellis G. Guthrie of Eaton, Ohio, and A. Jay Replogle of Windber, Pa. I would like to say first of all that I share in the deep concern expressed by Bro. Guthrie. The great change that has taken place in our denominational belief and practice has been a source of constant pain to all who believe in the primitive doctrines and practices of our beloved church. One may well ask the question, What is bringing about this great change in the life of our church? I have before me at this moment a church bulletin that I received from the pastor of another denomination. In it is this statement: "The second assembly of the World Council of Churches will be held in Evanston, Ill., Aug. 15-31. This assembly is the greatest forward movement in the history of Protestantism and it is the hope of those in charge, that it will serve to bring all denominations nearer together and will wipe out some of the existing differences in theory and practice." I am wondering if the answer to the question as to what is bringing about these changes in our belief and practice does not lie in the statement I have quoted from this church bulletin?

And now just a brief remark on Bro. Replogle's excellent letter on "Conference Reflections." I am heartily in sympathy with the concerns Bro. Replogle has lifted up. I would like to add one suggestion to those made in this letter. Include more of our own Brethren on the program. I believe that in doing this two purposes would be accomplished: first, the concern expressed by Bro. Replogle about keeping the messages within the understanding of those who attend would be cared for. Secondly, it would make the conference a Church of the Brethren conference, and that is what it ought to be.—John M. Geary, Mount Pleasant, Pa.

An Aid to Bible Reading

I read in the Gospel Messenger that Bibles were made to be underlined to emphasize special verses. Why not, then, print special verses throughout the Bible with green ink so that those of us who believe but who aren't so well versed in looking up Bible verses will know where to look in the Bible for certain information? Also we can read over and over again all the verses mentioning the creation,—or the stories in the Old Testament that tell us how to live in present-day times, or the prophecies of the Old Testament that happened in the New Testament. All the important parts of letters of Paul and the gospels would be easier to find in green print. People could form search-the-Bible classes, and would know that the green print verses would contain a full story to be read to the class in one session. It would give them courage to speak up in class. It would be no different from a minister learning which verses to choose for his sermon. The search-the-Bible class could read the green-printed Bible verses straight through from Genesis to Revelations. —Mrs. A. E. Kroon, Nordland, Wash.

A Right and a Wrong Way

Congratulations on printing the letter from Pastor Ellis G. Guthrie, of Eaton, Ohio. He is exactly right in every statement he made. However, I can not agree that those congregations (or pastors) which do disregard the plain New Testament teachings in regard to baptism and the ordinances are doing "what they think best," as he intimates and you make a statement on it in your editorial. If any one varies from the New Testament teachings, how can they do what is best? Neither can I agree that it is "much better and more Christlike if we can say . . ." as you say is the way to say it in your next to the last paragraph of your editorial. To do what Jesus commanded and to be baptized as the New Testament and early church teaches and practiced is not being dogmatic, and what if it is? There is a right and a wrong way to do these things. But your idea is not the right way. There can be no two or three right ways, so why even try to compromise?—Dan L. Blickenstaff, Cincinatti, Ohio.

A Christian personality in the public school room offers a fine opportunity to leaven our society with Christian influence at its very foundations

LEAVEN in the Lump of Education

A. G. Breidenstine

CHRISTIAN higher education cannot be understood apart from the total educational scene within which it exists. On the one hand, it is not wise to think of it as totally unlike all other forms of education. On the other hand, it must be recognized as unique, for the ingredient of Christianity sets it apart from all other forms of education. The Christian element in Christian higher education furnishes a leavening influence without which our free society could not long endure.

The three jobs confronting all educational institutions are: (1) The transmission of knowledge and the techniques for evaluating this knowledge disoovered from the past, or as the outcome of recent research, and forged-out anew by each oncoming generation; (2) the assisting of our young in their preparation for a rightful place in our society and some aid in finding that place; (3) the initiating of each generation into the discovery of true standards of judgment upon which the soundness of our society depends. These are big orders indeed. Apart from the wisdom of God and the refining influence of Christianity they just cannot be executed properly.

To be one among the critics of our public schools is to be in a large company. For some reason the chorus of blasts has risen to a thunderous crescendo. I, for one, do not agree with these critics. Public school educators know their shortcomings and are working hard against great odds to correct them. In spite of their mistakes, however, they have produced a system and quality of public education unequalled in our history. Children today read better, write better, calculate better and, on the whole, know how to live better than at any time since the beginning of our public schools. These facts have been substantiated by valid and reliable tests which cannot be disputed. In the first job assigned to education our public institutions measure up well. It is interesting to observe that other countries, striving to equal our American way of life, have established public schools with the confidence that this agency is essential to achieving their goal. India is a very recent example. In the transmission of knowledge and techniques, Christian higher education is not unique nor is there any dispute about the positions held by the secular and church-sponsored educational institutions. Our church colleges have come to respect the public schools and, in general, no longer line-up with the critics.

The second objective for our schools presents additional difficulties. Many students are again discovering the true meaning of vocation. They have caught the spirit of the age and think of a job in terms of a calling from God. Secular education is, therefore, confronted with a new challenge. Additions to the faculty of religion—chaplains, directors of religious activities—and numerous extra curriculars seem to be required. Our Christian colleges, however, face no such dilemma, for they have over a long period of time faced this challenge. Here is the unique feature of their history and tradition.

At first glance the third goal of education appears to be wholly outside the sphere of our non-church-related institutions. Values and standards which are merely normative lack the dynamic quality of our Christian absolutes. How can one judge our society properly without the rule of the God of history and the spirit of Christ? Our large state universities have apparently also tried to answer this question because they have added religious, and at times genuinely Christian, emphases heretofore unknown. But this is the rightful heritage of Christian higher education and in this regard our Christian colleges have done and are doing a great service to our society. What would our America be without the leavening influences of our Christian teachers, doctors, statesmen, lawyers, merchants, scientists and engineers? In the church we have come to expect our ministers, Sunday-school teachers, missionaries and other church workers to have learned their judgments in our church colleges. We take these outstanding contributions from our colleges for granted.

There are two additional responsibilities for Christian higher education which I shall describe as the twin functions of leavening and balancing. Many have tried to inject religious instruction into our public schools. Perhaps some day our spirit of ecumenicity will allow complete instruction without denominational flavoring. But to wait for that day is to lose much valuable time. I favor the immediate leavening by having courageous Christian laymen take their places in our public schools and on the faculties of our secular institutions. Recently I heard this idea referred to as one of Christian penetration. Why should not our Christian young people make a bold invasion of graduate studies to conduct inquiries and to write books? This kind of leaven is both subtle and effective. In my opinion, the preparation of teachers is especially crucial. Perhaps nothing is more contagious than the radiance of a Christian personality in the public school room. What an opportunity to leaven our society at its very foundation!

Not only should Christian

The Age of Automation

THE new word on many lips is automation. In case the word is unfamiliar to you, consider the Ford Motor Company's Cleveland plant in which an automatic machine can bore cylinders, measure its own work, reject the imperfect product and send the completed one to another automatic process. The principle of automation is the control of one machine by another, as when a thermostat determines when to start or to stop a furnace.

The increasing use of automatic-control equipment has ushered in what some observers are calling the second industrial revolution. Just as the first industrial revolution substituted machinery for human labor and thereby brought both a tremendous increase in production and great social problems, so the new developments of automation promise great miracles of manufacturing and at the same time pose new problems for industry and labor. Norbert Wiener, whose pioneering work in the development of electronic brains is important in the growth of automation, is afraid that this second industrial revolution will "devalue the human brain" just as the earlier revolution devalued the human arm.

Obviously these new developments, by increasing production and by tapping new sources of atomic power, might become the means of making cheap power and fuel available to the whole world. It is not impossible that within a short time problems of feeding the hungry around the world could be easily solved. But the basic human problem remains, no matter how highly refined our mechanisms become. We can create machines that solve problems, that exercise unerring mechanical judgment and that can even "remember" more accurately than their creators. But will the result simply be that as persons we become more mechanical? If so, how are we to maintain the individual initiative, the creative imagination, the spiritual sensitivity that distinguish man from a machine?

Christians cannot be indifferent to the social problems that a second industrial revolution will bring. But we need to be even more alert to the threat to personality itself. There are evidences that the church is tempted to become automatic. For example, in Baltimore it is possible to take your telephone, dial a certain number and listen to a recorded inspirational message. The sponsors think it is just the thing for "hard-pressed business men and housewives who need a change of pace," as well as anyone who can not sleep at night.

Just think of the range of possibilities in the field of religion. Touch the button and select the right Scripture, already preclassified and intoned perfectly by a trained orator. Instead of calling your pastor in time of need, press the right button and hear the correct advice over your own high fidelity speaker.

This is an extreme example, of course. But it shows how easily we could be betrayed into accepting a steamlined but sterile form of automatic religion: one that requires no faith, no sacrifice, no commitment, no thought—only the slight effort to press a button or lift a receiver.

Most of this discussion is related to the need for Christian higher education. We have maintained small independent colleges because we wanted to develop creative young people who would not get lost in the mass education processes of a large university. In the new automatic age we will need the Christian liberal arts college more than ever before. As every article in this college issue demonstrates, we need church colleges and they need our support.—K.M.

Not Robots but Men

AS A disturbing footnote to the blessings of automation described above, consider the news from London about a clock that killed its keeper. Tommy Manners was a veteran clock winder. Since 1937 he had been winding and servicing 800 clocks in the Royal Courts of Justice. One morning he climbed up to the largest clock of all and started to turn on the electrically operated winch that lifted its weights. Somehow his clothes were snagged in the machinery and he was wound into the clock works. But the giant clock never stopped and his cries were drowned out by its booming chimes.

As the first industrial revolution got under way a woman novelist wrote a frightening story about a Frankenstein monster, a mechanical man that turned on its inventor to destroy him. As the second industrial revolution begins we might ponder the actual incident of a machine that devoured its keeper—and never stopped.

Men can devise machines but they cannot control them unless they are themselves controlled by the Creator who made them. If we forget in whose image we are made, the images we make are likely to bend us into their image. More than ever before, God wants men, not robots, to become his sons.—K.M

Education for Sectarians

Kermit Eby

A college should not be judged by its buildings, its enrollment, its endowment, but by the quality of its graduates, its challenge of cliches that pass for truth

Luoma

I HAD perhaps the most paradoxical experience of my whole life when I was dismissed from the examination room of Senator Jenner. I had said there: "I am now and have been, since 1927, a Brethren minister, whose interest in peace took him into economics and other related fields."

My membership in a church which was once hounded from Europe for the refusal of its brethren to kow-tow to Caesar, was for the senator a badge of respectability! And doubtless he knew how the modern descendants of those European refugees are inclined to vote.

It is my contention further that if we knew our heritage, believed it and testified to it, the church would be brought to trial rather than one of its peripheral members. I also believe that the primary purpose of a church-related college is to emphasize that heritage so emphatically that it becomes a part of the intellectual and spiritual life of each student.

My experience on Brethren campuses in 1954-55 and my contact with Brethren students on a graduate level convinces me that this is not the case. The Brethren students do not (with rare exceptions) know their history or the reasons for the witness which they profess. Hence, they are easily assimilated into the main Protestant stream. There may be a justification for such assimilation in an ecumenical age, and there are those who argue that the Brethren destiny is the leavening of the Protestant lump. The only question I would ask of those who hold this view is, "Where will the leavening come from when there is no longer a sectarian fount to give it birth?"

Therefore, if I were a Brethren educator, I should be avowedly sectarian. Otherwise, why be a Brethren educator at all? I am convinced that deep in our heritage there are particularistic values which are of transcendent importance to our entire society. For example, our emphasis on a "rediscovery" of Jesus' teachings; on the evil of war, and especially of a world war which offers us not only personal—but generic—death; our subtle understanding of the futility of the oath, in this day of the informer, our emphasis on the integrity of life and contract; and finally, our conviction that it is more important to win the man than the case. Finally, there is the magnificent drama of the feet-washing, that drama in which the suffering servant is the central and triumphant figure.

I am pleading for education which gives Brethren youth a pride in their heritage and a sense of historical continuity. The continuity which is theirs is a precious gift, and it begins with experiencing the kind of world our rebellious forefathers lived in. It is a satisfying and healthy thing to remember that our Brethren ancestors also faced the horrors of totalitarianism and war and came up with alternatives to both.

Professor in the department of sociology, University of Chicago

As a Brethren educator conscious of my roots, it would therefore be my purpose to develop tough-minded students—men and women who are conscious that they are destined to be in tension with the world. I might even have a course for them on The Great Heresies. Such a course would include the study of Christ, Giordano Bruno, Erasmus, Luther, John Huss, yes—and even Karl Marx. I would teach Brethrenism as an heretical doctrine, and I would make a constant attempt to find out why it is that we produce so few heretics.

For years I have been trying to discover why English Pietists (Quakers) were social agitators, while German Pietists (Brethren) were so often conformists. Could it be that German authoritarianism is more a part of our heritage than many of us like to admit?

My final emphasis in such a course, therefore, would be an attempt to have my students understand that for every heretic who emerged triumphant and for every revolution which succeeded, history shows a dozen failures. Out of my study of history and its heresies, I would want to produce men and women willing to act on their convictions even though there was no assurance for them of success.

It is actually at this point that American education has perpetuated a fraud. It is a fraud because it resembles that process by which 18th century Catholic missionaries in China—in a wild attempt to convert as many natives as possible—suppressed the original story of the crucifixion. We have come to think of the educator as an apologist for society as it is, foreman in an ideological factory concerned with the adjustment of the bright questioning student to the status quo. Small-town school boards long ago robbed the elementary and secondary school teachers of their right to private personalities, so that there has grown up in this strangely educated land of ours endless stories concerning "the third sex."

I do not think a good teacher is a claims adjuster for any system. Rather, a good teacher is a questioner, a man of both thought and passion, an agitator. And on the highest level of all he may become a disturbing prophet. Jesus of Nazareth spoke quite clearly on the subject. "I come not for ye who are whole; the whole do not need a physician." He also stated that there is no virtue in putting new wine into old wineskins.

The institutionalization of Jesus as the Christ is an old story; when Rome could not destroy Christianity, it embraced, modified and finally corrupted it. The psychological entombing of the leader and the nullification of what the leader taught is best illustrated in modern terms. In Moscow they keep the body of Lenin in a perpetual display case. In America we have embalmed both our religion and our teaching, along with the Declaration of Independence, the original of which is on display in Washington and an exact copy of which was refused the signing by full dozens of people several years past, in Madison, Wisconsin, on the grounds that it "sounded Communist."

If I were to state what I have learned as a teacher since 1922, there would be those who would say that I am cynical. Nevertheless, here is my witness: (1) A teacher can propagandize forever for what is; insistence that there are two or more sides to any given question precipitates tensions. (2) Historians determine conclusions as much by what they leave out as by what they write down. (3) History is almost entirely written from the viewpoint of the elite: the generals, the politicians, the great of the earth. (4) The most dastardly lies are most often

From mural by Medford Neher

Education in a Brethren college should give to Brethren youth a sense of historical continuity and a pride in their heritage in which there are values that are of utmost importance to society as a whole

Education in a sectarian college brings no assurance of success in the worldly meaning and students should be prepared for failure in a material way the lies of silence, the pass-by-on-the-other-side of the street lies.

Neither sectarian nor Brethren education brings assurance of success, as the world defines the word success. There is no promise of upward mobility, salary increases, status drives, or even of honors. Actually, the accumulation of such manifestations is often only evidence of our compromises.

It is the responsibility of teachers in sectarian schools to prepare our students for failure (in a worldly sense), and to make those students forever conscious that the cross is the inevitable destiny of all who would follow Jesus. And peace of mind is not to be striven for, only the ability to live with our tensions.

Thus, in these Brethren schools I would look for professors whose business is to profess. Brethrenism, in that sense, could be equated with the ultimate in intellectual training. These professors would be open-minded, but openmindedness would not represent the absolute. For ultimately, every man who is mature compromises within principle; but there comes a time when compromise even within principles is impossible.

Another duty of "my" professors would be the testing of these values in the laboratory of life—their kudos would be their battle-stripes.

Realizing that such men are hard to find and hard to keep, it would be my ambition to protect them. There could be, under such circumstances, no compromise with academic freedom.

It is at this point that the true test of the great administrator comes. Few indeed are the men with courage enough to hire men more brilliant and articulate than they themselves—and after hiring them, protect them. The temptation of the strong is to make those around them into weaker stars rotating around their sun. (Brethren history, like the history of American labor, is replete with such examples.)

I suppose that to create such a school as I have herein proposed I should most obviously be more interested in quality than quantity. And I would not be ambitious to create an institution only to have it conform to the world. Athletes who place their prowess ahead of their intellectual attainments would find no home in my school. (There are times when I feel that wining teams and spectator sports are just one step removed from the bread and circuses of ancient Rome.) I would rather not be party to a conspiracy for recruiting players or paying coaches a higher salary than their professional colleagues. The present athletic program of many universities is a fraud and a lie—such programs pretend to be amateur and they almost never are. American societal values break down at the point where our youth see the contradiction between the extollers of "The Truth" and the success of those who practice "The Lie."

Finally, it is my opinion that Brethren schools should place men ahead of monuments. Let me illustrate. All over America, it is easier to get money for buildings than endowments for scholarships. How many big stone churches are being built to glorify man at the expense of men? I might wish that we would spend only half the amount for buildings and put the other half in a reserve fund that might give a minister an educational director or secretary so that he might spend more time in study and in meditation. This is why the image of the minister today is that of a double-breasted suit man, a raiser of funds, a smooth-shaven payer of mortgages.

How shocked the church would be if a prophet—long haired, raucous, and insolent—should arise from its ranks. If not incarcerated, such a prophet would be promptly psychoanalyzed.

There are many who judge a school by its buildings, its enrollment, its endowment. I am not among that number. I would ask about its men, particularly its poets and prophets. Did they produce one immortal here? Did they challenge the clichés which pass as the truth? There is no substitute, after all, for that shock of recognition which a good teacher gives to students.

In summary then, Brethren schools should be Brethren plus: prophetic, unapologetically visionary, havens for the otherwise-minded, in tension with the world, sectarian and proudly so. Otherwise, why Brethren schools?

When "Prevent" Means "Precede"

Luther A. Weigle

THE word prevent is used fifteen times in the King James Version of the Old Testament and twice in the New Testament, but always in the now obsolete sense of go before, anticipate, or precede (a meaning immediately derived from the Latin prae before + venire to come). When the psalmist says (119:147), "I prevented the dawning of the morning," the present-day reader of the King James Version is mystified. He may then consult the Revised Version of 1901, where he will read, "I anticipated the dawning of the morning," by which he will probably understand that the writer eagerly looked forward to the dawn. The Revised Standard Version expresses the meaning of the Hebrew clearly, "I rise before dawn." This is a part of the description of the devotional habits of a pious Hebrew, who rises before the dawn to begin the day with meditation and prayer. In the following verse, "Mine eyes prevent the night watches" is now translated, "My eyes are awake before the watches of the night."

When Peter came to Jesus to report that they were asked to pay the half-shekel tax (Matt. 17:25), the King James Version says that Jesus "prevented him." That does not mean that he kept Peter from speaking; it means simply that Jesus spoke to him first. When Paul tells the Thessalonians, anxious to know what will happen on the last great day, that "we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord shall not prevent them which are asleep" (1 Thess. 4:15 K.J.), he is not thinking of a possible attempt to keep the dead in their tombs; he is saying simply that those who are alive will not precede the dead to the triumphant meeting with the Lord.

In the other cases the Revised Standard Version replaces "prevent" with "meet" (Psa. 21:3; 59:10; Isa. 21:14; Amos 9:10), "come to meet" (Job 30:27; Psa. 79:8), "come before" (Psa. 88:13), "come upon" (2 Sam. 22:19; Psa. 18:18), "confront" (2 Sam. 22:6; Psa. 18:5), "receive" (Job 3:12), "has given to" (Job 41:11). The Hebrew word thus translated is qadam, the basic idea of which is to come or be in front or beforehand. The appropriate English word, therefore, depends upon the context. The King James Version translated qadam, in eleven other instances, by "meet," "come before," "go before," "disappoint," and "before." I will send a list of these instances, with chapter and verse numbers, to any one who requests it.

higher education accept responsibilinty for leavening or penetration, it should also attempt to balance with Christian influence the secular emphasis so common in state schools. Some denominations have spent large sums of money to erect private secondary schools. Others, and the Church of the Brethren is one, have renewed their efforts in Sunday schools and through other types of Christian education in the forms of camps, seminars, forums, etc. Many denominations have discovered all over again the importance of the family as a unit of Christian education. In turn, this discovery required renewed efforts in parent education.

A final illustration of balancing which manifests a true spirit of Christian charity is the effort put forth today to follow the youth of the church wherever they go. If for some reason they seek curricula in a state university, their denomination tries to minister to their spiritual needs. If only the denominational officials could realize the significance of such a ministry! Money invested in these young people to retain them for the church would likewise do a great service to our society. There is an expression now common to our young people in state universities of "on-the-hill" activities. Not infrequently large groups gather "on-the-hill" to discuss religious and Christian values and judgments of life. These activities frequently go begging for funds because they appear isolated rather than truly ingrafted. May I suggest that they might well become a balancing venture for Christian higher education?

Our schools have three big jobs confronting them. They cannot be accomplished adequately without the leaven of Christianity. While we wait for new ways of injecting Christianity, we can penetrate existing secular educational endeavors and we can attempt to balance secular education with renewed vigor in our local churches.

Church and College Are Partners

A. Stauffer Curry

MAN and wife are not merely partners in the usual meaning of a partner-relationship between two people. Instead, they are literally one in an inseparable spiritual and physical unity. Likewise, the church and college are not merely partners in the usual meaning of the partner-relationship between two agencies or institutions. Instead, they are one in the same manifestation of the kingdom of God on earth, even though their techniques and activities differ. The church and church college are of one spiritual flesh and blood. There are several ways in which they function as partners.

First, the church and college will have mutual respect for the vocational calling of the personnel in each field. After teaching public school for a year, I entered the active ministry. I well recall reports about a teacher who seemed to have expressed the opinion it was a step downward to enter the clergy. Perhaps this attitude prevailed because of low educational achievements of our ministers in days past. In any event, it did not exactly show complete respect for the calling of the ministry.

But perhaps more recently, especially with rising salaries of ministers, the vocation of teacher tends to be looked upon by some as less desirable than the ministry. Again, this should not be so and the church can render a basic service to the college by showing the great service rendered by college personnel.

As partners, in the second place, our church and our college will meet together the challenge of a growing population. The September 26, 1954, New York Times estimates the present college enrollment at 2,533,000. In ten years it may be 4,000,000. This would be a 58% increase. If these figures are accurate for all segments of the population, in ten years our colleges should be one and a half times their present size.

Incidently, some time ago I applied some population figures from a Kiplinger Letter to our own church. Our own church should grow from its present 200,000 people to 270,000 by 1975. All of these growth figures suggest the importance to the church of coping with their implications. It means keeping the increased number of youth attending our own churches and our own colleges.

Only 7.4 per cent of American students are in church colleges. I hope our churches will more and more come to see that part of the battle against materialistic secularism is the simple process of sending more and more of our youth to church colleges. Each local church should be a recruiting center and each pastor and alumnus a recruiting agent. To send a student to a church college does as much probably as many fine sermons in developing a religious society.

As partners our church and our college will help each other financially. This seems a trite point, probably, but in the words of Henry Louis Smith to his own group, the Presbyterian Church, U.S., is very significant: "Strong, liberally endowed, aggressive, well-patronized colleges make a strong, intelligent, agressive denomination. The church that saps the lifeblood of her colleges by refusing them a liberal and zealous support is lowering her own vitality and impoverishing her own lifeblood."

As I see it, as church and college work together, the college supplies the promotional and educational tools to the churches. In turn, the churches use them in cultivating an adequate moral and financial support for the colleges. I am not worried about whether or not our people have untapped resources. I am sure they do. But I am concerned about their seeing how these resources can be used in building God's kingdom through our colleges.

Our church and our colleges also work together as partners in helping to select and train one another's personnel. For example, I recently scanned a book, Men Who Control Our Universities. A scholar studied thirty university trustee boards. He listed many significant observations, including both adequacies and inadequacies of these trustees for their tasks. Space prevents analyzing his conclusions. But, needless to say, as generations pass from the scene, the church should be on the lookout for the best men to serve as college trustees. Perhaps district officers should be supplied with job analyses to be read to delegates before the electing of trustees. It is the case that the destinies of thousands of youth depend on these men in moments of decision such as the selection of presidents and the formation of major policies.

The church could also serve the college by helping to send impoverished faculty members to graduate school. Most anyone could list dozens of college teachers who ought to have further training but cannot afford it. Why could not some enterprising congregations help support a man's family while he goes off to the university?

Furthermore, the church could help the college as well as the total church by providing seasoned scholars with leaves of absence for the purpose of writing definitive works. For example, I feel we ought to have a good book setting forth our peace philosophy. We should probably have a book on our underlying philosophy of Christian education. There is room for a publication on Brethren doctrine. Our people are confused about social ethics and social service, and a good definitive work would serve a tremendous purpose. But with very heavy teaching loads, our men in college and seminary do not have time to produce these. It seems they should be released for blocks of time to write these much needed works. The Mennonites are doing a much better job than we are in this regard. Perhaps the time is here for our congregations to support men over a period of months as they produce these much needed volumes.

A Christian president and a Christian faculty can do little to foster religious life on the campus if they do not have Christian students

Religious News Service

Conversely, the college can help the church by serving as a sort of "professional school" for local church workers. Rightly or wrongly, the local churches expect college graduates to be better Sunday-school teachers, better committeemen, better church school superintendents than noncollege men. And yet how often a well-educated man or woman flounders over a Sunday-school lesson or is uncertain as he directs the activities of a church organization. I have heard of educational institutions that give courses in family life to everyone, on the assumption that practically all will get into this field. Similarly, training in some form or another for local church work should be given to every student in a church-related college.

In this connection the colleges might think more penetratingly about an emphasis on "Christian vocation." The concept that all people, whether ministers or not, serve God through their vocations is basically sound. It is a much neglected concept. Therefore, in college life, the Commercial Club, the Science Club, the Home Economics Club on the campus should have the same emphasis upon a religious orientation as do the Ministerium, the Clericus, or the Volunteers.

The church college as a partner of the church can offer a superior setting for the development of the religious life of its students

In the fifth place, our church and our college as partners should help each other think through the church's relationship to world affairs. Benjamin Fine, writer on educational matters for the New York Times, on January 2, 1955, reported that students are not getting enough education in history, politics and the like. He reported that half the prospective teachers in this field failed a test in a certain setting because they could not pursue a course in history or current events properly. Our problem is complicated by the historic philosophy of our church. It seems we ought to discover the alternatives growing out of this situation. Shall our position be one of spiritual isolation, such as that of an Old Mennonite bishop who told me "We want to let the state alone, and we also want them to let us alone"? Or shall our position be one of political action by which we try to influence world activities? Or shall it be that of a sort of "corrective," in the words of a friend, "It's good to have people like you Brethren around as a corrective? It's good for us."

There is a great need to discover how the college, the church and the world can work together to try to prevent the end of humanity through the next war. I have always rejoiced in the Manchester College department of peace studies and its objectives. I hope colleges and seminaries everywhere will quickly develop similar emphases in some form or another.

Finally, as partners our church and our college can work together in demonstrating that the church college can offer a superior setting for the development of the religious life. Essentially there are four ways by which a religious setting is developed on a campus. To begin with, there is the formal program of religious instruction. In some areas of the church, men's groups and others are endowing chairs of Bible, philosophy or religion. This is most notable and commendable.

Two, religion comes to the campus through religious teachers. Recently Edwin R. H. Espy published a book entitled The Religion of College Teachers. His thesis is that, even on church college campuses, the average teacher has little time to think through the deeper meanings of religion in the life of students. Often teachers have to rely on their own undergraduate training in religion. It is obvious why this can be the case among teachers in fields other than that of religion.

Maybe it seems impractical, but I have asked the question, Why could not our churches pay the way of popular and respected athletic coaches, science teachers, or other professors, to Bethany or elsewhere for a quarter semester where a seminar on religion on a college campus would be conducted for them?

Three, a religious setting is developed on a campus through a personal program of religion. The college pastor, religious counselor, Y.M.C.A. director, Wesleyan Foundation leader or even the director of the Hillel Foundation work wonders in this field. Recently I was reading of the great work Bro. Lorell Weiss is doing in Idaho in such a capacity. Our own colleges have developed excellent personnel and counseling programs in religion.

Four, religion comes to a campus when religious students are sent to our colleges. Local churches which do not send their best students to our own colleges are not on tenable grounds if they criticize in any way our institutions for any lack of religious orientation. A Christian president, a Christian faculty can do little unless a nucleus, at least, of devoted Christian students is sent to the campus. In other words, the Christian college is largely perpetuated when we concentrate on the religious development of children in the home, in the cradle roll, in the children's department and the youth departments of the church; it is perpetuated when we then send our youth to Christian colleges, there to join hands in the development of a Christian community to stand against the battering rams of secularism and to help establish and perpetuate the faith.

Racial Integration at Bridgewater

John W. Boitnott

ON MAY 24, 1954, the Council on Administration, which is a group of faculty members to advise the president on administrative matters, moved to ask the trustees of Bridgewater College for permission to admit Negro students on the same basis as white students. At the same meeting, the council decided to determine the attitude of the faculty on such a move. Accordingly, a poll was taken by ballot. The poll revealed that a majority of the faculty were in favor of such a move. Two members approved with reservations; one clearly dissented.

The petition of the council, endorsed by the faculty, was presented to the trustees on June 4. While the trustees did not take official action on the question, they suggested that it should be left to judgment of the administration. Furthermore, in the deliberations, it was pointed out that the charter of the college did not forbid the admission of Negroes and that the trustees had never passed legislation on the matter. This seemed to indicate that the office of admissions had the authority to admit Negro applicants, provided they met the requirements for admission as set forth in the catalogue.

During the summer, two Negroes applied for admission. The usual information was gathered, both were admitted, both are now registered as regular bona fide day students and both are classified as juniors. One is a woman, the wife of a minister and elementary school principal of Staunton. The other is a young man from Grottoes, Virginia, who is looking toward seminary training and the Christian ministry. Both seem well adjusted and happy. While they have not been active in extracurricular affairs, the students have accepted them with kindness. Not a word of complaint or criticism has been directed against them, so far as I know.

While time does not permit an elaboration of all aspects of the problem, it may be appropriate to review some of the pros and cons of it. Some of the pros are as follows:

1. The recent unanimous decision of the Supreme Court allowing for desegregation in public education. While this decision has been criticized and resisted in most Southern states, it has been regarded as a great achievement by international leaders because it removes an argument the Communist world has been able to make against us.

2. The attitude of Christian churches throughout the world, and especially the attitude, even official pronouncements, of the Church of the Brethren. Most churches of the northern and western parts of the U.S. have taught and practiced racial integration, in higher education at least, since the Civil War. Within the last year or since the Supreme Court decision, most of the large Southern denominations have voted to support desegregation as called for in the Supreme Court decision. In view of the attitude of Christian churches the world over and in view of the attitude of the Church of the Brethren especially, it would seem a bit irresponsive, to say the least, for Bridgewater College to hold out against racial integration.

3. The long practice of racial integration in institutions of higher learning, especially in the northern and western parts of the U.S. Even in the South it has been accomplished to some extent. For example, Negroes have been admitted to the graduate and law schools of the University of Virginia and some other Southern states. While Bridgewater was the first regionally accredited undergraduate white college in Virginia to

Now in the darkling evening sky,
The first few stars appear on high,
And twinkle clear and bright.
Above this lowly world of ours
The baffling mystery of stars
Defies all man-made might.

Are they vast worlds, more wonderful
Than anything that we can tell
Fixed there, in boundless space?
But generations come and go,
And star-lamps send their mystic glow
To all the human race.

But if we will but lift our eyes
Toward the peaceful evening skies
Awhile to meditate, admit Negroes, she was the last of the colleges affiliated with the Church of the Brethren to do so.

Before coming to a decision to begin a program of racial integration at Bridgewater, we attempted to predict the arguments that might be advanced against it. Furthermore, we tried to weigh these arguments and to determine their effect on the future welfare of the college. Some of the arguments with possible rebuttals follow:

1. A policy of racial integration at Bridgewater at this time would result in a significant reduction in enrollment. This point could be argued pro and con, but there is very little, if any, concrete evidence to prove the point. While our experience to date may be too short to be conclusive, it is significant to note that our enrollment was up seven per cent in October 1954 over 1953. Furthermore, not a single student, to my knowledge, has withdrawn because of dissatisfaction with the policy.

2. A policy of racial integration at Bridgewater at this time would result in a significant reduction in financial support. Again, the point could be argued pro and con, but very little concrete evidence could be obtained to substantiate either view. Since the policy was started last summer, a few criticisms have been registered in important areas and one or more pledges have been cancelled. However, in relation to the total contributions over the past six months, the loss seems exceedingly small.

3. A policy of racial integration at Bridgewater at this time would be embarassing to the other colleges of Virginia with whom we are associated in several important ways. While our action has been criticized in an instance or two, it has been defended in some. Only time will tell whether we will suffer further criticism or be praised by our college friends for being a first to adopt such a policy.

4. A policy of racial integration at Bridgewater or any school or college will aggravate the problem of racial intermarriage. This is the argument that very conscientious people, Brethren and non-Brethren alike, are apt to advance, often with considerable feeling. It is difficult to deny the probability of such a development in case many young men and women of the races associate freely on a college campus. About all we can say is that race is another one of the many grounds for incompatibility that the marriage counselor may have to face in the future.

Finally, the question of future policy arises. Very obviously, all I can do is to state personal opinion. I have no authority to speak for the administration or the trustees. As I view the problem at this moment it seems wise to continue to admit qualified Negroes on exactly the same basis as white students are admitted. In case this policy is pursued the number of Negro students will not become large, probably no more than five per cent of the total or never a larger ratio than the total number of Negroes bears to the total number of whites in the Shenandoah Valley.

Why I Am a Brethren

Jacob F. Replogle

THE title of this meditation may not be grammatically correct, Why I Am a Brethren, but it does express what I want to say.

The Church of the Brethren was founded 246 years ago in Schwarzenau, Germany, when eight souls gathered at the River Eder for baptism after days and nights of Bible study, prayer and soul-searching. No wonder they used Luke 14 with its emphasis on "count the cost."

Continued persecution drove the Brethren from Germany to the new land of America, to the colony of Pennsylvania, in 1719 and 1728. The first congregation was organized at Germantown in 1723, with twenty-three members. Next year fourteen went on a misionary tour.

The Brethren, because of the war hysteria of the Revolution, and because of its Germanic background, sought the frontiers which put them in the westward trek. Today the church girds the globe, but its membership is small.

So much for who the Brethren are. They hold in common with all Christians the evangelical faith and the Lordship of Christ. But what can justify the church's existence. Why not close up and go in with some other, larger group? Does the Church of the Brethren have a distinctive contribution to make which is not or could not be made better by some other group? I believe so. That is why I am a Brethren and not something else.

It is a family church. Certainly I am a member of the Church of the Brethren because I was born in it. My parents were Brethren. All my life I have known the Brethren. One of the earliest recollections is going to church in the old surrey at Denton. When we moved to Wilmington, it was not long before there were services in our home and a church was born. Washington City church was home for worship, for recreation, for work, for social life. When there was not enough money for carfare, we walked to church. It was born in me. We came to know Brethren from far and near. I am a member because of my parents. They instilled a love for the church.

It is a New Testament-centered church. Not only did I inherit the church, but I have come to understand that the New Testament is our rule of faith and practice. There is no book of discipline, no restrictive creed that is static. The New Testament is our guide and creed, the Christ, our example and pattern. Liturgy and ritual are minor elements. A Bible-reading and New Testament-practicing devotion is paramount. It is obedience to the Word which is central for Brethren. "What does the New Testament say?" are the first words of a Brethren.

Hence, the Church of the Brethren is rich in symbolism, not as sacraments giving salvation, but handles, ordinances, as means of grace. Only as we come to see the deeper meaning of the love feast and feet-washing service, the communion, the anointing, baptism and the salutation of love, can we understand the meaning of being a Brethren.

It is a church believing that peace is the Christian way. Out of a war-sick, disillusioned world, the Brethren, reading the New Testament, would not compromise with the world. They could not avoid the Christian gospel of peace. It meant three things for the Brethren: (1) that war is sin. The whole spirit of war is against everything for which Christ stood, not only "Thou shalt not kill" but "Love your enemies. Overcome evil with good." (2) It meant "there shall be no force in religion." Religion is a free act of faith, decided by mature judgment. The Brethren had experienced their babies snatched from their arms and baptized. There would be no compulsion except the compulsion of the Holy Spirit. (3) Hence, peace was likewise a personal relationship with all men, creating brotherhood through redemptive love. We had to be Brethren in deed—no caste, no color, no class distinctions. A man must seek forgiveness. A convert with slaves must set them free. Brotherhood must be practiced.

It is out of this inheritance that the Brethren today are in service around the world—because the love of Christ constrains them and they are called to compassion.

It strives to practice what it preaches. I am a Brethren because I see this church striving to live out in practice what it reads in the Bible as precept, falteringly and poorly, perhaps, but honestly. Precepts into practice is the faith of the Brethren. What more can be said? For Brethren, forgiveness must be practiced. Hence, the use of Matt. 18. Temperance in all things, abstinence from liquor and tobacco has been a principle taught from the beginning. Science is now catching up. The simple life is essentially the spiritual Life, and this spiritual life must be cultivated by simple and disciplined living.

"A Brethren's word is as good as his bond" has been traditional. It should be the hallmark of all members of the church.

Yes, I am a Brethren because the Church of the Brethren is a committed church, a fellowship committed to the Lordship of Christ and the following of his way. It is a family church. It is a New Testament-centered church. It is a church believing that peace is Christ's way. And it strives to live out in life, whatever the cost, what it reads in his Word.

Reviews of Recent Books

Books are reviewed here as a service to the church. A review does not necessarily constitute an unqualified recommendation. Purchase can be made through the Brethren Publishing House, Elgin, Illinois. Titles recommended for church libraries are marked with an asterisk (*).—Editor.

Teaching Christian Stewardship. Glenn McRae. Bethany Press, 1954. 160 pages. $1.25.

Two themes run through this book: first, the conviction that "Christian stewardship is the essence of the gospel of Jesus Christ"; second, the assurance that "stewardship must be taught" if people are to be Christian stewards.

A sound theology and philosophy of Christian stewardship in terms of the teachings of Christ and the entire New Testament are set forth in clear and concise terms. Then the author gives specific suggestions as to how to teach stewardship effectively in and through the local church.

The local church that wants every member to be Christian stewards will find this little book to be one of the best available in the field. Pastors and other local church leaders will want to use this book as a regular handbook in reveloping a stewardship education program that is worthy of the name Christian.—Olden D. Mitchell, Detroit, Mich.

A Book of Installation Services. Virginia Ely. Revell, 1954. 208 pages. $2.50.

This book contains many helpful suggestions and material for all sorts of installation services, and is therefore useful for church libraries.

Some of the music suggested, and much of the illustrative material, is hardly up to the level of the best available. This reviewer particularly disliked the heavy diet of war and military illustrative material.

If you have access to good poetry, such a hymnal as we now have and good sources of illustration, this book can be helpful and stimulating.—Edward K. Ziegler.

Life Looks Up. Charles B. Templeton. Harpers, 1955. 192 pages. $2.50.

Here are stimulating messages given in simple language and warm appeal that every layman can appreciate and understand. The author, out of his wide experience as the evangelist for the National Council has spoken helpfully to the average person about making his life Christian.—Charles E. Zunkel.

KINGDOM GLEANINGS

One of the Church of the Brethren colleges is attempting to fill the following positions next September: mathematics, physical education for women, music—voice and conducting, home economics, nurse. Qualified persons who are interested are asked to write C. Ernest Davis, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill.

Since A Note to Women has appeared in the April Brethren Service News on page 5, the number of the National Reserve Plan-UMT bill has been changed from H. R. 2967 to H. R. 5297. This is very important to note if you are writing regarding the bill. When you write be sure to refer to the new number of the bill.

The second year of the Town and Country Church Development Program for the Middle Atlantic area began April 1. From the churches which enroll will be named in each state a rural church of the year; from these will be chosen the rural church of the area. The citations carry cash awards. In the first year of the program churches from each of the states in the area and from fifteen communions were enrolled. Sponsors of this program are the state councils of churches of Maryland-Delaware, New Jersey, New York and West Virginia, the Westminster Theological Seminary and the Sears-Roebuck Foundation.

A new study series. The Church and the Community, which includes a discussion guide for Christian action and an instructor's manual for Christian action, is recommended by the Brethren Service Commission. Some chapter headings are: Why Worry About Community Relations, Church Goals for a Better Community, A Community Inventory—Gaps and Problems and The Social Structure of Our Community. This series will help people study their community and its trouble spots and initiate programs of Christian action that attack the causes of community ills. Discussion guide, 50c; instructor's manual, $1.00. Order from General Brotherhood Board, Attention Brethren Service Commission, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill.

Now is the time for churches and families to decide to take an exchange student into their home. Applications are now being accepted and it is hoped to get students assigned early in order that they may correspond with their American family before they come. Thirty-eight European students will be coming, along with some from Central and South America. We are glad to see new families and communities, who have not yet sponsored a student, have this opportunity. We have had an excellent experience in this program for several years and it remains one of the outstanding programs of the church. For application blanks write: John H. Eberly, Student Exchange Program, Brethren Service Center, New Windsor, Md.

Samuel McCaman, licensed in the Rodney church, Mich.

The School for Town and Country Ministers, sponsored by the Maryland-Delaware Council of churches and the Westminster Theological Seminary, is scheduled for July 5-20, at the seminary in Westminster, Md. An outstanding faculty is being secured.

Bookstore in Johnstown

On April 1 the Brethren Publishing House opened a retail book and supply center under the name of Mack Religious Book Shop at 115 Market St., Johnstown, Pa. The purpose of this project is to serve the churches in the Johnstown area on an across-the-counter basis, with good books, Bibles, church and church school supplies of various kinds. In addition it is our hope also to serve the Protestant needs of the greater Johnstown area in these fields. As the project progresses, plans are being formulated to have an educational outreach available to the local churches of the area. Such an outreach will have personnel available to help churches utilize the curriculum materials and promote the Gospel Messenger.

The Johnstown book outlet will not be used as a mail order center. Rather the sales will be entirely on an across-the-counter basis. Its purpose is to serve the Johnstown area and the immediately surrounding community. Ernest S. Statler of Somerset, Pa., a well-known leader and layman of Western Pennsylvania, has been selected as manager. He is enthusiastically taking hold of the task of providing an enlarged service to the church in the area of books, Bibles, church and church school supplies.

McPherson College

From March 3 to 6 there assembled at McPherson College about 350 youth to participate in a regional youth conference. The main speakers were Dr. Floyd Faust of Columbus, Ohio, Ed Crill of Elgin, Ill., and numerous pastors and leaders within the region. The conference climaxed with a youth banquet on Saturday night at which time youth who will give next summer to work camps and other projects were consecrated under the common title, Servants of the Yoke. Such projects will be located at Springfield, Mo., Corpus Christi, Texas, and elsewhere.

The a cappella choir gave its spring concert. The program presented a wide range of music, including a cowboy ballad with the members of the choir in cowboy costume. The auditorium was filled and the program was well received. The choir will conduct its spring tour during the Easter vacation, traveling northward through Nebaska and Iowa generally, a distance of about 2,000 miles.

The sixty-eighth annual meeting of the trustees of the college convened at the college, Feb. 21-23. At this meeting plans were made for further steps in the ten-year development project. Floor plans for the new Sharp Hall were examined, refinements in curriculum were discussed, general authorization for some further construction of apartments to house married couples was given, plans for joint studies by trustees, students, faculty, alumni and other individuals interested in higher education were made. The trustee meeting began with a joint trustee-faculty dinner.

About thirty students representing the various national and racial groups at the college met in the home of the president in early March for an international dinner. Dishes were prepared by each of the international students and as the group ate together the place and significance of the various foods in the culture and the diets of the various nations or groups were discussed. This dinner is becoming a traditional affair.

Alumni chapter meetings are being held in various areas of the Western Region for fellowship and planning. Such groups have met recently in Kansas, Iowa, California, and Colorado.

The twenty-fifth Booster Banquet sponsored jointly by the city of McPherson and McPherson College was held on March 25. Julian Gromer of Elgin, Ill., presented a movie-lecture entitled Jewels of the Pacific.

Various musical ensembles and deputation groups are traveling in the region during the spring months. Such groups include ladies' quartet, ladies' trio, male quartet, freshman quartet, string ensemble, a cappella choir, chapel choir and various dramatic and speaking groups.

Prof. E. S. Hershberger, associate professor of art at McPherson College since 1945, has accepted the position as head of the department of art at Goshen College, Goshen, Ind. He will be leaving McPherson following the present semester to begin his work at Goshen.

The Red Cross bloodmobile, which makes its periodic visit to McPherson College, found that more students volunteered to give blood on March 7 than could be handled. Many donors were turned away, but these donors will be called upon to give blood in April when the bloodmobile comes to the city of McPherson again.

McPherson College will be represented at the national debating tournament held April 4-8, 1955, at the University of Redlands at Redlands, Calif. Anne Keim of Idaho, Mary Lu Wise of Iowa, Don Ullom of Colorado and Don Faules of Colorado will attend. Professor Max McAuley will accompany the students. The question, "Resolved that the United States should extend diplomatic recognition to Communist China," will be debated. Members of the debate squad will also participate in the rounds of discussion, extemporaneous speaking and oratory.

McPherson College Players Club will present the play, Deep Are the Roots, at the Annual Conference at Grand Rapids on Friday night, June 17. Members of the original cast of the college will present this controversial play which deals with the emotions of an aristocratic family and a returned war hero of Negro blood. Members of the cast are Max Parmley, a junior who plays the lead role, Irene Shull, Leon Albert, Peg Hoeffer, La Faughn Hubbard, Duane Hoover, Leland Lengel, Dale Shenefelt, Jo Ann Silver, Joe Reeves and Billy Joe Hidreth. The play is directed by Mrs. Wilbur Yoder, speech and dramatics instructor.

Irene Shull, a sophomore from Colo, Iowa, was winner of the state alcohol oratorical contest held at Winfield, Kansas. The title of her oration was Invitation to Death. This contest was held in connection with the state convention of the W.C.T.U. and was the eighth annual alcohol oratorical contest sponsored by the Kansas chapters.

Plan World Fellowship of Moslems and Christians

A World Fellowship of Moslems and Christians will be formed next year at an international convocation in Spain, Switzerland or Pakistan. Plans for the creation of the fellowship were made by the Continuing Committee of Moslem-Christian Cooperation which was organized last April.

Twenty-eight delegates from fourteen countries adopted a constitution for the World Fellowship, which will be presented to the 1956 convocation. Fourteen of the delegates were Christians and fourteen Moslems. Under the proposed constitution, local Christian-Moslem groups will be set up in cities and towns over the world. The aim is to make the movement a grass-roots one instead of a get-together of the spiritual and intellectual leaders of both religions.

Post Office Intensifies Clean-Up-the-Mails Efforts

Postmaster General Arthur E. Summerfield has called attention to the growing volume of unwanted lewd and obscene matter that is being sent through the mails into American homes. He says there has been a seventy-three per cent increase in the last six months in cases dealing with indecent materials sent through the mails.

The Postmaster General says: "This is a serious and nation-wide problem of public morality which effects all our citizens. In our common interest this misuse and prostitution of the mails should be stopped by a sensible preventive program of the Post Office Department, acting for the people as directed by the law enacted by Congress."

Mr. Summerfield urges citizens who wish to help the Post Office Department in its clean-up-the-mails campaign to deliver to their local postmaster, any material received through the mails which they consider obscene. Postmasters throughout the country are instructed to forward such material to Washington to the Office of the Solicitor, the chief legal officer of the Post Office Department, for proper action.

Australian Religious Groups Aiding Flood Victims

Religious groups all over Australia have collected funds, food and clothing for victims of floods in New South Wales which took a toll of nearly forty lives and damaged or destroyed thousands of homes. Even aboriginal tribesmen at the Methodist mission in North Australia are helping in relief efforts. Churches played a major role in organizing aid as the floods, worst in Australia's history, engulfed whole areas.

Church Organizations Urged to Modernize

According to the American Institute of Management, religious groups in the United States must modernize their operations or the widespread gains in church attendance which have marked the postwar years will be endangered.

The institute says: "Our religious bodies—especially Protestant denominations—have a blind spot when it comes to keeping pace with modern developments in communications, personnel and organization structures. The average business organization would go bankrupt if it allowed its managerial practices to lag half as badly as our religious groups have done for years."

EKD Synod Asks Powers to End Partition of Germany

The Synod of the Evangelical church in Germany recently adopted a resolution urging the great powers to end Germany's unnatural portition and make it possible for Germans to live united in freedom. The measure also asked Christians to pray and work for peace. It stressed that the church could not outline a political course that would guarantee reunification.

The resolution said, "Together with all Christians in the world, the Synod feels summoned to the task of promoting peace and abhors the idea that present tensions can be solved by war."

Hails Spread of the Judeo-Christian Aid Concept

For the first time in history the Judeo-Christian concept of "help thy neighbor" has become international in practice, according to J. Donald Kingsley, director of the New York City Welfare and Health Council. He said that historians of the future will be more impressed by the 20th century development of this ethic of international aid than by the technological development of the H-Bomb.

Dr. Kingsley said social welfare must work from the bottom up, starting among basic units of family and neighborhood, helping men and later nations to stand on their own feet. In this way, social work is merely an application of Christian principles.

Form Evangelical Radio, TV Academy in Germany

An Evangelical Academy for Radio and Television Work has been formed under the patronage of Bishop Hanns Lilje of Hannover. The Academy will have no permanent site but will hold meetings at the regional locations. Its aim is to promote the church's interests in the radio and TV field and to train experts for church work. It will also promote discussions with officials of West German radio and TV networks.

Nepal Opens Its Doors to Missionaries

For the first time in nearly 200 years the Kingdom of Nepal has opened its doors to Christian missionaries. An international team of medical missionaries, including two man-and-wife teams from the U. S., have already established a small hospital and five maternity and child welfare centers in the picturesque Himalayan country.

Not since 1771, when Nepal expelled a band of Capuchin monks, has the remote mountain kingdom permitted Christian missionary enterprises within its borders. The bulk of Nepalese practice the rites of an ancient branch of Hinduism. Buddhism is also widely practiced. The new missionary program is sponsored by the United Christian Mission based in India and co-operating with the foreign mission boards of Presbyterian, Methodist and Disciples of Christ groups in this country.

Manchester College

THE special convocation held at Manchester College the week end of Friday and Saturday, March 11 and 12, brought to the campus a record gathering of more than 1,500 people. Under the chairmanship of Dale A. Strickler the convocation committee presented a strong program for these two days, focusing attention upon the general theme, The Role of Manchester College in the Days Ahead. Highly significant were the sessions on Friday afternoon and evening, given completely to consideration of The Role of Manchester College in the Church of the Brethren. Presenting various aspects of this theme were Earl S. Garver, Paul M. Robinson and A. Stauffer Curry.

The Saturday sessions were oriented primarily to the alumni, the local community and the public. The strong presentations were made by O. M. Swihart of Kokomo, Indiana, Fred A. Replogle of Chicago, Dr. J. Russell Humbert, president of DePauw University, Andrew W. Cordier of the United Nations and Dr. Harold C. Urey, eminent scientist of the University of Chicago.

At the Friday evening session which was held in the Manchester church sanctuary, a ceremony of unusual interest took place. Twelve lay people of the churches of the Central Region were awarded Manchester College laymen's citations "for outstanding service as a leader in the Church of the Brethren and for steadfast loyalty to the wider interests of the kingdom of God." President Schwalm stated that Manchester College, as an arm of the Church of the Brethren, wished to honor these laymen with a citation and thus to recognize the great body of the lay people of our churches without whose loyalty, devotion and active service our churches could not be maintained strong and vital. Those who were awarded this honor are Wilbur S. Barnhart, First church, Indianapolis; Dr. Curtis B. Bowman, First church, Chicago; Nevin L. Coppock, Middle District church, Tipp City, Ohio; Joseph B. Flora, Trotwood, Ohio; Theo A. Hoover, Trinity church, Detroit; Harold K. Loutsenhizer, Lick Creek church, Bryan, Ohio; Thurl D. Metzger, Spring Creek church, Claypool, Indiana; Dr. Daryl McCoid Parker, Beech Grove church, Hollansburg, Ohio; F. Willard Powers, Mt. Morris, Illinois; Orion J. Stover, Milledgeville, Illinois; Modena Minnich Studebaker and Daniel West, Middlebury church, Indiana.

Closing the session on Friday evening, Bro. Schwalm outlined a long-range program for Manchester which the Board of Trustees is launching to culminate when the college celebrates its 75th birthday in 1964. Within this period the board is hoping to place on the campus a new women's residence hall, a new science building, a new student center, make possible badly needed improvements to the present plant and add materially to the endowment funds. Bro. Schwalm stated that this must be accomplished by a series of steps. The first will be to launch a Manchester March of Progress campaign now and to continue during the next fifteen months for a goal of $550,000 to $725,000 for the women's residence hall, the new science building and some badly needed improvements. Subscriptions to the fund will be paid over a period of thirty months.

The Board of Trustees in special session Saturday noon, March 12, gave further consideration to the coming campaign and took the following formal action: "RESOLVED, that the Board of Trustees of Manchester College, having reviewed the plans and procedures for the Manchester March of Progress, hereby endorses and approves them, and urges that steps be taken immediately to put these plans into action."

The campaign is now in process of organization in North Manchester, the home town of the college and in several neighboring churches. Succeeding areas will be announced later as plans develop. Fred A. Priser of Goshen, Indiana, a member of the Board of Trustees of the College and Galen T. Lehman, executive secretary of the Central Region, are serving as general co-chairmen of the campaign.

CASE STUDY

Ruth Griggs
Belle Glade, Florida

THERE is a mother in Osceola whose pluck you would admire...whose plight you would deplore. Mrs. Luce has five children under nine years. Her husband is an alcoholic and has drunk heavily the past five years. "Every time I've really needed to rely on him, he's been drunk," she said one day.

The family came to Florida from North Carolina a year and a half ago after spending a desperate summer up there. The North Carolina Welfare Department paid the bus fare of the wife and children so they could get back to Florida, where they had the needed residence requirements for aid.

During the first months back in Florida Mr. Luce was drinking so heavily he could not hold a job. He battled with great "bugs and snakes" which he pursued wildly with a chair in their one-room home. In an effort to survive, she had him locked in jail. There he put on a sick act and was transferred to the local hospital and was soon released and sent home.

Mrs. Luce had to give the babies whatever milk she could beg or borrow to keep them alive after their return from North Carolina. The daily change from Carnation to Pet to homogenized to raw milk upset the baby's stomach and he nearly died in spite of specialist care in a big city hospital. The next little boy also got sick enough to need hospitalization.

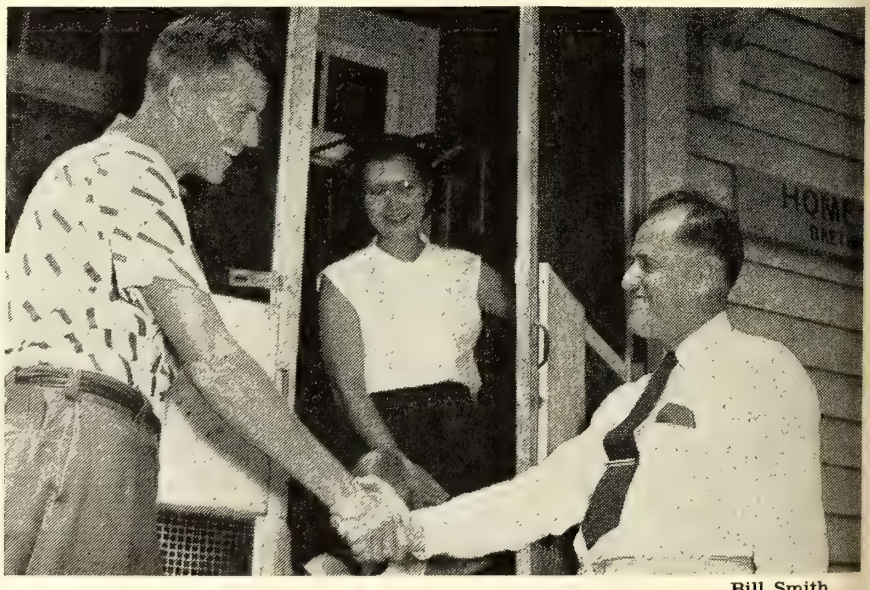
We talked very straight to Mr. Luce about his obligations to his fine family—how indirectly the children's illness was his fault because they had not been adequately fed and provided for. With great sincerity, remorse and promise of better behavior Mr. Luce strung us along. He would work during the day, come down after work to show us that he was sober and then get drunk. This went on for a couple of weeks.

We tried hard to get him to attend Alcoholics Anonymous as an aid to his avowed attempt at sobriety. He cleverly avoided going several Monday nights. One night when we went by to pick him up to go to the meeting, he was lying in bed groaning, rubbing his stomach and crying, "O Miz Ruth, I'm dying. Get me to the hospital quick! No, I'm not drunk. I'm a sick man, Miz Ruth."

We checked on getting him into a veterans hospital. On every response, "Joe Luce? Yes, we know him. Drunk again? No, we can't take him because his case is the result of alcoholism and not a service connected disability."

"Have you lived in this state of desperation long?" I asked Mrs. Luce.

"His drinking wasn't bad the first few years we were married. But the past five years have been just like this, one crisis right after another."



"How have you stayed together this long?"

"I reckon I've stayed with him just because I've never had any kin folks on whom I could rely until I could get divorced and straightened out. Seems like I've always had a baby, too."

We were unable to get state aid for dependent children as long as an able-bodied father was in the home, so they lived on dry beans, faith and a few donated groceries.

Mr. Luce soon solved this dilemma. He went to West Palm Beach, forty miles away, got drunk, hired a taxi to bring him home promising that his wife would pay for the trip when they arrived at Osceola. She, of course, had no money to put on the $15 taxi bill, so the driver called the police and Joe was jailed. For this and writing a phoney check on a nonexistent bank, and a few other things, he was given ninety days in jail.

While he was in jail, Mrs. Luce secured $81 a month from aid to dependent children (state welfare) and carefully budgeted it to reach over the month's bills, rent, food, medical expenses, etc. She stretched $81 further than I've ever seen money reach before. She rented a sewing machine and made over old clothing for the family. She took in washings and ironings to supplement the monthly aid check. An interested church group donated paint and she painted the inside of her metal shelter a soft, homey green. Flowers began to bloom around the doorstep.

Then Joe came home. For a few weeks he worked, stayed sober, helped buy groceries, made plans to have much dental work done for Mrs. Luce. The children were happy to have this changed daddy home again. Then while hopes were high, the whole dream crashed and the old Joe returned with week-long drunks, unemployment, hunger, quarrels, tension, messy house, upset souls and sad faces.

Mrs. Luce said, "One night I lay down on the bed dead tired and cried, 'How can I go any longer? How can I put up with all this?' As I looked up at the cardboard ceiling which Harold (1-W man on the nursery staff) had fixed for us and I thought, 'If someone cares enough about the family to do that for us, I shouldn't be the one to give up!' "

We felt she had put up with enough. We petitioned the court to appoint a board of physicians to examine Joe and recommend whatever procedures they deemed necessary. Their report was: "Mr. Luce is mentally incompetent due to phychosis from long-continued use of alcohol. He is dangerous when under the influence of alcohol and should be given treatment." He is now in the jail awaiting an opening in the state hospital, where he will be in the ward for alcoholics and will receive treatment for six months or a year.

We feel that this mother and children have a lot of possibilities. The mother has integrity and intelligence. She does as good a job with her children as anyone could who works to win the livelihood and who has had so much disappointment, upheaval and terror in the home.

She has been working in the packing houses during the day—ironing at night. Her work earns enough for food and rent. It doesn't reach for clothes, bedding, much needed medical and dental care for Mrs. Luce. Her health is not good.

We feel this family needs a boost. When packing-house work is over, she can again get the aid for dependent children, but this also just barely covers the most necessary expenses. We cannot help much as there is no money in our budget to assist this deserving mother and children. We would like to see the father rehabilitated so that he can take up his family responsibilities as he should. In the meantime, we will do what we can to help these people who don't have much of a chance in life because of circumstances which surround the life of the migrants. As Christian people, we must be concerned and share.

Refugee Resettlement Notes

Outstanding

Our present program of refugee resettlement continues to grow in scope and interest among churches and concerned individuals all over the Brotherhood. We are greatly encouraged by the extraordinary efforts of a number of churches and persons who have taken the responsibilities of serving several refugee families with sponsorships. We feel that we should mention especially the name of Ray M. Petersime of Gettysburg, Ohio, who serves as the chairman of the Southern Ohio District resettlement committee. Mr. Petersime has sent in thirty-one assurances that he has sponsored himself and another fourteen assurances have come from the district. The people of Eastern Pennsylvania have provided fourteen assurances from their membership to date. About nine churches have filed sponsorships for more than one family and more than ten individuals have signed assurances for two or more families. A large number of individuals and churches have arranged already for one refugee family to come and many more are studying the opportunity of refugee resettlement.

Decisions

It takes careful organization and a devoted sense of Christian service for a church group to find employment and a home and give moral support for a strange, bewildered family. The church council meetings that result in a decision to study the requirements and responsibilities of a sponsorship, often become the turning points for lives just as worthy in the sight of God as our own. The refugee has been forced into his futile existence usually because of a political situation or purge born out of the malice and greed of unchristian hearts. For many of them, only the concern and love of true Christian hearts, in turn, will counteract the injustice they suffer.

Now . . .

Now is the time for our church to accept this opportunity to provide homes for refugee people. Brethren Service and the World Council of Churches are working together in Europe to find deserving, needy families who would be best served in Brethren-sponsored situations. The Brethren Service Commission and Church World Service are working together here in the United States to negotiate the final resettlement of the "Brethren-selected" refugees. Two years from now will be too late for us to act, because the Refugee Relief Act of 1953 expires at the end of 1956 and the doors of opportunity for foreign peoples in America will again swing shut.

Local Church and College Co-operation

C. Ernest Davis

Consecrated and understanding college teachers help to guide and challenge students into avenues of Christian vocation and service

I HOPE that on seeing this title your reaction is favorable. But just suppose that you are tired, feel yourself pushed around by a lot of interests demanding attention and, broken by this additional straw, you say somewhat belligerently, "Why should we co-operate? What do we owe the colleges? What have they ever done for us?" Well, as the youth editor is constantly saying, "Let's face it."

Historically our colleges were founded by churchmen. They were established because those men had a concern for young people and for the welfare of the church. Not only by accident of origin but also by the processes of historical development our colleges are in fact institutions of the church. Their work is a part of the program of the church. Therefore, we should co-operate.

Functionally the colleges depend upon the church not only for students and financial support, but also for guidance and a sense of direction. Also, the colleges serve the church in significant ways. Therefore, they not only must have, they actually deserve our co-operation.

Logic would drive the church and the Christian college together because of such common objectives as serving youth and preparing them for the experiences of adult life, promoting intelligent citizenship with world-wide horizons, teaching God's truth as found in nature and revelation and advancing the interests of the spiritual kingdom of our Lord. Yes, for philosophical reasons, we must co-operate.

Areas of Co-operation

Having pointed out the grounds of co-operation, I should like to mention three specific areas where co-operation is both possible and profitable.

First, the solicitation, financing and placement of students. A college exists primarily for its students. It needs to discover, solicit and enroll the youth who should be on its campus. Those prospective students, for the most part, are in our local churches. Most of them should find their way to your church college without the school's having to beat the bushes of your parish to find and challenge them. The local church can render effective co-operation by providing complete, accurate lists of prospective students to the college office with pertinent information about each person named. Do not list only the current crop, but also those who will be coming along later so the college can spot its prospective students early, give them helpful guidance and cultivate their interest.

The pastor and other local church personnel should also present the claims of the church college to prospective students and to their parents. National Christian College Day gives one opportunity to do this, but its observance alone is not enough. This job needs to be done in season and out, formally and informally. Repetition is necessary.

The local church can well afford to co-operate with the college by welcoming the various deputation groups and personal visits by faculty and administrative officers which the college is able to offer. The church should also arrange for groups of young people to visit the college and attend events that take place there. This is good student cultivation.

Your church can make the job of student solicitation much easier and less expensive for your college. In fact, you can deliver the bulk of your students to your own church college without much effort on the part of the college's field staff. Will you do it?

Aiding Students

Students must be financed, for it costs money to go to college. Many parents and local churches are inclined to let the college worry about providing the financial assistance needed. The college is willing to do what it can, but all the responsibility should not rest there. Let the local church community provide remunerative work during vacation periods for its student population. In my personal experience as a student, this was one of the big factors in my being able to stay in school. The local church might be able to provide one or more scholarships and perhaps maintain a loan fund for its own young people. Some members of the local church could make personal loans to deserving young people of the congregation.

After graduation, a student wants a job. The local church can do the student, the college and itself a service by helping in the matter of placement. We should arrange to bring some of our best college graduates into the business, professional and vocational opportunities that are open in our respective communities. You know about the opportunities and the college will be glad to advise you about the available people. Get together; co-operate.

Benefits to Local Church

Second, co-operation results in the enrichment of the life and program of the church.

The schools often hold or are hosts to conventions and conferences that are held for the benefit of the ministry, workers and program of the church. The local church should take all possible advantage of these opportunities by representation and participation.

Our colleges offer a considerable amount of extension service to our churches in such fields as music, Christian service training, doctrinal teaching, Bible institutes, recreation and issues of social concern. The wise church will seek to avail itself of some of these opportunities.

The colleges also provide leadership at church camps and in district and regional meetings. You may occasionally call upon the resources of your college library or profit from the research of some professor. Some of our schools are giving special attention to rural life and the country church. All our schools are concerned about the future ministerial supply of the church and often faculty members and mature students assist in meeting acute pastoral needs in near-by churches. Your church college is trying to be alert to your needs. Your co-operation is solicited.

Financial and Spiritual Support

A third area of co-operation is support, both financial and spiritual.

I have already covered the important area of financial aid to students. Local churches should give generously to the support of the college in their area, both as congregations and as individuals. Space will not allow for the presentation of the need, but I can assure you it is real and in most cases, urgent.

There is also the opportunity for gifts other than cash. You may be able as a congregation or as an individual to present a valuable piece of equipment. It may be furniture, tools, food, a car, a truck or anything the college needs. You may have a rare book or one hot off the press which the college library would like to have. You may have some worthwhile contribution for the college museum. Your college should not be made a dumping ground for junk, but it does have material needs which can often be met in kind. You may own a house, a farm or a business that you could give now or later, outright or on an annuity basis. If you can't turn loose anything now, remember your college in your will.

Finally, give the college the benefit of your moral support, in word and deed, and of your prayers and spiritual concern. Colleges will perish unless they have this spiritual atmosphere in which to breathe.

A School of Home and Family Life

E. R. Henricks

IN JULY and August 1954, the La Place church, Southern Illinois, began planning the church program for the new year beginning Oct. 1. We had been having a school of missions for a number of years, so we decided to try a school of home and family life. The church board asked the Homebuilders to sponsor the school. Early in the fall the officers of the Homebuilders, with the pastor as adviser, met to plan the school in detail. It was a new venture for us and we were not at all sure how it would work out.

It was decided to use the last four Sunday nights in January and to follow the general plan used in our school of missions—a fellowship lunch, class sessions and a closing general assembly. Classes were provided for children of preschool age, primaries, juniors, junior highs, youth, young adults and older adults.

The selection of teachers posed a problem, but this proved to be easily solved by the fine response of those whom we selected. We thought we ran into a real problem when we attempted to plan the general outline of the courses and to find the material for each course. This, of course, was done with the help of the teachers selected. We discovered that we could not find books and material as easily adaptable as was true for our school of missions.

With the splendid co-operation of the Brotherhood home and family life department and the Brethren Loan Library, we were able to surmount what had seemed an almost impossible task of finding the necessary helps for the teachers. After these helps were provided, each teacher was given the liberty of planning his or her own course and procedures, with the advice of the pastor when necessary. The general subjects of discussion for the youth and adult groups were: what makes a happy marriage; democracy in the home; religion and worship in the home; division of work in the home; discipline in the home; family recreation and entertainment; mutual responsibility of home and church for the family; and the responsibility of the grandparents.

The general assemblies were arranged well in advance. We had Prof. Boyer and four students from Millikin University, Decatur, Ill., who conducted a panel on the general theme, Marriage, presenting such topics as planning for marriage, settling the religious problem, problems of adjustment, etc. The next evening we had Mrs. Chapell of Decatur, who is the probation officer for juvenile delinquents. Although in most cases the young people with whom she works come from the city, she cautioned us that our being in a rural community, fifteen miles from Decatur, does not eliminate the possibility of delinquency among our rural youth. On the last Sunday evening, we showed the film, As the Twig is Bent, which was secured from our own Visual Education Service, Elgin, Ill.

Although we approached this school somewhat in fear and trepidation, it proved to be the most outstanding feature that we have ever attempted. The teachers worked hard, having to use their own initiative in much of their planning and procedures, and it resulted in the best work they have ever done. The response of the entire church, from the children to the grandparents, was most enthusiastic.

Christian Home Observance in India

ONE of the high points of the Dahanu church this past year was the observance of Christian home week. The National Christian Council has encouraged the local churches to put on this type of program and has through the past decade prepared considerable material as aids for the same—pictures, stories, plays, books with many helpful discussions, etc.

The opening Sunday morning sermon presented a study of the home of Aquila and Priscilla—an early Christian home with hospitality, a comprehension of Christian truth, and zeal for the spread of the gospel. Whether Aquila and Priscilla lived in Ephesus or Rome, Paul was able to write of the "church" which was "in their house."

The special program by and for the women in the afternoon was inspiring to that group with talks on worship in the home, beautifying the home, the Christian home in the village, and the economic aspect of the Christian home. Sunday evening's program was led by the young people. One of the nurses presented the Christian Home Yardstick, while another assisted with the flannelgraph pictures that accompany it.

Five afternoons during the week the women met to work an hour on various projects, such as mounting Bible story pictures for their homes, tracing patterns for children's toys, cleaning grain for the love feast, and practicing for the candlelighting service that they presented Friday.

Four high school students (front row) were baptized on the concluding Sunday of the Christian home observance

Each evening there was a cottage prayer meeting in various areas of our Christian community. This period of song, meditation and prayer was followed with a fellowship tea given by the host and hostess in true Indian fashion and this added to the spirit of "oneness in Christ." Meeting thus made us think of the early Christians who met in homes for prayer, especially when we met in "an upper room" with the postmaster's family who live above the post office.

The annual Thanksgiving service was held Saturday morning. Offerings in "cash and kind," first-fruits of grain, vegetables and chickens, together with various articles of needlework, were brought, the latter being auctioned off later outside the church. Thus a goodly offering was realized, one half of which will be used locally while the other goes for the publishing of Christian literature and to aid an Indian National Missionary Society in the spread of the gospel.

A dedication service for children was impressively observed Sunday morning when six young ones were consecrated. This was followed by the baptism of four splendid young high school students coming from Christian homes. In the evening the love feast and communion service provided a fitting climax for the Christian home week celebration.

Mission Meeting in Nigeria

I LOOK forward to our annual mission meeting as much as I do to Annual Conference in America," someone remarked as we neared the meeting place the first evening.

This year was exceptional because the deputation from the churches in America were with us, namely, Leland S. Brubaker, secretary of Foreign Mission Commission, and his wife; Norman Baugher, general secretary of the General Brotherhood Board, and Clayton Berkshire, secretary of missions in the Brethren Church.

There were fifty-seven adults, forty-two children and four visitors. We were all bountifully fed. Meals were served cafeteria style to the whole group. It was a time for fellowship and discussing the messages and business of the day.

The days started off with worship in the conference room each morning. Mornings and evenings were times of spiritual enrichment with early worship and the Bible hour following breakfast. We were ably led by our visiting deputation and members of the mission staff.

Late mornings and afternoons were for business meetings and for various committees to meet to get their business ready to present to the conference.

The church report was most encouraging. Six hundred forty-nine people asked to enter the class for baptism during the year and three hundred forty-seven were baptized.

The New Testament is being translated into Margi now. It has been printed in the Bura language for some time but only the Gospels and Acts were done in Margi.

We have eighty-nine classes of religious instruction in villages away from our mission stations with about three thousand people studying the Bible and learning to read. Much of this work is supported by the local congregations. There are another two thousand who are in our schools and training centers where daily Bible study is a part of the program.

Now we look forward to the annual mission meeting at the close of 1955.

Out of the Mailbag

"Marvin has too much work for one person to do, especially since the mission nurse is on vacation this month and this is the heaviest month of the year for the hospital. Five minutes is hardly enough to question the patient, examine, diagnose and treat. However, if he takes much longer than that, it turns into a task requiring time which doesn't exist. Even then sometimes he must ask some to come back the next day when his day begins to run into evening. We expect the load to slacken when the people start work in their farms.

The mission is putting everything it has into the task of preparing the Africans to accept the leadership in church, school and hospital. So everyone is swamped with work."

Marvin and Dorris Blough, Nigeria, Africa.

Our program here is home visitation and personal work in the early mornings and evenings, before and after they come from work. In the afternoons we have a Bible class, a health class and sewing class for the women who are not in the fields, about six daily, but not always the same ones. There have been twenty-two different ones present. We have another Bible class for the women after they come from their fields, about 7:30 p. m., then a meeting for the children, followed by a general message for all who by that time have come. After this we dismiss all who are not enrolled in the special class for Christians. Thirty have enrolled for this class, twenty-two men and eight women. We are studying what we as Christians believe and how to become and remain true, born-again Christians. Our hearts are thrilled with the response we are getting from those who attend the class. Most of them are young people, some of whom have not become Christians, although their parents are. We have some very happy times with some of these parents in their homes, some who are interested, but because of their age, after a day's work in the field, just can't stand being out half the night.

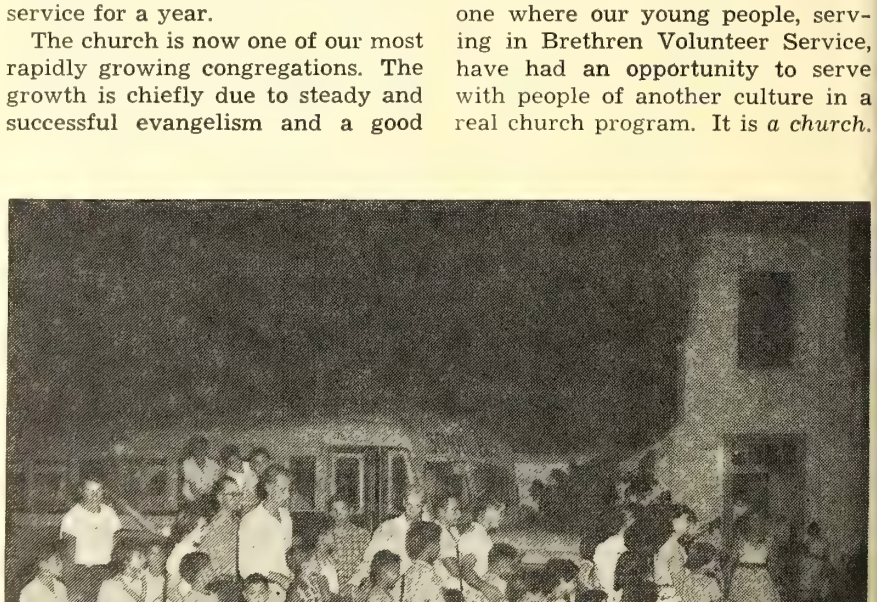
Our Anglo-Spanish Church

Edward K. Ziegler

ANOTHER long step in brotherhood is our Anglo-Spanish church at Falfurrias, Texas. There is a wide band of border country from the Gulf of Mexico to the Pacific in which the most pressing problem in human relations is the tension between Spanish and Anglo-Americans. The illegal exploitation of cheap and illegal "wetback" labor, the language barrier, economic conditions, all have aggravated these relationships into suspicion, segregation and sinful injustice.

In the country around Falfurrias, eighty miles from the Mexican border, more than half of the population is Mexican. While English is used in the schools, Spanish is the spoken language. The Latins suffer all the indignities and economic disadvantages of a minority people.

The Falfurrias project carried on jointly by Brethren Service and the Texas and Louisiana District is an attempt to meet the total need of these people through a church, a demonstration farm and a school. It had its origins in work started by J. A. Stump and H. D. Michael in the early 1920's. It is the church which makes the whole program really unique. For only through the church can the dream of a nonseparated fellowship of Latin and Anglo-Americans be realized.



After some years of relative inactivity, the adoption of the social service and educational aspects of the project by Brethren Service—and the discovery of oil on the property—brought new life to the Falfurrias dream.

As a staff of consecrated workers and a volunteer service unit went to work, the church took on new life. Work was begun among Latin-Americans, and a truly integrated church program was begun. In 1953 a Latin minister, Bro. Raymond Castro, began working with Pastor Kenneth Thralls and continued this service for a year.

The church is now one of our most rapidly growing congregations. The growth is chiefly due to steady and successful evangelism and a good program of Christian nurture and service through the church, among the Latins. In 1951 more than forty new members were received, mostly Latins. By the end of 1952, the membership was seventy-five, over half Latin. In 1953 there were seventeen baptisms, and in 1954, twenty-three baptisms, again chiefly Latins. There is now a membership of 107.

In 1950 a beautiful church building was built and more recently an educational wing added to it. This church is often filled to capacity. Average attendance at services is about 140, and the church school attendance is larger. Last year 176 were enrolled in a daily vacation church school.

What makes the Falfurrias church so significant? It is a church which practices with real success, brotherhood among people of two different cultures in an area where these cultures have been segregated and hostile. It is a church with a complete and balanced ministry to an underprivileged people. It is a church where there is a successful program of evangelism and nurture carried on side by side with a service program. And such a church is one where our young people, serving in Brethren Volunteer Service, have had an opportunity to serve with people of another culture in a real church program. It is a church.

Church News

Northern California

Reedley—On Jan. 16 Bro. Stanley Keller began an eight-day series of evangelistic meetings. As a result of these meetings, one person was baptized into our church at the close of the service on Sunday evening, Jan. 23. The young people challenged the other Sunday-school classes to greater attendance at the midweek prayer meetings and except for a few evenings they have excelled the others in number present and their total attendance is highest. Our church's fiftieth anniversary is to be celebrated with a home-coming service on May 1. Pastor John Hunter is giving instruction preparatory to baptism and church membership to some of the younger classes. Two or more young people now await baptismal rites. The Clarence Heckmans recently showed slides and told of their work in Nigeria.—Mrs. Anna V. Ramsey, Reedley, Calif.

San Francisco Community—It was voted at our last council meeting to proceed with the building program as our expanded church program has made it necessary. The current project of the youth group is the basketball team which is being coached by Arthur Crane. They are playing in the interchurch league which is sponsored by the council of churches. Recent guests were Brother and Sister Clarence Heckman, missionaries on furlough from the Africa mission. Bro. Heckman delivered the morning message and in the evening they showed pictures of their work. On March 4 the first in a series of international dinners was served by the women's circle. This was a Pennsylvania Dutch dinner with Mrs. Salome Mummert as chairman.—Mrs. Helena Curry, South San Francisco, Calif.

Southern California and Arizona

Glendale—One of our senior and faithful members, Mrs. Molly Coffelt, was feted at a reception in the church fellowship hall on her eightieth birthday. Representatives from our church attended a meeting of Brethren churches in Arizona which was held in Phoenix with Harl L. Russell as guest speaker. Our Christmas program was held on Dec. 26 with the children's program in the morning and a musical program in the evening by the junior and adult choirs. Outstanding feature was a live manger scene in the background. On Dec. 27 Miss Sara Shisler, a missionary to Africa, was speaker at a special service. Sunday-school attendence for 1954 showed an increase of ten per cent over the last year's average. Jan. 1 marks the half-year since we embarked on our financial support of the Lynhaven church project. On Jan. 30 the La Verne College chapel choir presented a concert. On Feb. 13, Mrs. Wayne Miller, wife of the pastor of the Lynnhaven church, presented a program featuring music of the vibraharp. Bro. W. T. Luckett conducted a series of pre-Easter meetings in our church. On Feb. 27 in observance of Brotherhood Sunday, our pastor, Bro. Walter Coffman, exchanged pulpits with a Negro Methodist minister in Phoenix.—Thelma Heatwole, Glendale, Ariz.

Washington

Olympia—Brother and Sister Howard Michael have recently returned to their home in Olympia, retiring after forty years of missionary and pastoral work. Our church has just completed a Wells directed financial campaign. The congregation has made the decision to relocate in the growing community of Lacey, about one and one-half miles from Olympia. We are looking forward to the first consultation with the building counselor, Forrest Groff. During the Lenten season our church co-operated with the district emphasis on evangelism.—Mrs. Robert Shumate, Olympia, Wash.

Colorado

Colorado Springs—Sister Sara Shisler gave a talk of her experiences as a missionary in Africa. One Sunday evening the McPherson College quintet presented a program in our church. Mrs. Mary Fagan has been installed as an elder's wife. On Dec. 4 Bro. Paul Wright was installed into the ministry. Our pastor and his wife, Brother and Sister Van B. Wright, attended regional conference. The women's work group sent clothing to New Windsor, as well as Christmas packets for overseas distribution. The women also contributed to Camp Colorado. Harold M. Malin has been elected to the office of deacon. Our love feast was held on April 7. We held an Easter sunrise service at the church followed by breakfast. The Paul Sargents of McPherson, Kansas, gave a lecture and showed pictures of their European trip.—Mrs. Carl J. Reed, Manitou Springs, Colo.

Middle Iowa

Panora—Our church has been participating with four other churches in union services the first Sunday evening of each month. These services are followed by a social hour. Our pastor is conducting a series of studies on the doctrines of the Christian faith and church history. This study is the adult parallel to the youth membership class. Plans are being made for a deacon visitation. An evangelism program was held prior to our spring communion. We observed the World Day of Prayer at the church with a continuous prayer vigil from 6:00 am, to 10:30 pm. Anna Warstler was with us on Friday, March 25, to share with us her missionary experiences in India.—Mrs. Carrie Bullard, Panora, Iowa.

Panther Creek—During December the men's work group held a public sale at the church farm. A Christmas program was presented by our young people. On Christmas morning a service was held at the church. The women's work is now divided into two groups with each group meeting twice each month. The younger women hold their meetings in the evenings. We were host church to the churches of Adel on the World Day of Prayer. The Iowa Church Rural Life Commission, the state youth rally and the sectional women's work meeting have recently been held in our church. A school of missions was conducted on Sunday evenings for each age group. A membership for juniors was taught by our pastor before Easter. Plans have already begun for a vacation Bible school and for a laboratory school. The young people meet often for parties in the fellowship hall.—Mrs. Ethel Messamer, Dallas Center, Iowa.

Southern Iowa

Salem—Our church participated in the union Thanksgiving services in Lenox. Several from our church attended regional conference and made reports of the conference at a Sunday morning service. The freshman male quartet from McPherson College was with us one Friday evening. Our fieldman and his wife, Brother and Sister Zook, conferred with the various boards in our church. The following Sunday morning Bro. Zook brought the message. We observed a young men's day with a neighboring church contributing to the program. A pantomime, From the Cradle to Manhood, was given followed by a talk by Rev. Butts, pastor of the Methodist church in Lenox. Recently several from our church and our pastor conducted services at the county home. The church people have been redecorating and refinishing the seats, floors, etc., of the church. We continue to have our monthly birthday suppers. The aid has contributed money and labor towards the refinishing of the woodwork and has purchased new folding tables for the basement.—Mrs. Charles Colyn, Lenox, Iowa.

Northern Missouri

North Bethel—Our pastor, Vernon Merkey, and his wife, and Mr. and Mrs. Leroy Andes attended regional conference. Our church had Thanksgiving services with an hour of music and a message by Bro. Merkey. Our Christmas program was given under the direction of Mrs. Edwin Fuhrnan and Bro. Merkey. On Dec. 22 a group of children and adults went caroling and enjoyed a social hour afterwards at the parsonage. We recently redecorated three rooms of the parsonage.—Ruby Driver, Mound City, Mo.

Oklahoma, Panhandle of Texas and New Mexico

Big Creek—Brother and Sister Ernest Ikenberry of the Lybrook Indian mission talked to us about their work at the mission. Brother and Sister Earl Frantz of McPherson College were with us in the interest of McPherson. Brother and Sister Frantz of Santa Ana, Calif., were with us in behalf of the Bethany nurses' home. The women's work met at the parsonage for their annual Christmas party and the revealing of their secret sisters and the drawing of new ones for the year. We had our Christmas program followed by our white gift offering. During January we studied home missions in our school of missions. The annual community birthday banquet which was sponsored by the home builders' committee was held Feb. 16. The men's and women's work groups decided to hold a combined meeting once each month. We are looking forward to the enlargement of our church building this summer.—Mrs. Sam Garber, Ripley, Okla.

Oklahoma City—We held our first every-member canvass with Don Stern in charge of the training classes for the fourteen men who conducted the canvass. Three Sunday morning services were broadcast over the local radio station. One Sunday Harl Russell gave stewardship messages at both the morning and evening services. Ernest and Olivia Ikenberry brought a message concerning the Navajo Indians.

At Christmas time a float was entered by our church in the all-religious parade by the downtown merchants under the auspices of the Council of Churches. Our Christmas pageant was The Story of Christmas, with the children taking the leading parts, assisted by the choir and readers. We had a family night Christmas party and three groups of carolers shared Christmas joy with shut-ins. We have new Brethren Hymnals, which were presented by members as gifts to the church. Our programs for the school of missions included the film, Village of the Poor; guest speaker, Raymond T. Jacobs, a native of Southern India; speaker, Harry Hansen, a missionary to India who is now teaching at the city university; the play, The Years Ahead; and an Indian festival. The evangelism committee has set a goal —fifty-five new members in 1955. They will be working through each individual member, through visitation and through our revival meetings which were conducted by Archie Patrick of Garden City, Kansas. The women sponsored the all-church Christmas party and sent a comforter and toys to the Falfurrias, Texas, project. The men painted the walls of three classrooms and laid tile in the nursery. There was an all-day prayer vigil followed by communion services in the evening of World Day of Prayer. We have recently purchased a new parsonage across the street from the church.—Mrs. A. C. Kurtz, Oklahoma City, Okla.

Northern Illinois and Wisconsin

Freeport—We were host church to a sectional music institute with Bro. Alvin Brightbill as guest leader for the meetings. One week our pastor, Bro. James Minnich, conducted the meditation services over the local radio station. At Christmas time the youth group gave the play, Out of the Darkness, directed by Ralph Hauger. The theme for our school of missions which was held for five Sunday evenings was India, Pakistan and Ceylon. Guest leaders for the school included Dr. Barbara Nickey, Brother and Sister D. L. Lichty and Brother and Sister H. Spenser Minnich. On Race Relations Sunday our pastor exchanged pulpits with Rev. Edward M. Radford of the St. James M. E. church. In the evening of the same day, the youth choir of St. Paul's Baptist church presented a program. We participated in the World Day of Prayer program at the First Evangelical Lutheran church. The fourth Sunday night of the month is called home night. The congregation is divided into groups which meet in various homes for worship and fellowship.—Mrs. Alpha Wilson, Freeport, Ill.

Southern Illinois

La Motte Prairie—We met in council on March 3 with Elder Farrel Culler in charge. Our love feast service was observed on April 11. We are still working on the addition to the parsonage. Most of the work has been done by members and friends of our congregation. The men planted fifteen acres of wheat last fall. Our ladies' aid meets one afternoon each month. At the present time the women are making a comforter. We expect Bro. John Martin to hold our special meetings in August. — Florence Seymour, Palestine, Ill.

Northern Indiana

Union—Our church held evangelistic meetings from Jan. 20 to 30 with Bro. Roy Richey as the evangelist. Special music was provided by Mr. and Mrs. David Heiser. Two were received into our church by baptism and several rededicated their lives to the work of the church. Our love feast was held on Feb. 3.—Waneta Hagle, Plymouth, Ind.

Southern Indiana

Antioch—In August 1954 our church called H. Dale Brubaker to be our pastor. We have since completed a new parsonage which was dedicated with our elder, Elden Petry, officiating at the service. Our young people have organized a CBYF and have charge of the worship during the Sunday-school hour one Sunday each month. Since our last report five persons have been baptized into our fellowship. We conducted a religious census in the neighborhood in preparation for the visitation evangelism emphasis which was prior to our pre-Easter services. — Mrs. Clara Ritchie, Muncie, Ind.

Upper Fall Creek—The women's work group has been sewing for Bethany hospital and quilting, and also was responsible for having our church newly papered. The men have reorganized for the coming year. They held their father and son banquet on Feb. 19. Our young people were host to the area young people on March 6. Our evangelistic meetings were held the week of April 3-10 by our pastor, Edward Spyker. Bro. Spyker and his family assumed the pastoral duties the first of September, 1954. The Wedding Ring class purchased a mimeograph machine for the church. One of our members has purchased a tape recorder and in this way the services are taken to our shut-ins.—Ethel M. Grady, Middletown, Ind.

Michigan

Lake View—At Christmas time we heard a cantata given by the combined youth and junior choirs and also a cantata given by the Lutheran choir of Kaleva. The youth groups of the Methodist and Brethren churches sponsored the film, London Crusade. Phyllis and Gloria David of Muskegon, who were sent by the district youth to a European summer work camp, showed slides and told of their experiences. Two from our group attended the political seminar in Washington, D. C., and made reports to our church. Five leaders from our church attended the layman's workshop at Rodney. The women's work group has sent a large quantity of relief goods. Our parsonage fund increased during 1954. Our youth group is now organized under the Youth Action Plan. The choirs from the Methodist and Brethren churches combined for the Easter cantata.—Frank Barkdoll, Copemish, Mich.

Midland—Open house was held at the newly decorated parsonage. Since our last report we have received ten new members by letter and one by baptism. The last Friday night of each month is family and fun night consisting of a potluck supper and recreation. A visitation program is being carried out by our members. Our pastor conducted six membership classes. Sunday evening services have included plays by the young people, hymn sings, discussions and films. Richard Baker has been licensed to the ministry. The women have designated the first Thursday of each month as interest day and the third Thursday as regular work day. We have included $5,000 a year in our church budget toward a new church. A new church site will be voted upon soon. —Mrs. R. L. Palzin, Saginaw, Mich.

Springfield—Our missionary group sponsored another birthday dinner party. As a part of the program, the children helped to fill washcloths for relief. The aid society has made new comforters for relief. Our church joined with two other churches of the village in a union Week of Prayer service. The week end of Feb. 12-13 Brother and Sister R. H. Miller talked about and showed slides of their recent trip to the Holy Lands. A six-week Christian training school was conducted at our church. The Manchester College a cappella choir, under the direction of Bro. Clyde Holsinger, was with us on April 2. An evangelistic campaign was held during Holy Week with Bro. James Renz and Bro. Paul Halladay as guest leaders. New hymnals have been purchased and were dedicated during the pre-Easter meetings. At this writing approximately $400 has been contributed to the new Painsville mission.—Mrs. Richard Shanafelt, Mogadore, Ohio.

Northwestern Ohio

Lima—One Sunday morning the children of our Sunday school gave a Christmas program. In the afternoon of the same day, the choir presented the cantata, The Melody of Christmas. On Dec. 26 our pastor gave an address entitled Gifts for the Christ Child, after which the Sunday-school classes presented their white gifts at the altar. Our January school of missions was held in our church with a guest speaker each Sunday evening, concluding the study on Jan. 30 with the missionary birthday dinner and a sound filmstrip, Unto These My Brethren. Youth Sunday was observed in our church with President Gary McClain in charge of the service. A baby dedication service was also conducted on this Sunday. Our sisters of service group has been rolling bandages for Bethany hospital and making comforters for relief. Plans are being made to furnish a room for one of the guests at the Fostoria Brethren Home. At our February meeting special services and prayer were held in behalf of Congress which is considering the new draft law. On Feb. 27 our pastor, Bro. Paul Thompson, exchanged pulpits with Rev. James Crable, pastor of the Second Baptist church. During the month of February our pastor taught a class at the school of religion in the Presbyterian church.—Mrs. Pearl Anspach, LaFayette, Ohio.

Southern Ohio

Cedar Grove—We held our evangelistic meetings with Joseph Whitacre as guest speaker. Our church participated with the other churches in the community in Thanksgviing services with Bro. Whitacre as speaker. One evening Harold and June Alley showed pictures of their work while in Florida. Our church presented a Christmas play one Sunday afternoon at the Greenville Brethren Home; in the evening of the same day they gave the play at our church. The play was also given for the four-church men's meeting at the Castine church. We held a school of missions with the Beech Grove church for four Sunday nights.—Mrs. Willard Deaton, Eldorado, Ohio.

Dayton, Ft. McKinley—Our community Thanksgiving service was held at the E.U.B. church with Pastor Figley of the Messiah Lutheran church as speaker. The offering went for S.O.S. One Sunday Bro. M. R. Zigler spoke at our church. Five members were received into our fellowship by baptism on Dec. 19. At Christmas time a family night meeting was held. The young people, in a campaign to have surplus grain sent to China, prepared and distributed small bags of wheat to our members who in turn mailed them to President Eisenhower. Our pastor began new classes for church membership in January. Our January school of missions began with a fellowship hour and meal. Mission classes were then held for all age groups. On Jan. 2 Bro. Paul Robinson, president of Bethany Biblical Seminary, was guest speaker; on Jan. 9, we used the slides of our Southern missions; on Jan. 16, we had the motion picture of our Brethren mission work in India, followed by a discussion led by Akron—Elder Joseph Baugher and Elder Wayne Nicarry conducted our love feast services. Guest speakers have included Brethren Eugene Martin, Earl Kurtz and Robert Eshleman. Elder Milton Hershey of the White Oak congregation conducted our revival meetings. Rev. George Lewis of the Pennsylvania Temperance League will conduct our temperance service and Bro. A. C. Baugher will be in charge of our Bible institute. Our offerings to the general program of the church are increasing. —Mrs. Harry H. Reitz, Akron, Pa.

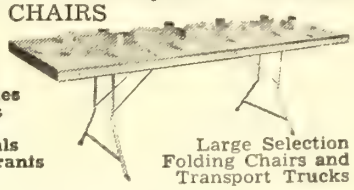
East Fairview—Joseph and the Nativity was the theme of our Christmas program which was presented by the choirs. Watch night services were held on New Year's Eve. One person was recently baptized. A series of Wednesday evening meetings is being sponsored by the board of Christian education to encourage young people to teach and to encourage our present teachers by a helpful discussion of the Sunday-school lesson. Each week for five weeks our young people met with four other similar groups for a discussion which was led by a minister from each congregation represented. Youth Week was climaxed with a program in charge of the Student Christian Movement of Elizabethtown College. Bro. Galen Kilhefner was speaker at the evening services on the same day. A group of our men and women assisted in remodeling the Neffsville Brethren orphanage in order to provide more room. On Feb. 13 our church co-operated with five other churches in a religious census of Manheim and outlying sections of our community. Members of the Manheim Lions Club attended our evening services on Feb. 13. Elder Howard Merkey spoke at this meeting. —Mrs. Anna Graybill, Manheim, Pa.

Heidelberg—The January district ministerial meeting was held in our church. A Christmas musical program was presented by our chorus under the direction of Robert Noll. On Jan. 16 Bro. Joseph Moyer brought a message on peace. Robert Hess and the Chiques quartet were with us in a program which was sponsored by the men's work group. The young adults sponsored a program by the East Petersburg a cappella chorus on Feb. 27. The women's work group donated a complete set of dishes to the church. We met for a regular council meeting on Feb. 12. Caleb Frantz was a recent speaker at our men's work meeting. Alton Bucher and our mixed quartet were in charge of the morning service at the Cocalico church on Feb. 13.—Mrs. Curtis Bucher, Lebanon, Pa.

Shamokin—Since our last report eight persons have been received into our church fellowship. A deputation team from Elizabethtown College fellowshiped with us and had charge of a morning worship period. In the absence of our pastor, Bro. George Reedy was with us. Our young people have organized. Bro. Jay Gibble, a student at Elizabethtown College, showed slides concerning work among the young people. We are cooperating with the Protestant churches of Shamokin in a church membership attendance crusade. During the Lenten season teams of two visited in the different homes in our congregation. We had cottage prayer meeting for our pre-Easter services. Bro. Clarence R. Showalter of Hagerstown, Md., was our evangelist April 3-10. District meeting was held at Hanoverdale with Sister Liskey and Sister Reed as our delegates.—Mrs. Evelyn Reed, Shamokin, Pa.

Middle Pennsylvania



Carson Valley—Our church conducted a teacher's training class for a six-week period with Bro. Tobias Henry of Juniata College as resource person. Our spring evangelistic meetings are scheduled for May 9-15 with Bro. Dorsey E. Rotruck of Tire Hill as speaker. Love feast will be held May 15. ANNOUNCING . . .

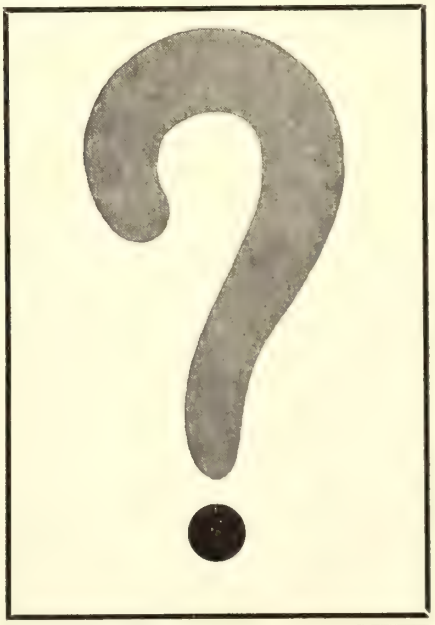
MAID OF ISRAEL

Tolbert R. Ingram



"Lord, open the eyes of these men." So prayed the indomitable prophet, Elisha, after he led into the capital city of Israel the five hundred fully armed Syrians who sought to take him prisoner.

This episode is a part of a much larger story, told in the Bible and vividly recreated in Maid of Israel. This is an exciting Old Testament novel, a love story as well as an account of corruption and intrigue in a nation that had turned from God.

The steadfast faith of the young girl in the story will stir your imagination.

sponsored by the children's department, included the filmstrip, Bill's Decision. Our district meeting delegates were Ida Hartline and Kathryn Bowlby. Mrs. Walter F. Berkebile represented the aid society. The floods resulting from a hurricane caused heavy damage to the heating plant of our church and to all the children's department equipment. We held our harvest home program with the gifts of food going to the Brethren Home at Scalp Level. Erie day was observed with the offering for the Erie project. At the union Thanksgiving services our pastor brought the message. On Dec. 26 the Christmas program was presented by the children and the young people. We have a 100% Messenger Club again this year as a part of our regular church budget. We participated in the union week of prayer services. On Jan. 29 the Juniata College choir gave a concert in our church. Since our last report we have received eight into our church by baptism.—Mrs. Walter F. Berkebile, Rockwood, Pa.

North and South Carolina

New Haven—Recently three were received into our church by baptism and two by letter. An all-singing service is held at our church once a month with all the surrounding churches participating. We responded to the relief fund, and clothing, canned goods, etc. were picked up in December by the truck from New Windsor. A dedication service was held at the church and a filmstrip was shown. The children presented a Christmas program. We are still in the process of remodeling our church building.—Mrs. Jay Sexton, Sparta, N. C.

First Virginia

Mt. Joy—At our church council, Bro. H. A. Hoover was re-elected elder and pastor for another year. Our Sunday-school attendance has kept up during the winter months. Our men made improvements at the church by painting and sanding the floors and putting up window blinds. Bro. James Butterworth of Vinton, Va., preaches for us twice a month—on Saturday before the second Sunday and on Saturday before the fourth Sunday.—Irene Proffitt, Buchanan, Va.

Oak Grove—Our young people presented the play, The White Christmas, in the Oak Grove and Saunders Grove churches. Our Sunday school has been increasing in attendance during the winter months. We studied city and country churches in our school of missions during the month of January. The Boy Scouts are rendering a valuable service by cleaning the church each week. The ladies' aid is quilting for relief. Our pastor and five other persons from our church attended the spiritual life institute at Bridgewater, A deputation team from Bridgewater College gave a music program recently in our church. The Green Hill, Oak Grove and Peters Creek churches presented an Easter cantata at the three churches.—W. K. Coffman, Roanoke, Va.

Northern Virginia

Timberville, Mt. Olivet—We observed our love feast and communion with Bro. Stanley Wampler, district executive secretary, in charge of the services. Our pastor and a group of Sunday-school workers attended the Plains district leadership training school. Members of our CBYF attended the National Youth Conference and presented a play and sponsored a softball team. A number of our women attended the district women's work meeting at the Greenmount church. The young adult class has been helping to equip and improve the classrooms.—Mrs. H. V. May, Broadway, Va.

Second Virginia

Lebanon—We began the church year with a new pastor, Bro. Russell Beahm. Our church co-operated with the other churches in our community in the annual Thanksgiving services and also in soliciting every home in the community for funds for the support of the Bible teacher for the weekday religious education program in the public school. The pastor and his family held open house. The women's work organization has made comforters and layettes for relief. The men's work sponsored and completed a new roof on the church and one of the adult classes sponsored and completed the painting of the entire basement which we use for Sunday-school classes for the children.—Mrs. Bernice Flory, Mt. Sidney, Va.

Sangerville, Briery Branch—The CBYF worked on several projects to raise money for the church building fund. The ladies' aid group presented clothing to the county welfare. Soap, layettes, friendship kits and clothing were sent to New Windsor. Christmas boxes were given to the shut-ins. Plans are under way for a major remodeling program in our church. The men's work sponsored a Lord's Acre project last year in order to raise money for the building fund. This group also had a share in sending a heifer for relief.—Ruth F. Miller, Dayton, Va.

Southern Virginia

Bassett—Our church was host to the district men's work banquet with Bro. R. E. Mohler, secretary of national men's work, as guest speaker. At the father and son banquet Dr. A. E. Acey, district superintendent of the Methodist church, Danville, was speaker. The Epply sisters' gospel quintet of York, Pa., presented a musical program in January. The January school of missions was held on the theme of India. The film, Empty Shoes, was presented one evening and the women's mission department presented the playlets, Finding God and The Lost Sheep. A mission fellowship tea concluded the mission study. Words From the Cross was the title of a series of sermons given by our pastor during the month of March over the local radio station. Mr. Edmond Blume of the Virginia Temperance Council was a recent speaker in our church. The young adults presented the outdoor live nativity scene three nights preceding Christmas. The CBYF was represented at the U.C.Y.M. conference in Richmond by Opaline Woodall. Lucille Mason, Gloria Smith and Shirley Hundley attended the district hilltop at the Danville church. Christmas activities included a play, White Christmas, caroling, starlight Christmas banquet, a progressive supper and a watch night service on New Year's Eve. —Miss Charlotte Craun, Bassett, Va.

Ruth B. Statler

Having set a record for length of pastoral service in one congregation, M. J. Brougher is a fitting subject for the church's first book-length biography of one who was primarily a pastor. Mrs. Statler has written out of a lifelong acquaintance with Brother Brougher, giving us an authentic picture and a sympathetic interpretation of his long and fruitful service to the church and the Lord he loved.

Open Your Home to God

FAMILY worship is not the only door by which God is welcomed into the home. He ought to be as evident in family councils, family fun and family expeditions. Though he needs no engraved invitation to enter, perhaps the best indication that the welcome mat is always out and the door open is the regular practice of family prayer. In Bible reading and devotion the family will not only speak to God, they will hear him speak. Even the youngest can understand how he comes to her in the still small voice of her conscience. And the oldest needs to be reminded to answer any call of God with a new commitment, a renewed dedication. If the door is open to God, surely the entire home is his: the spick-and-span parlor, the noisy dining room, the cluttered sink, the game room in the basement, even the attic filled with memories. If children find him at home they are not likely to forget him away from home. Let every home be open—to God.

Compromise or Challenge

For several weeks I have been playing chess with the advice of the Family Counselor given to a husband and wife who have been members of the Church of the Brethren since their early teens. (See page 12, Feb. 19 issue of the Gospel Messenger.) The advice given seems to me to be one of plain compromise and not of direct challenge. We often wonder why our number for so long has remained around the 200,000 mark. Perhaps we can find the solution here. Somehow we have failed to challenge our people who go into new communities to live, teach and declare the outstanding values of the New Testament way of life which as Brethren we hold to be the truth in Christ.

To simply follow the easy way of compromise with whatever comes nearest their peculiar understanding of the Christian way is to slay the initiative of Brethren families to bring to the forefront the teachings of Jesus. In addition their own peculiar understanding of the Christian way and that of the nearest to it may be poles apart.

The Mormon, the Seventh Day Adventist and the Christian Scientist faiths are all advancing in both communities and numbers. These various groups definitely believe in their respective faith. It does not seem plausible to me that any of these groups would hand out this advice to people moving into new communities or towns. On the other hand, they would be challenged to strive diligently, work to maintain and promote their beliefs instead of a lull attitude into whatever comes nearest your faith.

It is needless to say that I believe in the New Testament teachings unequivocally and rejoice in the fact that our denomination through its Annual and district conferences still strives to uphold them. I believe on the whole in the world-wide program of the church. I am in full sympathy with the unique programs our church has inaugurated, such as heifers for relief, Brethren Service, student exchange, etc. Who knows but what the Church of the Brethren has come into the world for just such a time as this.

If the advice is wholesome then why not go a step farther? Why not advise small and struggling congregations to do the same thing? Let them find a well-established church nearest their way of thinking and unite with them in toto. This would also stop new organizations and beginnings. It would save the necessity of home mission boards and large sums of money could be diverted into channels of more urgent needs of the world. If the Church of the Brethren has no particular message through its adherents whether they be individuals or families then it has no message through its congregations. Jobs in a strange land may be God's own source of call to Brethren individuals and families to plant the New Testament way of life with its totality of teachings, sacred ordinances many of which have been eliminated, changed or unwanted in the major denominations. We need to remember the admonition given to Moses when he was about to build the tabernacle: "For, see, saith he, that thou make all things according to the pattern shewed to thee in the mount" (Heb. 2: 5).

The church at Philippi was started with the conversion of Lydia's household and perhaps included a girl out of whom came the strange spirit. Our church history records that just eight pious souls after studying the Scriptures prayerfully counted the cost and set in force what is now the Church of the Brethren, which, though small, has stretched its arms around the world in a remarkable way. Abraham went to a strange community to begin and propagate a particular faith. He went out in faith. I believe challenge in this day is greater than compromise; and the call is to follow one who knew no compromise, namely Jesus Christ. — McKinley Coffman, Middletown, Ohio.

What Is Ahead?

Time marches on. What have we done for God? Some have the idea that "time" is the "stuff" between pay days. To you, as a child of God, "time" is the "golden opportunity" to labor in his vineyard. Only God knows what is ahead! Will there be war, bloodshed, famine, pestilence, drought, floods, tornadoes and invasions? Will you lose your health as I lost mine? Will these months ahead spell prosperity or poverty? Whatever is ahead, let us here and now decide that Christ shall have pre-eminence.—Sadie M. Rowzer, New Paris, Pa.

Changes in the appearance of the home, in family conversations and customs, an open door to guests and a more active participation in the work of the church --these are the results of

Opening Your Home to God

Barbara Enberg

THERE is something about admitting an outsider to the privacy of one's home that makes a difference. If the plumber is coming I hang the towels straighter. If my groceries are to be delivered, I carry the garbage to the alley myself instead of waiting to hand it to my husband when he's walking in that direction. There's even the old joke about cleaning for the cleaning woman.

Yes, getting ready for company can be quite a job. When you step in your own front door and try to see your dwelling with a visitor's eyes, the results are sometimes disconcerting. That companionable cobweb you have been meaning to take down suddenly becomes a badge of slipshod housekeeping. The furniture looks considerably more beat up than you remembered it did. You set to work making your home as presentable and attractive as you can for your company.

The path to the church will be a familiar one to give support and comfort to the family in times of crises as well as a frequented one for the regular services and work nights and committee meetings

Religious News Service

And so it is when we open our homes to God. There will be changes — more profound changes than those effected by hasty preparation for company. Here there can be no glossing over the top, for "man looketh on the outward appearance, but God looketh on the heart." There would be certain things we would like to hide—set our bad language on the attic stairs, hide our temper on the top shelf in the closet, throw our unchristian prejudices into a desk drawer. Maybe there would even be tangible things to get out of sight—carry the bottles to the garage, stack the ash trays behind the salad bowl, be sure to put a Gospel Messenger on top of the pile of trashy magazines. But when you open your home to God the sham does no good for God is interested in the home, not the house. We may be eating from our best dishes but we are reminded of the clean cup and plate that Jesus spoke about—clean on the outside, but inside filled with rapacity and self-indulgence. Yes, when God comes into a home, the trash and rubbish must be gotten rid of for good, not just set out on the back porch for easy access.

Wife of a pastor and contributing editor of the Gospel Messenger

My husband remembers how he and his sister used to hide behind the sofa when the stern minister of their childhood came to make his formal, rather ceremonial call. They stayed behind the sofa during the Bible reading and prayers. Even the cookies and cakes which were served with the coffee could not lure them into near range of this austere man. Maybe like the innocent children hiding from the preacher and the guilty Adam and Eve hiding from God in the Garden of Eden, our impulse is to emulate the ostrich. You say, "If I can't sit down in my own house, put my feet up and be myself with God around, I'm better off without him." But God does not come as a critical guest who makes you ill at ease. Your home may not be the same, but you will say, "Thank you, God, for the difference."

God will make a difference in the way your home looks. Have you ever taken an evening walk and felt instant kinship with the family in some strange house—just because you saw a picture of Jesus hanging on the wall? The home should have some outward and visible signs of its inner spiritual grace. Personally, carefully arranged worship centers at home have never had much appeal for me. For a child to see a Bible casually lying open where his father left it when his reading was interrupted seems as worth remembering as a Bible propped up with candles on either side. (Maybe I have this feeling because our children seem by nature to be constant rearrangers. It somehow seems inappropriate to slap fingers and say, "No, no," when eager little hands are reaching for the Holy Book. There is enough to strain maternal tempers without trying to maintain worship centers—better to have a little holy calm in mama!

There will be a difference in family conversation and customs. It is surprising the number of married couples who admit to a close sharing in all areas of their life—but their religious faith. Much of this reticence disappears when the newlyweds become parents. For in interpreting life to their children parents are forced to put into words their basic beliefs. Perhaps the learned professor is right when he says that nowadays people express their ids and egos, and suppress their super-egos, or the part of them that has to do with ideals and striving for goodness. Nowadays we can tell a risque story but are embarrased to lead in prayer. God should be in family conversations.

As for custom, sometimes I wonder about the value of it. I wonder when the children recite their prayers as so many lines of jingle to be sing-songed through before taking the first bite. I wonder when Adrienne races through "God is great . . ." and then reports to a breathless family, "I said it real fast without taking a breath. Dinner looks so good." But then I remember that "grace before meat" sometimes lacked proper piety in the home of my youth, and yet the idea of life and its sustenance as a gift from God somehow got across.

Though "grace before meat" may lack the proper piety when the children take part the idea that life and its sustenance is a gift from God somehow gets across

When the home is open to God it has an open door policy for all Christians. We will be "given to hospitality." Some people deplore the passing of Brethren hospitality. But in order to be a host someone has to be a guest. We are hesitant to "put people to all that trouble." We are also in too big a hurry. How often we have begged off from "staying awhile," thinking of a crowded schedule fifty miles down the road. The patience of Abraham's guests always impresses me. They were willing to wait for dinner when the bread had not been mixed and the meat was still on the hoof cavorting with the flock. They waited for the host to butcher; now we have no time to wait for the hostess to thaw her beef potpie. Three cheers for those angels unaware, Christians who take time to visit. Then, too, not everybody is so busy. How about inviting that little old lady who lives alone in the next block?

When you have opened your home to God, there will be a path from your door to the church. It will be a frequented path, walked by little girls in starched Sunday dresses and little boys in their "good" pants, walked by daddy in old clothes on work nights, walked by the entire family on Sunday mornings, walked one at a time to committee meetings, class parties, choir practice. The path to the church will be a familiar path to give comfort and support

In Defense of Parents

SOMEONE should speak up in defense of parents. Not that the holy calling of parenthood is under criticism, but parents do carry some rather heavy burdens that are frequently overlooked. They usually receive plenty of advice, but they need other kinds of encouragement.

Take the matter of finances, for example. As soon as the first child arrives—or even before—the young parents begin to make some sacrifices, denying themselves what they once enjoyed in order to provide for a dependent. As other children come and their needs multiply, the parents find that their expenses multiply also, often more rapidly than father's income increases.

In some cases, mother works part-time or regularly to help bridge the gap between income and expense. Though she may solve part of the economic problem, home problems increase and her neighbors cast a critical eye on her neglected children. In other cases, father tries to help out by taking extra jobs or working longer hours. His children miss his needed companionship and again the critical judgment of outsiders takes father to task for thinking only of work and failing as a father.

It is obvious that parents cannot function as parents in absentia. Yet the very responsibility of being a parent seems to involve attendance at all kinds of community, school and church meetings. Out of his concern for children, any parent may be expected to attend and support P.T.A., Girl Scouts, Boy Scouts, 4-H clubs, music clubs and civic organizations—all of which are in addition to manifold church activities. Yet, at the same time, these movements all picture the parent as having leisure time to play, read, swim, practice, design and build with his offspring. If he neglects a committee meeting, he seems irresponsible. But often the alternative is to neglect his children.

Even the church sometimes appears to be the enemy of parents. When most families arrive at Sunday school they are promptly sorted out by age groups; they no longer study the same lesson; they may not sit together in the same services. Mother's voice is needed in the choir or her helping hand in the nursery. Father's counsel is asked by a committee or he is needed to usher or this is the Sunday he must drive the young people to a district rally. The need to be five places at once is hardly conducive to the integration that worship requires. Yet parents are told over and over in the church that family life is central. They sometimes wonder what family life can remain after the church has made its stringent demands.

Perhaps we have overstated the problem. Of course, there is another side to the whole matter of parenthood. Its joys are many, even amid the worst discouragements. Parents feel closer to God simply by the sheer necessity of loving and caring for their own children, prodigal or otherwise. Yet parents do need less advice and more understanding. Could not our family life programs be geared to helping families have time to live and pray and work together? If the home is as central as we claim, should not more of our Christian education take place there, with teachers helping parents, not competing for the time and energies of their children?—K.M.

The Unworldly Are Too Successful

SOCIOLOGISTS working on a mental health study for the federal government had some remarkable things to say about the Hutterites. These folks, who live in colonies in Canada and in eastern South Dakota, came from Russia in 1874. They are plain people who reject modern luxuries and follow extreme simplicity in living. All property is held in common.

The sociologists decided that the Hutterites were mentally quite healthy, "one of the happiest, most well-adjusted groups in the world." Divorce is practically unknown among them. Their birth rate is high. They are thrifty, prosperous and devout.

Surely these are are characteristics of the kind of citizens our states need. Yet, strangely enough, the South Dakota legislature has just enacted a law passed to prevent further expansion of Hutterite colonies by making their communal corporations unlawful. In spite of the splendid record of the colonies in their wise farming policies, their mutual assistance program, their happy family life, the state officials are trying to check their growth.

Is it because the Hutterites refuse to bear arms, take oaths or hold public office? Is it because their Christian way of holding "all things common" might be confused with some kind of communism? Or may it be that the success of such unworldly people is a strong reminder of the moral failure of more worldly Christians? In any case it seems odd that our best-adjusted families should be discriminated against while the failures of more selfish ones pile up in our domestic courts and fill our jails.—K.M.

How is the family devotion conducted? If anyone can sing and if one member can play an instrument, Christian hymns can be sung as a family. If each member chooses the hymn of the week, how many hymns soon become the rich background of later life

How Our Family Worships Together

Nels Ferre

WIN the family for Christian living and the world is won. The family is the seat of our troubles and the source of our noblest hopes. This claim is no mere theory. This is the factual truth.

The family will not be won, however, without an effective approach through the devotional life. We tend to ignore this center of Christian living, as if it would take care of itself. Evil wins by default. We blame our busy schedules. Father must hurry to work. Or mother has to get the children to school. Or brother has his vacation and is entitled to sleep in the morning or to be with his date at night. There is thus no time for family devotions. Others dismiss it as old-fashioned. It is as passé, they feel, as the three-hour sermon.

The proper time, though, can be found somehow. Families can get up half an hour earlier. Much sleep is wasted by tensions. The worshiping family finds rest and peace as it worships. A new happiness can heal and refresh the weary spirit. So wake the sleepy boy! Shake the drowsy girl! Leave the dishes on the table and the newspapers on the front steps and join in duty or in joy the feast of family devotions. Some can do it at night, if the ages of the children permit. Or time can be taken before breakfast or dinner. Special services may be held on Sunday, holidays or days of celebration. The time is here and there if you want to find it. Members away from home can read the same devotions and passages and pray together in memory, in the divine presence and in anticipation of reunion. Sometimes people may have to hold devotions in smaller family sections, through force of circumstances.

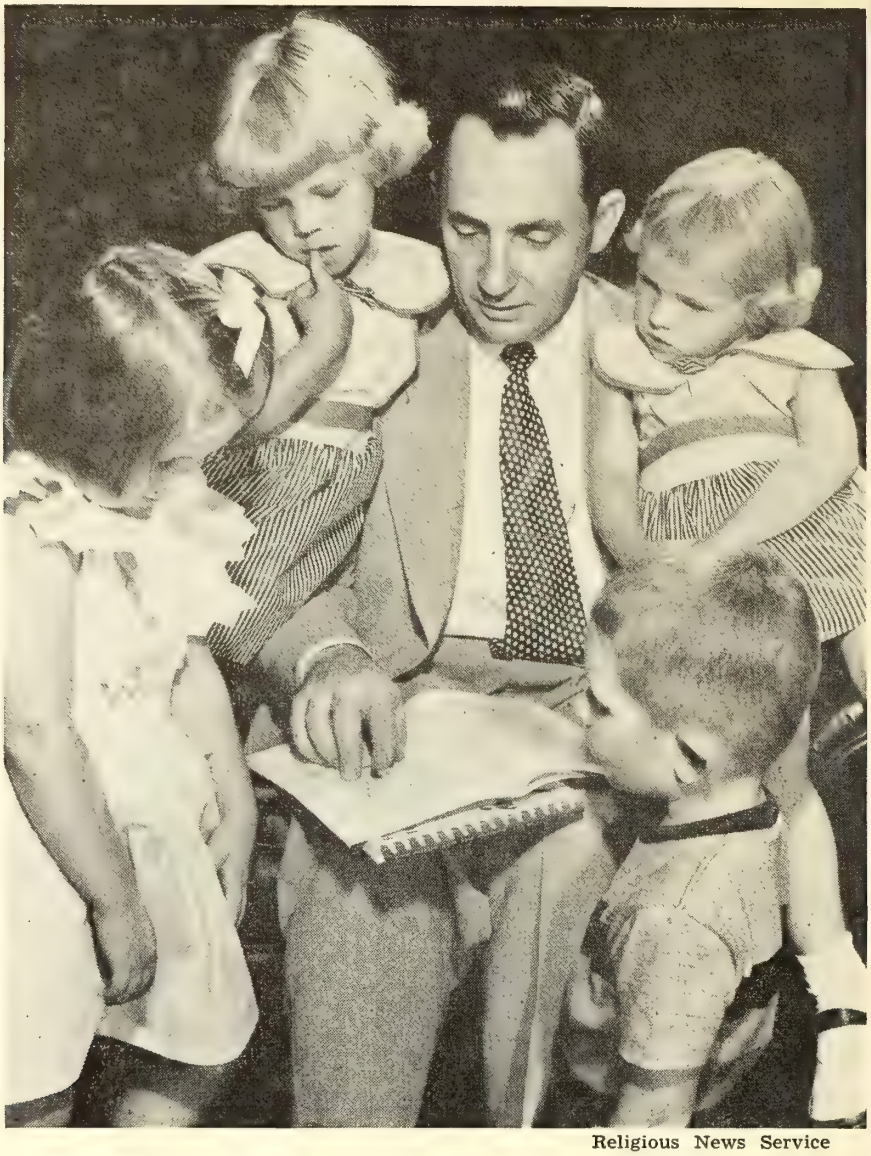
Family reading is also of great importance. The Bible should be read each day. We read it in successive portions only when all members living at home are present. It does not take long to get through the New Testament by reading only one paragraph each day. Sometimes the father will read aloud and all who can read will follow in their own Bibles



The family should not, of course, stop with Bible reading, formal devotional readings or family prayers. Each individual should be encouraged to have a period of private meditation and prayer, beginning with the bedtime prayers of the young child

Family prayers should be simple and natural. We find kneeling to be generally the best position to assume, but common sense must govern the manner of procedure. The children catch their parents' attitudes; if they truly pray in the Spirit, the children know it

Books Help Make a Home

"YOU great big baboon!" exclaims a nine-year-old lad to a younger brother in the living room. Sounds of a scuffle follow. Finally a muffled voice says, "I take it back; I take it back. You're not a big baboon. You're a little baboon." The tussle is renewed with vigor. Presently a penitent voice is heard, "I take it back. You're not a big baboon; you're not a little baboon." After a long pause, "You're a medium-sized baboon." Soon the voices become more tense. Someone's head is bumped. It is time for mother or dad to appear at the door with, "All right, fellows, get into your pajamas. Bring a book and I'll read you a story."

A story is one of the best "home remedies" for hurt feelings, loneliness, jealousy or lack of harmony in the family induced by fatigue or hunger. Usually considered a bedtime treat, the story need not be confined to that period of the day. It can be squeezed in very helpfully on many occasions, if one is alert to the needs of children, has taught them to enjoy stories and has a supply of good books on hand from which to choose. Let the most unhappy child choose the story and his favorite place to sit, which is usually nearest the reader—the whole family can listen if they wish. How soon tears are changed to laughter! Reading is a good way to say to a child, "I love you. I understand how you feel."

Pastor of Union City church, Indiana, and his wife

Books can strengthen the bonds of love and understanding between parents. If the mother's spirit is a bit low from the constant confinement and work required in the rearing of her children, what a lift it is to have her husband read aloud to her as she works with her hands. They are closer because they have laughed together over a Simeon Stylites letter or a John Gould essay, shared some pertinent thinking from a professional book, a classic, the Gospel Messenger or a Bible passage.

Books stimulate the imagination and often result in creative play by younger members of the family. After reading Mary Godolphin's children's version of Pilgrim's Progress a series of big fights may occur in the front room. Apollyon hides behind the couch, throwing imaginary darts at Christian, who with his shield turns them aside and is occasionally struck to the floor.

Books can do much to inform us of the wonders of God's world and to encourage in us an appreciation for his creatures, great and small. Two generations of families are indebted to Thornton W. Burgess for his writings about the animals and birds of our country. No child brought up on The Burgess Bird Book for Children and The Burgess Animal Book for Children can fail to have a basic knowledge and keen appreciation of these feathered and furred friends. Even in town Jenny Wren may build her nest in your back yard and woe to any neighbor child or cat who may try to molest her. Sammy Jay may shout, "Go it! Go it! Go it!" from your apple tree; Peter Rabbit may live in the far end of your garden; and even Unc' Billy 'Possum may wander into your street some night.

Such books may lead to a lifelong interest in nature study. For those who want to become better acquainted with birds Roger Tory Peterson's A Field Guide to the Birds is unsurpassed, while the huge volume, Birds of America, edited by T. Gilbert Pearson and others, is a complete, beautifully illustrated and standard work.

Before you visit the zoo be sure your children have read or heard Kipling's Jungle Books and Just So Stories, Joe Chandler Harris' Uncle Remus Stories, the National Geographic's Animals of North America. Then nearly every animal in the zoo from B'rer Tairypin to Bagheera, the black panther, will be old friends.

We can learn to know many different people through the magic of books. Judy's Journey, by Lois Lenski, enables us to live the life of a poor migrant family here in our country; A Tree for Peter by Kate Seredy shows us a glimpse of life in a slum and how it can be transformed; Anna Perrott Rose's The Gentle House is the true story of a refugee orphan who finally became a good citizen through the matchless patience and love of his foster mother. Slightly different from these but excellent in illustrations, story, information and feeling is the story of the southwest, Tree in the Trail, by Holling Clancy Holling. The Child Craft set of books are almost a must for a home.

The choice of a life vocation may be greatly influenced by some biography of a great man or woman. The Famous American Series of biographies has good stories of outstanding persons and are suited for children nine years old and up. Such books will be read again and again, if you have your own copies. Just the other day a junior high girl went to visit her friend who was ill and took along her favorite biography of Jane Addams to read aloud from it.

Don't neglect the classics! These can be read with profit and enjoyment again and again. Mark Twain's Tom Sawyer and Huckleberry Finn; Louisa M. Alcott's Litle Women, Little Men and the others; Charles Dickens' books; those by Robert Louis Stevenson; Shakespeare's plays; A. A. Milne's Winnie the Pooh and companion volumes.

Books can do much to inform us about the wonders of God's world and encourage appreciation for his creatures

Gendreau

If you have the comics problem in your home encourage the best ones, especially the ones based on the classics. And do not stop with the comic. Move on to the original. So if your son reads Walt Disney's version of Treasure Island while he's waiting in the doctor's office, help him to discover how much superior the real book is. This leads us to admit, readily, that reading books may spoil many a moving picture or television show—the latter are so inferior to the books themselves! To cite an example, just last Christmas we went to a friend's home to see Dickens' Christmas Carol televised. We have been reading it regularly each year until the story is quite familiar to us and our hopes were high. But what a disappointment! Hundreds of details were left out in the condensation necessary for telecasting and a big share of the time was spent in presenting a love song that never appeared in the story at all. Screen and telecast writers evidently go on the assumption that the audience has never read the original and so change it to suit the medium they are using and their idea of what will please the audience.

The Bible is a little library of books in itself and while it is in all our homes we should remember it is to be read, not just seen. Many Bible storybooks are available, some good and some otherwise, but none an improvement on the original! Read from the Bible as a family, to your children and individually—both Old and New Testaments. Acquaint your children early with its matchless stories—its treasures new and old—and have faith that they will enjoy the stories now and grasp some meaning, too, and that later on much more of the truth and wisdom will come to them.

Long ago a wise man rather lamented: "Of making many books there is no end." What would he say today? Certainly for many of us books are avenues of adventure, sources of truth, highways to understanding. Whenever we go into a home, no matter how humble, and find books—good books—well worn from use our hearts are warmed. Children who can point to shelves and proudly say, "Here are our books," can boast of a treasure that is priceless indeed. Books help make a home. Indeed is any home complete without them?

when the family walks it to those special services—times of crises—when two will walk together as one for the first time or when some loved member of the family walks with us no more.

God stands at the door of our home and knocks. We invite him in. Our house is "empty, swept and put in order." Into the emptiness of our lives comes God, enriching our home with steadfast love, forgiveness, loyalty and faith—qualities that make a home permanent. It could almost be that God speaks to us with the prayer of St. Francis, asking to be invited into our home . . .

That where there is hatred—
I may bring love,
That where there is wrong—
I may bring the spirit of forgiveness
That where there is discord—
I may bring harmony,
That where there is error—
I may bring truth,
That where there is doubt—
I may bring faith,
That where there is despair—
I may bring hope,
That where there are shadows—
I may bring my light,
That where there is sadness—
I may bring joy.

"Admire" and "Admiration"

Luther A. Weigle

THE words "admire" and "admiration" were used in the seventeenth-century simply to denote wonder or astonishment, without any implication of praise or approval. Thomas Fuller, the church historian, writing in 1639, said of Mohammedanism that it was "admirable how that senseless religion should gain so much ground on Christianity" — by which he meant that this fact was amazing. He elsewhere told of Cardinal Pole delivering "a dry sermon . . . many much admiring the jejuneness of his discourse" — that is, they were astonished at its emptiness. In Milton's Paradise Lost, Satan was confronted at the gates of Hell by a monster Shape, and "the undaunted Fiend what this might be admired" — that is, he wondered what this might be.

In Shakespeare's Hamlet when Horatio tells Hamlet that he has seen the ghost of "the king your father," Hamlet responds with a startled exclamation of surprise, to which Horatio answers:

"Season your admiration for awhile
With an attent ear, till I may deliver,
Upon the witness of these gentlemen,
This marvel to you."

This evidence is enough to show that when the writer of Rev. 17:6, as reported in the King James Version, expressed "great admiration" for the woman arrayed in scarlet, "drunken with the blood of the saints and the blood of the martyrs of Jesus," he meant simply to declare his wonder and astonishment at her. The American Standard Version translates the statement: "When I saw her, I wondered with a great wonder." The Revised Standard Version has: "When I saw her I marveled greatly."

Vocation: Housewife

Mrs. E. N. Wright

THE vocation of a housewife sounds like a very commonplace one. In fact, in some instances she does not get credit for any vocation. When the census taker comes around he asks, "Do you work?" and her answer is, "No, I'm just a housewife." Then he probably lists her—no occupation. But in my opinion, where children are involved it is one of the biggest jobs on earth!

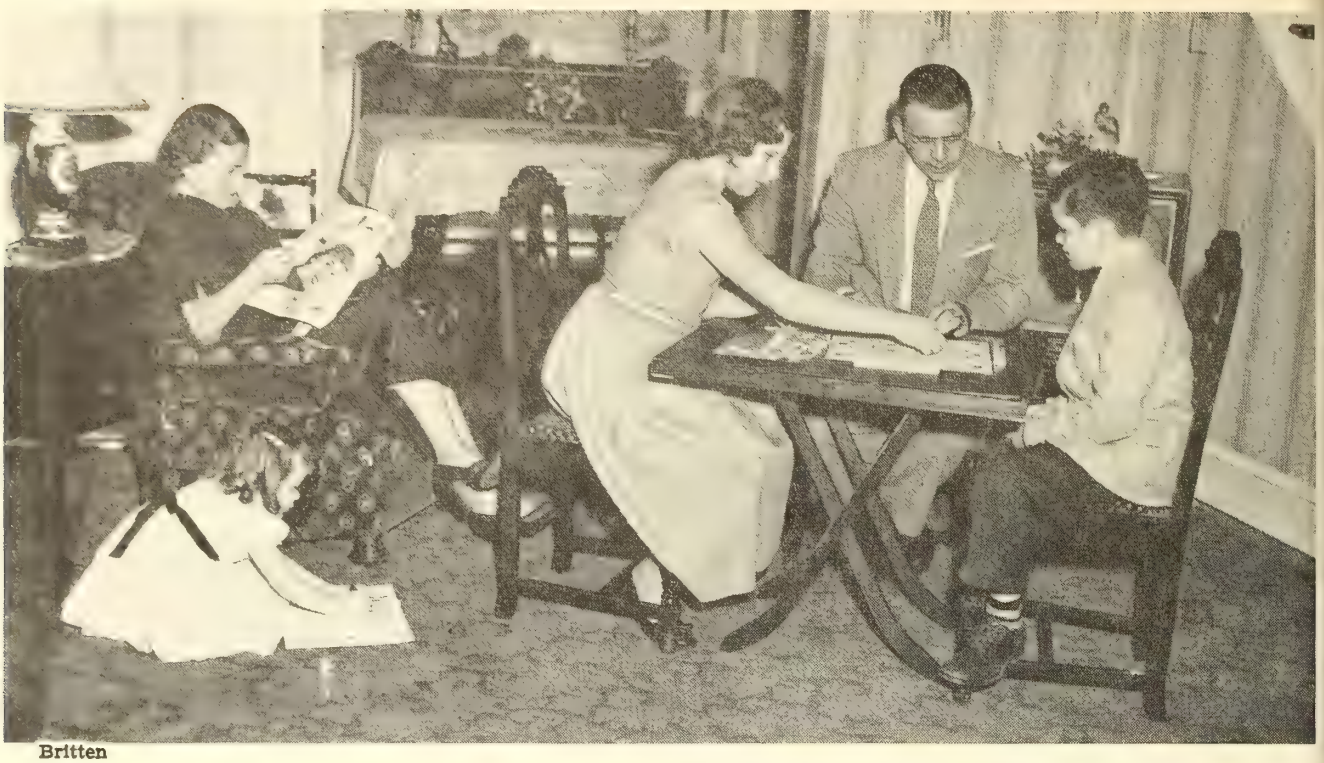
So far as I know there are no specific qualifications to become a housewife. However, one should be the possessor of these, and many other qualities: patience, kindness, courage, self-control, a deep faith in God and a pleasing personality.

Some girls marry before finishing high school and sometimes prove to be very successful housewives, but statistics prove this is not advisable. Today there are home economics courses in high school and college. These include work in child care and homemaking which every young woman should take advantage of, and in addition to these courses, everyone who plans a family will need to be educated in almost all fields in order to take an active part in church and community activities and keep abreast of their children.

In spite of the fact that the housewife has "no occupation" sometimes she has the most interesting experiences, with plenty of variety and never a dull moment, particularly in bringing up a family. I am going to talk from the viewpoint of a mother, too, since I am one. The vocation of a housewife and mother includes many responsibilities and duties. Besides the daily routine, many of us serve as nurse, seamstress, laundress, painter, barber and, in emergencies, as plumber and electrician.

"A place for everything and everything in its place" is a good rule for any housewife, but she should not become a slave to her house as this will not only destroy her own happiness but that of each member of her family. She should take time to enjoy her family and home. When her youngster asks her to read a story or fix a broken toy, why should she not leave the dishes and dusting instead of putting him off? After all, the dishes and dusting can wait.

Remember the story of Jesus visiting in the home of Mary and Martha, and how frustrated Martha became because Mary left her to serve alone? She even asked Jesus, "Lord, dost thou not care that my sister hath left me to serve alone? Bid her therefore that she help me." And Jesus answered her, "Martha, Martha, thou art careful and troubled about many things, but one thing is needful: Mary hath chosen that good part which shall not be taken away from her."



Someone has said that "home is where we are treated the best and grumble the most." The home was established by God in his plan for mankind. A home is not just a place where we eat and sleep, but the dwelling place where domestic love, cherished and happy family life, peace, rest and shelter from the outside world are known and enjoyed. One does not have to have an elaborate house and furnishings to make a home.

One evening a week set aside for family fun night will pay dividends in family unity and security the social structure of humanity and the fabric of civilization rests. If the family can be won, then the world is won, and I feel that in a great measure the homemaker and mother is responsible. The seat of our basic troubles and the source of our noblest hopes lies in the family.

Many things threaten our homes today, and chief among them is the tendency to seek selfish advantages rather than to render unselfish service. Selfishness destroys affection, and self-seeking will bring any home to bankruptcy. The surest prescription for any happy home is self-forgetting service to one another.

An ideal home must be based on democratic principles. Let us remember, however, that democracy does not mean the absence of authority or of direction given to growing life. We must use discipline and begin with the child soon after birth. A new born baby will soon learn to cry for the light. In Prov. 29:15 we find these words, "The rod and reproof giveth wisdom, but a child left to himself bringeth his mother to shame." Authority should not be used for its own sake but in order that our children may be helped to develop within themselves inner disciplines so essential to their personal happiness. No two children are alike, nor can they be dealt with in exactly the same way. Parents must try to understand the characteristics and personalities of each one.

I am sure that every true parent wants to do his best by his child, and sometimes we are made to wonder if many children of today do not have it too easy, with the protecting and providing parents who see that every whim is met. In trying to provide material things, it is easy to neglect the religious training in the home. Preschool age is when children get their most lasting impressions.

Many problems in the home require the getting together of the entire family—in other words, family council—that each opinion may be considered. Children should be given freedom and independence as they show themselves capable of using them wisely.

Finance is one of the big problems in many homes. Proper training of the children will help greatly in this as will also little heart-to-heart talks of understanding. Teach your child to confide in you; then he will not go outside the home with his problems. Establish regular habits in the home. Before he starts to school be sure to explain to him the things that you do not want him to get from other children, such as sex and Santa Claus. Give each child some chore to be responsible for and see that he does it. This gives him a feeling of usefulness, independence and security.

Play with your children. It is good to have a regular time for the story hour. Pray with your children. It is said that a family who prays together stays together. One of the first steps in religious training is prayers at bedtime.

A child should not be sent to bed in an unhappy mood or when he is upset. If you have had to punish him, try to reconcile him before going to sleep. "Mother, I am sorry I was naughty today," is one of the compensations we get almost daily.

Have your children invite their friends into the home and make them feel welcome. Some of our most pleasant memories are of helping to entertain our children's friends. However, we did prefer knowing when to expect them, and did in most instances. On one Saturday afternoon, our son came home from college with four other young men students. After meeting them and having a get-acquainted chat of a few moments in the living room, our son followed me back to the kitchen and wanted to know if it would be all right for the boys to have supper with us. He explained that they would not be any trouble and added how much they would enjoy a home-cooked meal. Since it was almost supper time, I hesitated at first for we already had a house full of company from out of town, but rather than disappoint him I consented. We enjoyed having them and the embarrassing moment of viewing the one piece of chicken left on the dish was more than offset by the satisfaction that not only our son, but his four friends, were made happier. See what I mean! I know of no greater opportunity for Christian witnessing, than in the home as its influence is so far-reaching. It is like throwing a pebble into water and watching the ripples go out from it.

I have received compensation in many different ways. Perhaps one of the greatest is the love, appreciation and gratitude of my family, my husband in particular. Without their co-operation my efforts as a housewife would have been futile.

That many of our dreams have been fulfilled in our children is a great satisfaction. And the thought that the small contribution I have made to the world may make it just a little better place in which to live is a great compensation to me.

In looking back over the years, I realize I have made many mistakes, and some of the way has been difficult with discouraging moments. Yet in spite of that, those hard years seemed to be some of the best ones—the achieving ones.

Dedication Service for a House of Peace

Glen Weimer

THE acquiring, building and moving into a new home is a high hour in family experience. For Brethren, it is an opportunity for offering up to God the house as a "house of peace," and for dedicating the life of the family to peace. As the New Testament repeatedly affirms, "God is the God of peace." And if peace is ever to leaven the world—it must flow from homes that are houses of peace, homes subject to the God of peace, and families through whom the peace of God pours into the troubled life of the world family.

The Setting

On the day set apart for dedicating the house of peace, let a few friends be invited to share with the family this joyous hour with God. Place a small table at the center of one end of the living room. At the center of the table place one eighteen-inch white candle—on either side two fifteen-inch white candles. In front of the tall candle a small loaf of bread (unsliced) and a large glass of water.

After everyone is seated—the family being seated nearest the table—the father will say, "God is light and in him there is no darkness—God is not a God of confusion, but of peace." Therefore, let us in the words of an unknown poet express the purpose of our life in this house today and always:

We build an altar here, and pray
That thou wilt show thy face;
Dear Lord, if thou wilt come to stay
This home we consecrate today
Will be a holy place.

The father stepping to the table will say, "We light this tall candle as a symbol that God is the light of peace, and that he will ever be the peace of this house, and of our hearts. And thus he will infuse the great areas of life and experience in our family with the peace-life of his Son." The father leading, the family will unite in saying:

WE DEDICATE THIS HOUSE TO WORK OF PEACE.

Father reads: There is work that sows the seeds of war and there is work that plants the seeds of peace. This house shall be a center of work that builds peace in the world and in the minds of men. The members of this family will engage only in those vocations that sustain, build and enoble all human life. We choose work through which the redeeming, healing, reconciling love of God can flow out to a divided and war-suffering world. We will do the work that will spread the light of God's peace—and we reject those vocations that lengthen the dark shadows of ruin over the earth. For God is peace, and we are a family of peace, working to build a world at peace. Therefore, we offer this home and our work as a sacrament of peace. And to symbolize this act of dedication we light the first candle to our left, from the candle of God's peace.

The father leading, the family will unite in saying:

WE DEDICATE THIS HOUSE TO PLAY THAT BUILDS PEACE.

Youth reads:

God is not only the God of peace, but an element in his peace is joy. This house then, shall be a center of wholesome play and fun—of games that make life sweeter, richer, ampler, abler and more radiant with the beauty of Christ. This house shall shelter the games that call forth the creative best in mind, body, spirit and fellowship, games that respect the equality of all; and that exclude none; games that express the democratic, co-operative, Christian way of life; games that refresh us and restore the vigor and zest of life; games that take us systematically into the lives of other people—that make us and our guests citizens of God's world community; games that bind people together in creative endeavor—rather than those that put life against life. All our play in this house will be a sacrament of peace and praise to the God of peace. We light then the second candle to our left from the candle of God's peace, symbolizing our devotion to play that contributes to the peace of the heart and to the peace of humanity.

The father leading, the family will unite in saying:

WE DEDICATE THIS HOUSE TO LOVE THAT SPREADS PEACE.

Mother reads:

God is peace that is love! Where love is there is peace—and where peace is there is creative, redeeming love. This house shall ever be our sanctuary of peace and love, because God is master of each life. We seek to grow in the love to which Paul refers in 1 Cor. 13. [This may be read by a member of the family.] We seek to press forward in that life which regards every person as equal before God, that life which enfolds every person in its concern and compassion — regardless of race, religion, nationality or culture. All shall find a welcome here—and a rest for their bodies, minds and spirits in this sanctuary of peace. This house shall be a shrine of the love of God in its inclusiveness. Such love shall be sheltered, nurtured and expressed in us as we live in this house of peace. So we light the first candle on our right from the candle of God's peace, symbolizing our dedicating ourselves and this

BERNICE BELL

God walked in my garden
In the quiet of the night,
Dressing all the lilies
In their gowns of purest white.
The hyacinths wear purple
And pink, soft cream and blue,
While the daffodils in yellow
Nod gay greetings to you.

When I awoke this morning
There were dewdrops all around,
Glistening in the sunlight
That lay golden on the ground.
The birds were sweetly singing,
In the bird choir serenade,
To the day's fresh beginning,
With it's blemish yet unmade.

In the quiet I paused to listen
And feast on all the splendor,
That God in his love for me,
So graciously and tender,
Walked along my garden path
And blessed each flower there.
He gave the birds a cheery song
That lifts my day from care.

house to love that spreads peace.

The father leading, the family will unite in saying:

WE DEDICATE THIS HOUSE TO WORSHIP WHOSE FRUIT IS PEACE.

Youth reads:

We bow at the feet of him whose will is our peace. We surrender our lives to him who took God's way of peace, lived it to the end, taught it and died in commending it to our hearts and the whole world. We remember how Peter described the Master's way of life in his first letter, chapter 2, verses 21-24. [A member of the family will read.] To this pattern of peace living, of peacemaking, of suffering, redemptive love we commit ourselves. We offer our home to God as a center where this way of life is upheld, lived, talked about and propagated. We worship the God of peace, who makes men peacemakers. We adore the God of peace who loved the world through the life of his Son—to bring peace to every heart and fireside. So this house shall be a place of prayer where members of the family, friends, guests, strangers may rekindle their own peace of soul, love and aspiration and hope at this altar of the God of peace. We then light this fourth candle from the candle of God's peace, symbolizing our offering up this house and our lives to those patterns of worship whose fruit is peace in personal life, family life, community life and world life.

Here may be sung the hymn, O Thou Whose Gracious Presence Blest (Hymnal 544). Then the father will lead the family in the sealing of its commitments through the symbolism of the loaf and glass of water: "My loved ones, let us now seal our dedication of this house as a house of peace with bread and water. Our Lord said, I am the bread of life. Only as we receive him ever anew can this be a house of peace and we a family of peace." So saying the father takes the loaf and breaks to each a portion which is eaten in silent meditation on Jesus who is the bread of peace. Then, taking the large glass of water in his hand, the father says, "Jesus also said, I am the water of life. So, only as we keep letting his spirit and mind refresh and cleanse us, can this be a house of peace and we a family of peace." The glass is then passed from person to person, each one drinking and meditating in silence on Jesus, the refresher and renewer of Life. Then all present will unite in the prayer:

O Living Master, thou who art the peace of God given to make this house and each one of us a disciple of peace. We taste of thee the Living Bread, we drink of thee the Living Water, because without Thee life is empty and full of strife. Descend to our hearts moment by moment, be formed in our hearts today and every day. To the end that this house which God's providence has given may be a house of peace in a world tortured by war. Amen.

A benediction may be read: "Finally, live in peace, and the God of peace and love will be with you" (2 Cor. 13:11).

The Teaching Ministry of the Church. James D. Smart. The Westminster Press, 1954. 207 pages. $3.00.

Here is a book on the basic principles of Christian education that does not hesitate to point out the mistakes we have made all the way from the Sunday school to the seminary. As a result of these errors, we have much confusion. The author proceeds to point out with clarity and conviction the necessary Biblical and theological basis for education and redefines the goal we seek. The chapter, The Bible in the Curriculum, raises questions that many people have never thought of, but expresses an aim that is so adequate as to be without question. The author has little sympathy for the minister who wrote to his national board of Christian education protesting the omission of the printed Scripture passage from the quarterlies because his teachers were so busy that when they go to prepare a lesson for Sunday, they can't be wasting time hunting up the Scripture passages in a Bible, nor with the superintendent of a junior department who, when told that teachers should spend two hours each week in preparation, stated that her department had to have lessons that the teachers could prepare on the streetcar on the way to church. There are important chapters on The Christian Home and The Church and Public Education. Sunday-school teachers, superintendents, seminary and college presidents and professors, ministers, public school teachers, parents, CEC staff and GBB members should all read this book. The one thing I would allow you to skip is the author's explanation of the meaning of infant baptism.—C. Ernest Davis.

Group Activities for Church Women. Jane Kirk. Harpers, 1954. 240 pages. $3.00.

This book, in order to be a representative collection of group activities for church women, covers all fields of women's interests and gives specific direction for carrying out the activities. How to put "meat" in your meetings, making your group world minded, Bible conscious, book curious, getting good publicity for your church, providing counseling service, teaching crafts and developing hobbies are discussed in detail. Activities for fun and fellowship: church picnics, quilting bees and shows, wedding anniversary parties and home talent shows, give rise to the lighter side of life in church-centered projects.

Observing special occasions and holidays in new ways and growing flowers for church services challenge individuals and groups "to live for others." — Mrs. Chester Murrey, Conway, Kansas.

The Great Day, a book by the Brethren author, F. O. Shank, is evidence of his long personal study of the Book of Revelation. His purpose is to open new vistas for others in the study of this volume. More information on the book may be obtained from the author at 421 Market St., Brookville, Ohio.

Harry K. Zeller's unusual interpretation of the Brotherhood theme, Seek First His Kingdom, is featured in the 1955-56 issue of Stewardship Facts. This new sixty-four-page digest of choice Protestant stewardship writings is available from the Stewardship Department, General Brotherhood Board, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill., for only ten cents per copy.

Travelers to Annual Conference at Grand Rapids, Mich., are invited to visit the Woodland church, located three miles south and one-half mile east of Woodland, just east of state route 43. Worship service on June 12 and 26 will be at 10:00 a.m., followed by Sunday school at 11:00. There will be no service on June 19. Picnic facilities are available. Bro. Glenn Fruth is the pastor of the church.

Three hundred radio stations during the week of May 9 will carry the program, Bobby Wildgoose and His Ragged Regiment, on the Let There Be Light series. This is an interesting story of Robert Raikes and the beginning of his Sunday-school work among the poor children of Gloucester, England. The program will carry an announcement of the International Sunday School Convention to be in Cleveland, Ohio, July 27-31. This convention will celebrate the 175th anniversary of the modern Sundayschool movement. The Chicago office of the National Council of Churches can provide you with a record of this program for $2.

Lodging at Annual Conference

Reservations for lodging at Annual Conference at Grand Rapids can be arranged by writing to the Convention Bureau, Grand Rapids, Mich., stating your rooming needs. With few exceptions the people at Grand Rapids will be very happy to make their rooms available at the rate of $3.00 a night for either one or two persons in a room. In the case of rooms with twin beds or especially fine accommodations, the rates will be $4.00 and $5.00 a night.

Those desiring accommodations in homes would do well to send their registrations to the Convention Bureau well in advance of Conference as they are more likely to secure choice accommodations. It is impossible to avoid considerable delay and also congestion at the lodging booth for the persons who wait to secure lodging after they arrive on the Conference grounds. For advance registrations a $3.00 fee is required; this fee will apply on the room rent for the Conference.

Bridgewater College

At the seventy-fifth anniversary convocation on March 26, the college bestowed honorary degrees on eight of her alumni: Ruth Huff Cline, '22, associate professor of English at Eastern Illinois State Teachers College, Lit.D.; Paul Neff Garber, '19, Bishop of the Virginia Methodist Conference, LL.D.; Boyd Harshbarger '28, head of the department of statistics at Virginia Polytechnic Institute, Sc.D.; DeWitt L. Miller '28, pastor Church of the Brethren, Hagerstown, Md., D.D.; Raymond Russell Peters '28, executive secretary of the Council of Churches, Dayton, Ohio, LL.D.; Robert L. Sherfy '34, pastor Church of the Brethren, Harrisonburg, D.D.; James Alfred Swain '37, pastor Evangelical United Brethren, Harrisonburg, D.D.; C. C. Wright, professor emeritus of economics, LL.D.

Among the special guests at the aniversary luncheon on March 26 were Bro. N. A. Spitler of Spring Creek, near Bridgewater, who attended the first session of Spring Creek Normal School in 1880-81, forerunner to Bridgewater College; and Rev. George L. Brown, retired Presbyterian minister of Swoope, Va., who is the only living member of the 1891 class of three that received the first A.B. degrees from Bridgewater. Bro. Spitler, now ninety-four years old, is a member of the Beaver Creek congregation. Bridgewater was the first Church of the Brethren college to grant A.B. degrees.

Bro. Robert L. Sherfy, pastor of the Harrisonburg Church of the Brethren, preached the seventy-fifth anniversary convocation sermon on Sunday morning, March 27, in the absence of Bro. V. F. Schwalm, who could not be present.

The Board of Trustees has set up an endowment fund of $2,000 in memory of the late Prof. and Mrs. John J. John, who served Blue Ridge College for many years. This sum had been contributed to the college as an annuity gift by Sister John shortly before her death. The income of this fund will be used as scholarship help to music and ministerial students, an interest of Sister John. Prof. John was a beloved professor and Christian gentleman, often referred to complimentarily by his students as the "wise man."

Brotherhood Theme: Seek First His Kingdom

The Clericus Chorus of twelve men under the direction of Ben Sollenberger, a junior music major of Carlisle, Pa., has twenty concerts scheduled this spring in churches and in civic groups in Virginia, Maryland, West Virginia and Pennsylvania. Proceeds from their programs are going to a permanent fund in the college endowment, the income of which will be used to aid needy ministerial students to get their college education at Bridgewater.

The College Glee Club under the direction of Nelson T. Huffman, head of the music department, has scheduled tours involving fifteen concerts in Maryland and Virginia. The five Brethren Churches of Baltimore are sponsoring a concert at the First church on the night of April 29, and the four churches of Roanoke are supporting the concert in the Jefferson High School auditorium in that city on Sunday night, May 8.

Staff members who held pre-Easter services were President Warren D. Bowman at Keyser, W. Va.; A. R. Showalter at Bush Creek, Md.; W. D. Clague at Waynesboro, Va.; and Marshall Wolfe at Barren Ridge, Va.

Bridgewater debaters placed second in the southern division of the North-South debate tournament at West Virginia University on March 4 and 5. The college negative team composed of Pasco Bowman of New Market and Dick Obenshain of Blacksburg went undefeated in five contests, winning from New York University, Princeton, Western Reserve, Kenyon and Lafayette.

Student deputation teams of the Student Christian Movement and the Fellowship of Reconciliation scheduled thirty-five programs in various churches of the Southeastern Region during the winter and spring.

World's Wealthiest Nun Dies

Mother Mary Katharine Drexel, known as the world's richest nun, died recently at the age of ninety-six. She was the daughter of Francis A. Drexel, a Philadelphia banker and a partner of J. Pierpont Morgan. Her mother, who died only a month after Katharine Drexel was born, was a member of the Church of the Brethren.

The mother's name was Hannah J. Langstroth, a member of the First church, in Philadelphia. Although Mary Katharine Drexel was a member of one of Philadelphia's wealthiest families, she renounced social position for the religious vocation when she was twenty-nine and devoted her life and money completely to the order she founded and to other charity.

Both of her sisters died without issue and in 1945 she became the sole recipient of income from an accumulated $15,000,000 trust left by Mr. Drexel in 1885. She was the founder of an order, the Sisters of the Blessed Sacrament for Indians and Colored People, which was established in 1891. The order has grown to 502 members. They staff sixty-three schools in twenty dioceses across the United States and Xavier University at New Orleans, which is a noted monument of Mother Katharine's interest in the advancement of the colored people.

Mother Katharine traveled widely across the country for years, to further the work and to know personally the conditions of Indians in the West and Negroes in the South. She took the vow of poverty upon her profession. It was largely with her in mind that Congress made an amendment to the income tax law in 1921, so that her annual income, which was all going to charity, could be completely tax free.

In his history of the First Church in Philadelphia written in 1943, Roland Howe says: "Had Hannah Jane Langstroth Drexel lived, and her little daughter brought up in the Dunker faith, perhaps the church would have been the recipient of material wealth even greater than that so graciously bestowed by our beloved Sister Geiger and of personal service too, if indeed that were possible! But what our little church may have lost in this turn of events was assuredly not lost in devotional service to humanity."

Evangelical Church Contacts With Churches in Baltic Areas

In a letter addressed to Dr. Martin D. Niemoller, head of the Foreign Office of the Evangelical Church in Germany, Archbishop Jaan Kiivit of Reval Tallin, leader of the Evangelical-Lutheran church in the Soviet Republic of Esthonia, expressed his thanks for Christmas messages and a gift of books. In the same letter he asked for the greetings of the home church to be passed on to Esthonian pastors living in Western Germany.

The first contact after the war with the Lutheran Archbishops in Esthonia and Latvia was established last year when a group of German theologians paid a visit to the Orthodox Patriarch Alexius in Moscow. One of the objects of the Foreign Office of the Evangelical Church in Germany is to keep in close touch with the churches in the Baltic region.

Disciples Increase Budget Ten Per Cent

A total budget of more than $10,000,000 for co-operative causes of the Disciples of Christ during the 1955-56 fiscal year was adopted at a joint meeting of the denomination's commissions in Indianapolis. The total is ten per cent greater than that for 1954-55. Included is an operating budget of $6,691,000 for missions, education and benevolences and a capital funds budget of $3,546,000 for special projects and the construction of new churches.

Bishop Reports on Staggering Moral Problems Among Military Men

Problems of morality—including drug addiction and prostitution—have become "staggering, not to say frightening" among both American military men at Far East bases and the natives, according to an Episcopal bishop who toured Pacific areas.

Ask Action by Congress Against Obscene Matter

The Senate Juvenile Delinquency Committee has recommended that Congress take immediate action to strengthen laws against transportation of indecent and obscene material in interstate commerce and the United States mails. One proposal would broaden the definition of obscene material entering U. S. mails to cover all loopholes which have developed under the present more restricted language of the law.

One Hundred Years in Naperville

James Lee Houff

THE YEAR 1855, was the beginning of the Naperville church. This year Elders Samuel Lehman, David Fry and Joseph Emmert gathered the Brethren together and began the German Baptist church, which is now the Bethel Church of the Brethren. There were eleven charter members. These Brethren met for fellowship and "meeting" in homes. Later they met in the schoolhouse, and finally in the years 1865-67 a meetinghouse was built. Services were then held every two weeks instead of the former eight weeks.

In 1907 the meetinghouse was dismantled at the Erb farm and moved into town to Benton Avenue because of the population trends, and on Oct. 20, 1907, the new church was dedicated with Bro. A. C. Wieand the speaker. Since this time the church has had to remodel several times. One of these major programs was that in 1923-24, when the west classrooms were added.

In 1950 the need was again felt for enlarging the building. The plans were submitted for a new north-side addition and a new front entrance. With these plans were also the plans for remodeling the interior. The church auditorium has been enlarged and classrooms have been added. The total available auditorium seating capacity is about 350. There are places for twelve classes, and there is a new fireplace in the fellowship hall.

Bro. Paul Robinson, president of Bethany Biblical Seminary, delivered the sermon on Sunday afternoon Oct. 31, 1954, when the new additions and renovations at Bethel church were dedicated. An organ recital by Harold Noffsinger at 2:45 preceded the dedicatory service at 3:15 in the church sanctuary. Bro. Robinson's sermon title was The Sound of the Trumpet.

John Fry, chairman of the finance committee, made a statement and Paul Shiffler, board chairman, made a statement in recognition of builders and the organizations that worked on the church improvements. Mrs. James Houff directed the choir in music during the service and the writer, pastor of Bethel church, led the dedication service.

During the past several years, the auditorium at Bethel church was enlarged, classrooms and offices were added, both a women's work room and a new entrance to the church were added. New choir robes, a public address system in memory of Morris and Agnes Steck and J. B. and Laura Otto, a memorial window to Dr. C. S. Whitehead, and a memorial organ in memory of Martha Eichelberger Hornback was also part of the dedication.

We pray that all this will be used to the glory of God and to the winning of men to the way of Christ. We would give ourselves as disciples in his kingdom.

Christian Citizens in Action

POLITICAL action seminars have been an important part of the Brethren Service program for the past several years. Each winter, a seminar for youth, as well as one for adults, is conducted in Washington, D. C., and New York. This year approximately 200 youth journeyed to Washington in February by car, train or chartered bus to become better acquainted with our government and the way it operates. Approximately twenty adults attended the adult seminar in March.

All participants find the seminars very valuable to themselves personally and in promoting Christian citizenship in their home churches.

A group of students from Manchester College in Indiana prepare to leave for the youth seminar in Washington.

The Eastern, Southeastern, Central and Western regions were all represented at the Youth Seminar. Besides Manchester there were students from Elizabethtown, Bridgewater, Juniata and McPherson colleges in attendance, as well as young people from many local churches.

Registration is the first thing on the program. At the Washington City Church of the Brethren, which serves as conference headquarters, the group convenes. There are lodging assignments to be made, meal tickets to pick up and day-to-day schedules to become acquainted with.

Fees for seminars are kept at a minimum with lodging, food and transportation the main items. Many persons attend at their own expense while others are delegates from some church groups. Churches are encouraged to assist financially those that want to attend.

An important part of a Washington seminar is a visit with congressmen. Such visits are scheduled in advance and congressmen welcome this opportunity to discuss current situations. It is important for the visitor to state his own views, but just as important to express his appreciation for the commendable action the congressman has taken on various issues.

Visits are also made to various embassies in Washington to discuss with the ambassadors the relation of their country to the United States. An effort is made to visit the White House, where one of the President's assistants explains the relation of the President to Congress, and some of the many activities that take place in the White House.

Discussion sessions are an important part of the seminar. At dinner in the evenings the groups frequently report on their visits to various congressmen or to various committee hearings. Or perhaps a speaker is invited in. By these discussions, information can be shared and evaluated—the important implications being lifted up. Suggestions for action at home within the local church are also discussed.

The second phase of the seminar is a trip to the United Nations in New York. Besides a tour of the building, there are opportunities to meet with important members of this organization and to sit in on some of the council meetings in progress. It is important for people to understand the work the UN is doing and its potential for settling world disputes in a peaceful manner. By being acquainted with the UN and being able to interpret its functions to others, Christian people can do much to promote the good work it is doing.

If you are not able to attend a seminar, there is still a good opportunity for you to be informed. Pamphlets listed below are highly recommended. Use one of the films in your Sunday evening discussion groups. Write your congressmen not only on controversial issues, but commend him on actions taken. You too can be a Christian citizen in action!

BLESS THIS HOUSE

Dr. Frank Slutz, lecturer and counselor, leading a weekly Sunday discussion group on "Bless This House" over WLW-D

Raymond R. Peters

WHAT started out as a thirteen-week experiment, turned out to be so successful that we are now engaged in a year-around series of TV programs dealing with family life situations. This is quite an undertaking for a city council of churches, but with the wholehearted co-operation of television station WLW-D of Dayton, the Division of Christian Education, National Council of Churches, and a group of hard-working volunteers, we expect to be able to carry on.

Last September a Family Life Clinic was held in Dayton under the direction of Dr. Richard Lentz of the Joint Department of Family Life, National Council of Churches. It had already been arranged in previous meetings between Dr. Lentz and the radio-TV committee of our federation to have a series of family life television shows as a follow-up of the clinic. This series began Sept. 26, 1954, and will end June 19, 1955, to be resumed next September.

The program appears on Sunday afternoons from 1:30 to 2:00. It has two main parts—a dramatization of a family life situation and a panel discussion of the problem, led first by Dr. Frank Slutz and now by Dr. Harry DeWire, both well-known educators and family life counselors of Dayton. Actors and panel participants were drawn from churches in the Dayton area, using different persons each week. (Informal discussion groups were organized in a number of churches.)

One of the Dayton TV commentators acclaimed it the best public service program of any kind of telecast over the local station. At the annual meeting of the Commission on General Christian Education held in Cincinnati in February, a citation was given to the Church Federation of Greater Dayton for "service in both religion and education."

What has made this "educational television at its best" has been its very real stimulation of interest in family life situations. The programs are "down to earth" and viewers feel a sense of identification with the family situations portrayed. The dramatizations and discussions show families that they are not alone in having problems and give them courage and help in working things out. There were actual evidences of individual families that were helped. As one family put it, "The program came to us just when we needed it and helped to pull our family over the hill." Some families learned for the first time of help they might get from counselors and various agencies. The whole community has become conscious of the joy of Christian family living.

From the viewpoint of the television station, there was value in finding that "a public service program can be a good TV program." The current series has a TV rating of 7, which is over twice as high as any other public service program heard in this area. Mr. Lasker, general manager of WLW-D, was so pleased with the initial series and the response it got from the viewers that he has suggested that we continue it for a long time.

To our church federation this program has brought a great deal of work, but also many real values. Each week fifteen people must work on the production. We have had to know the resources of our community to find script supervisors, acting groups, artists, rehearsal directors and properties. Through this specialized program persons with highly developed skills have found ways to work for the church which had not been provided before. There has been wonderful Christian fellowship among those participating in the program, drawn from churches of many different denominations. This has helped to spread an understanding of the purpose and work of the federation. There has been a new understanding of the TV medium for communication on the part of church workers which should result in increased support of additional radio-TV programs. We are confident that the church federation can and will meet the challenge offered by television for strengthening Christian family life.

This is an interdenominational program reaching the wider community. People in our churches in Southern Ohio, Northwestern Ohio and Southern Indiana are viewing this program. This week-by-week emphasis on family life helps the whole community to become aware

Making Worship More Dramatic and Meaningful

Charles Anderson

EVERY church and every pastor are conscious of the need to make church attendance and church worship more attractive, meaningful and spiritually commensurate. We recognize the fact that churchgoing can become rather dull and meaningless unless it captures the best that is in each person who attends. To many people, even to Christian people, going to church is just like going to most any other place; it is simply a place to spend some time if there is nothing else more attractive going on.

Some people believe that the reason for this situation is the growing influence of secularism and materialism upon the lives of the members of our churches. This undoubtedly is one explanation. However, we can not justify the situation wholly by blaming it on outside influences. Perhaps we have been partly to blame because we have not put enough effort and creative imagination into the planning and conducting of our services of worship, particularly the great spiritual services of the church, such as the love feast, baptism, dedication of children and the dedication of physical aids to worship. As Brethren, who in our origin were greatly influenced by puritanism which divorced art and drama from religion and pietism which placed great emphasis on the simple life, we have tended to be somewhat awkward, shoddy and careless in our conduct of holy worship. We have been inclined to go to the extreme in our desire and love for simplicity.

Past generations may have found vitality and meaning in this kind of approach to worship, but it will no longer suffice in this age of the highly trained and well-developed abilities of our people. The effects of the radio and the screen have been permanently welded into the minds of our present generation. Can we expect our people to be impressed, motivated and moved in their minds and wills if we fail to make our services of worship more vital, refreshing, challenging and dynamic than the world does? Hardly so. We must awake to this situation and face it with something that is much more satisfying, permanent and eternal yet never stoop to the level of worldly enterprises.

During the past year at the La-Porte Church of the Brethren, Ind., we have been seriously exploring in the areas of simple drama and art to make our services more vital and refreshing to our people. Our most recent experience, which proved to be very meaningful and impressive, was a special service of dedication for our chancel baptistry painting. This very beautiful painting was done for us by Bro. Neher, a minister and professional painter of the Church of the Brethren.

The baptistry painting depicts the shepherd, the sheep, the still waters and the green pastures of the Twenty-third Psalm. Appearing in the center foreground immediately over the baptismal waters is the dove, symbolizing the descent of the Holy Spirit. The water falls very quietly into the baptistry. The range of mountains in the distant background represents the great creative power of God, and the large trees that flank both sides of the painting spiral upward to the majestic heavens above. These artistic qualities and spiritual values of the painting were interpreted for us by Bro. Neher in the first part of our service of dedication.

Following this, we joined in the reading of a litany of dedication. The lights in the sanctuary were turned off, including the spot light which is projected on the painting. At this point in the service, a soloist sang Beside Still Waters, during which time a rotating colored disc with a spot light projected from behind it was focused on the lower section of the painting. The disc of amber, red, blue and white light made very interesting changes of color tone on the painting and its counter-clockwise movement seemed to set the water in motion, bringing it over the falls into the baptistry.

Artist Medford Neher interprets baptistry picture to the pastor

Immediately following, the service of dedication moved into a very effective and deeply spiritual climax by the administration of baptism to a young man who had just dedicated his life to Christ. The minister appeared in the waters of the baptistry and introduced the service of baptism by reading several passages of Scripture relating to baptism. A prayer of invocation was offered and a few remarks were made concerning the administration of baptism to this youth. He was then invited to come forward to receive a framed certificate of baptism and a copy of the New Testament in the Revised Standard Version. (Our church gives these tokens of remembrance of the baptism service to each new member received into the fellowship of the church by baptism.) From the pastor he also received a copy of the new booklet entitled Manual for New Church Members. The applicant knelt to take the vows of baptism and for the prayer of dedication. The service closed with the singing of O Jesus, I Have Promised and the benediction.

I am aware of the fact that many churches and pastors are giving a renewed emphasis to the dignity, beauty and sacredness of worship. These experiences of our church are offered and dedicated to the purpose of challenging and encouraging those who have not yet explored in the area of simple drama, art and lighting to enhance the beauty and impressiveness of worship.

of the need for family life education and, at the same time, definite help is being given to families. No one denomination can promote such a program, but through co-operative effort, TV time is made available. Brethren people in the greater Dayton area are using "Bless This House" TV programs to enrich the family life programs of the local churches. Our people have taken a leading role in producing, supporting, promoting and using this new method of family life education. Church of the Brethren people should encourage every constructive effort to enrich family life on a community basis.

Laymen's Training Institute In India

CAN you come to the training institute next week end?" invited Brother Brooks. "It will be held during the vacation so that government school teachers and as many others as possible may attend."

"Our group hopes to be there, but some of us may be called to work in the timber hauling this week," replied one young man.

"Come for part of the time, anyway," continued the missionary. "Bring grain and you will be supplied with wood for cooking and kerosene for your lanterns. And, of course, bring your Bibles and songbooks. There will be one evening of singing and one evening for the communion service."

"Yes, we are sure we can come for at least part of it. We will spread the word," came the reply.

The theme for the institute was, "Seek First His Kingdom." Following a long-standing custom, the main speakers were Indian Brethren. Elder G. K. Satvedi, whom many of you know, brought rich truths in simple speech. His listeners leaned forward, so keen was the interest. Shantilal Bhagat taught two sessions on improving agriculture. Brother Abraham of the Evangelical Alliance Mission led our inspiring hymn singing on his piano-accordion. He spoke words of warm personal testimony and exhortation, often lapsing into village dialect.

Several other Indian elders also delivered messages. One health address was given by the local government doctor who is a staunch Christian.

A high spot of the institute was the installation of two deacons, Bro. Narso Kevshi and Brother and Sister Maganlal M. Gameti. Brother Kevshi has faced many years of persecution in his home and village for Christ's sake. Brother Gameti left his position as principal of our central school for seminary training and is now a lay evangelist in a young church in the jungle area.

One unique feature of the institute was the number of different chairmen for the sessions—twelve, mostly laymen, in the four days; all capable. For opening devotions, each chairman read some New Testament teaching on the kingdom. Another feature was the spontaneous testimony of a number of youth on how they had witnessed in the face of new taunts. The sessions were interesting and vital, so much so that the chairmen found they had to keep their eyes on the church clock!

Between eighty and ninety persons attended a part or all of the training sessions. One group of young men walked fourteen miles after the Sunday night meeting so they could be at work on Monday morning.

The congregational singing always brings out the enthusiasm of local and distant talent. Over two hundred attended the communion service held under the moonlit sky. The meal? A small biscuit and a cup of tea. Feet washing? Water poured over dusty feet and wiped with a towel, truly Oriental. The sacraments? They always bring a special hush. And then, almost to the last participant, men, women and children came forward to lay offerings on the table.

God blessed our institute. Do remember these "other sheep" in prayers.

Waka is the place where our young men and women come to be trained as teachers for our elementary schools. If they are married, the men bring their wives and families with them and the wives also attend classes which are primarily domestic science. We also have on the site a junior primary school used for practice teaching. Classes in teacher training are taught, using English, though this year we have what we call a vernacular teacher training class starting which is using Bura.

The classrooms, dormitories and staff residences are all across a creek and on a hill opposite from our home. Near us Owen has been busy putting up buildings for the girls' school. The first class of girls will be arriving at the end of this week and Celia will be helping in this school. These girls will spend three years working on the equivalent of the seventh and eighth grades, at the same time devoting considerable time to domestic science subjects. We are expecting twenty-four girls for this first class.

Supplying Christian teachers to pagan villages who come asking is our hope of winning those villages to Christ. As yet, the demand for teachers far exceeds the supply and because of this men are being lost to Mohammedanism. And so we feel that the Waka Training Center is a very important part of our mission program here.

On Sunday afternoons many of the students go out into near-by villages to hold services, and Owen is pleased to be the evangelist in charge of this program. Though Biu, our nearest town, is predominantly Moslem, it is hoped that during this year a Christian church may be established there. At Waka Celia will be teaching a convenant class on Sundays for women who are preparing for baptism. All this work is very challenging and will require the very best that we can give.

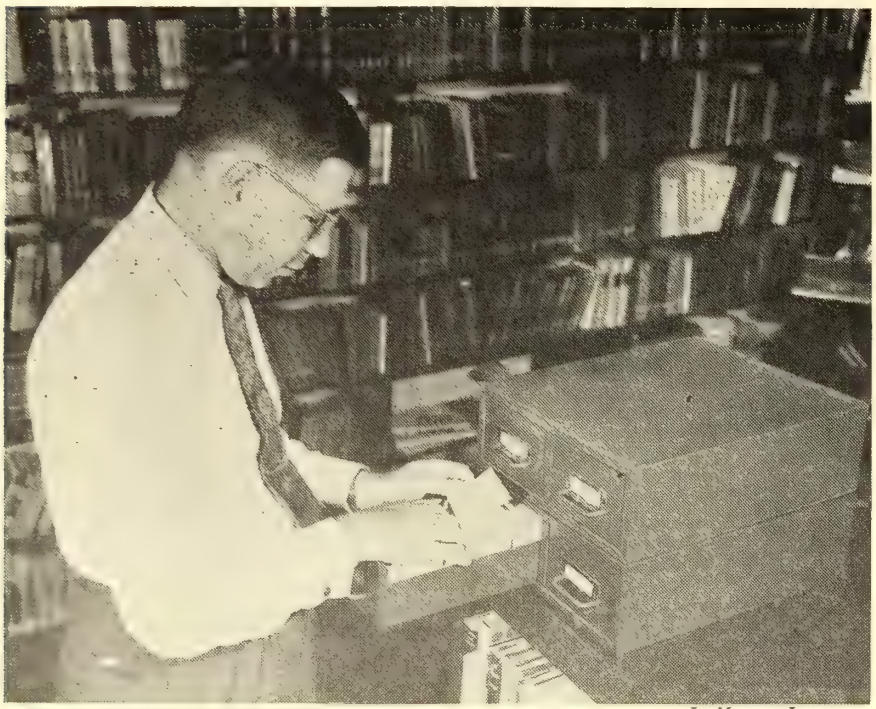
Scenes From My Windows

Edythe McDowell
Bombay, India

SINCE moving into our flat on Churchgate Street in Bombay, India, a large five-storied building directly across from us has been under construction. It has been fascinating to watch it being built and yet heart-rending, too. Women do much of the hard labor as they load their baskets with concrete, hoist it to their heads and move in endless strings to where the material is needed. Or perhaps it is bricks they must carry or large stones but always it is done on their heads. These "coolie" women are allowed time out from their arduous tasks for nursing their babies. When they cry they take them in their arms, feed them and then place them back on a gravel pile or in the dirt to sleep, cry or squirm until another time. I watch and my heart yearns for these mothers and their children.

For several weeks now from my bedroom balcony I have been watching a young mother who sits on a doorstep in the alley across the way. The mother has a toddling baby boy who runs about some to play but much of the time sits still and seems uninterested in the world about him. This young woman is from a village up country. Her husband is a servant in a city home and in order to be with him some she has come to Bombay with no place to stay, no place to keep her child—with nothing to do. So she sits listlessly on the doorstep and at night stretches out on the pavement —her baby at her side. I watch and my heart is torn.



Amsey Bollinger

Women do much of the hard labor in construction, carrying baskets of concrete and bricks or stone

It is Sunday evening, a few minutes past six, and we are ready to leave our house for Sunday worship. Above the din comes a familiar chant. Even before the picture is in front of our window we can visualize what it is to be, for we have seen it many times. Slipping along the street on his back comes a scrawny beggar with legs twisted in grotesque shapes over his body. Around his head is wrapped a thick dirty rag and around his loins is a similar one. Placed on his naked stomach is an old coconut shell. Beside this strange bit of humanity is another walking slowly behind and together they chant their call for alms. As I listen the coins fall fast. I watch and my heart cries out "Have we shared enough of our wealth and our Christ—for all these are God's children too!"

What Can a Pastor Expect From His Employer?

D. Eugene Lichty
Pastor, Mountain Grove, Missouri

OUR most recent Yearbook reports more than eight hundred pastors serving churches in our Brotherhood. More than half of these are on a full-time basis. Such servants of the kingdom are constantly increasing as our churches grow in number and program. Even so the demand is exceeding the supply. If we are to challenge young men to the ministry, we must do our best to maintain a harmonious relationship between the pastor and his church. This relationship is considerably more involved today than it was when my grandfather ministered the church for many years as a farmer in the community. There were no housing or salary problems. No thought was given to retirement or hospital benefits. Needless to say, there were problems, but they were of a different nature.

In this day of a full-time ministry, two-thousand dollar cars, nineteen years of training, and social security, what can a pastor expect from his congregation? A public school teacher expects rather definite considerations from his school board. The "Record of Agreement" is being used more and more between a pastor and his congregation. But the immediate employer of the minister is his ministerial board or committee. Just what can he expect from such a board?

First of all, this board should provide a comfortable residence in which to live. This does not mean that it need be extravagant. Certainly we could expect it to be as good as the average home of his parishioners. The parsonage is a meeting place for all types of people. Not only should the needy transient be made to feel at home in it, but also the mayor, the banker, the doctor and the school superintendent. If the pastor's home is owned by the church as most of them are, the Board should see that the church trustees make periodic inspections and keep it in good repair. A run-down parsonage is a poor reflection upon the spiritual vitality of a church.

Even though the parsonage is the center of much entertaining, the board should do its best to see that the privacy of the family is respected. Simply being a part of the church property does not make it public property. Such privacy is more frequently violated if the parsonage is adjacent to the church. The pastor and his family are sufficiently in the eye of the public without moving the public into the living room. Occasionally a pastor may encourage such privacy to an extreme. Certainly the latch-string should be on the outside to all in the church and community, but the knocker should be used before the latch.

Many pastors will never have the joy and satisfaction that come with owning their home. That makes it all the more important for the board to see to it that the parsonage can be as much like a home for its pastor and family as possible.

The second provision which a pastor might expect from his board is a reasonably quiet place in which to study. Pastors are not all agreed as to the location for such a room. Personally, I much prefer it in the church. That is the place for the business of the kingdom, and encourages more regular study habits on the part of the minister. Especially for pastors with children, a place in the church will be more acceptable to the mother of the home.

Whether in the church or parsonage, it should be easily accessible to the public. In fact, it ought to be in such a place and sufficiently identified that it would invite people to bring their problems, hopes and aspirations to the minister. More of our folk are realizing the value of counsel with their pastor than ever before. The study should be convenient enough, comfortable and large enough to ecourage such a ministry.

There ought to be at least a few permanent fixtures in the study. Bookshelves are a must. No more costly than they are it is a shame that many pastors must transport their own or construct them anew upon arrival. Certainly there should be heating facilities. A minister does not appreciate carrying his tools to the fireplace any more than a farmer would like to milk his cows in the garage. A separate telephone or at least an extension from the parsonage will easily pay for itself in time and convenience. Most ministers depend upon the use of a file cabinet and, even though they may have their own, seldom have enough space. A three- or four-drawer cabinet would definitely be an asset to a study.

Larger churches will want to give consideration to a secretarial office in which callers can be received, mimeographing and typing done, and mailing prepared. Even smaller churches could use the abilities of their pastor to a larger degree if volunteer secretarial help could be secured. In these days of bulletins, church newsletters and numerous printed reports, a mimeograph is a must. It pays in the long run to secure a good one.

The parsonage and study are material provisions which are necessary, but these are not the most important. I doubt if many pastors leave a church because of inadequacies of living and study accommodations. There are other less tangible considerations which a pastor should expect of his employer.

Foremost among them are periodic evaluations of his work on the part of the board. My own estimation is that these should be at least quarterly. At these times the minister has a heart-to-heart discussion of his ministry with those to whom he is directly responsible. It is here that misunderstandings should be nipped in the bud. Complaints which the board members have heard should be faced frankly. This group should be a "sounding board" for both the minister and the congregation. Neither should they forget to encourage the minister in areas of achievement. The minister also should feel free to talk over matters which have caused him irritation. Usually they can be improved when brought to the surface. The entire discussion must be kept on a high level of spirituality which will move the church into a greater ministry in the kingdom.

Growing out of such evaluations, the board should be expected to interpret the work of the ministry to the entire congregation. When a congregation moves from a "free ministry" to a full-time pastor, what shall they expect of him? What will he do with all his time? Does it relieve members of the congregation of previous responsibilities? What relation has the pastor to the deacons? Is he supposed to run the Sunday-school program, teach a class and lead the singing when the director fails to appear? The board should help all concerned to arrive at satisfactory answers to such questions. Maybe a special night or council should be taken to discuss the minister's job. This should be a special concern of the ministerial board. We have taken too much for granted. Let us share our thinking in order that pastor and congregation might move forward in harmony.

A pastor certainly has a right to expect a periodic review of his "Record of Agreement" by the Board, without having to call it to their attention. For the past several years there has been almost an uninterrupted rise in prices due to inflation. The automobile workers receive automatic increases in wages when the "cost of living index" rises. How many boards have been as considerate of their pastors?

There are other factors which increase the living costs for a minister such as sickness, additional children and school fees. A minister is entitled to expect his board to consider these requirements with him. Even without increased costs, an increase in salary should be forthcoming from time to time. Most jobs assure a salary increase with longer tenure. It shows appreciation for his "stick-to-itiveness" and may be considerably cheaper than changing pastors.

There are other parts of the agreement which may need changing such as provisions for secretarial help, allowance for travel and utilities. Not to be omitted is the section dealing with the responsibilities of the pastor. Frequently a pastor gives excess attention to one phase of his work to the neglect of another phase equally important. The board should call such to his attention. The "Record of Agreement" is not simply a contract to be hidden away in the file. It provides a working reminder for both pastor and congregation.

While I cannot vouch for its authenticity, this incident is told as being true. One Sunday morning a pastor failed to take his accustomed place behind the pulpit. In fact, he simply remained in the pew when the preaching hour arrived. Somewhat embarrassed, one of the deacons approached his pastor for an explanation. Said he, "I had to spend so much time this past week doing the work of the trustees that there was none left to prepare a sermon!" The church officials got the point. How often the minister must dissipate his energy doing the work which is appointed for some board or official in the church. Does not a minister have a right to expect wholehearted co-operation from the boards, committees, teachers, age group directors and other officials in his church? Too often the layman assumes that he has hired the preacher to complete the work that he fails to do. The ministerial board should do its best to see that the entire church organization is putting its shoulder to the wheel.

This article should be supplemented by another on What a Church Can Expect From Its Pastor, but I leave that for a layman to write. Stated or implied, a minister does expect certain considerations from his employer. The degree to which these are done to his satisfaction will have a great deal to do with the length of his tenure. They may even determine whether or not he will remain in the ministry. More of our men leave the ministry than we can afford to lose. There are various reasons, but I am sure that fewer of them will desert the field if local churches as represented on their ministerial boards will act as responsible employers.

Amendment to the Pension Plan

In the judgment of the Pension Board it is desirable and necessary that the Ministerial and Missionary Pension Plan of the Church of the Brethren be further amended. As provided in the Pension Plan, therefore, the Pension Board has adopted the following amendment, ad interim, and presents the amendment to Annual Conference of 1955 for ratification:

Article III. Member Contributions

Each member shall contribute an amount equivalent to four per cent of his salary during his active membership, except as hereinafter provided.

Any member of the Pension Plan shall be permitted, following his election of social security coverage under the 1954 amendments to the Federal Old Age and Survivors' Insurance Act, as amended from time to time, to make contributions to the pension plan equivalent to 3%, 2%, but not less than 1% of his salary basis, as determined under Article I, paragraph (j), provided the employing organization pays its regular contribution of 6%.

All such contributions shall be credited to the individual account of the member and be increased by the interest credits thereon.

The above and foregoing resolution is approved and adopted as a resolution of the Pension Board (Trustees of the Ministerial and Missionary Pension Plan of the Church of the Brethren) this 10th day of November, 1954.

Defiance—Our church was host to the district meeting. The men's group of our church was host to the district men's work banquet. In February Bro. Ralph Wiley, pastor of the Marion church, Ohio, was with us for evangelistic meetings. One member was received into our church. In February our church helped in the city religious survey. The ladies' aid anniversary was observed as family night on Sunday evening, Feb. 20. One of the families who had visited in all the homes and had taken pictures showed slides at this meeting. Our church cooperated with the other churches in the town in World Day of Prayer services. On Feb. 27 Sister Martha Cocanower showed pictures at the evening service of the work at Castañer, Puerto Rico. The ladies' aid has been making comforters for relief. The ladies also sponsored the remodeling of the church kitchen. We are organizing a young married people's class in the near future. A church board has been formed to plan the church activities.—Mrs. Leland Bowling, Defiance, Ohio.

Deshler—Following our Christmas program our young people went caroling for the shut-ins. One Sunday morning we had a dedication service for the gifts which were brought for the Navajo Indians. We had a family night in December and also a watch night party. The men of the church have organized a men's work group. This group will work a farm near the church as they did last year. We recently sent used clothing and grease to the relief center at New Windsor. During special meetings, three persons were received into our church. Bro. Elgin S. Moyer of Oak Park, Ill., was evangelist in our church at the Easter season. Our love feast was on Good Friday, April 8. The women's group has been sewing garments and making comforters for relief and sending friendship packets for overseas relief. The women pay for the fuel oil for the church each month.—Marvel Anderson, Hoytville, Ohio.

Tiffin—We co-operated with all the churches in the county in the Share Our Surplus project, and with the council of church women in the World Day of Prayer services. During our January school of missions Goldie Swartz was with us for our first session and we used the following films during the remainder of the school: Unto These My Brethren, Chance to Live, My Peace I Give Thee and Frontiers Near Home. On Feb. 20 Nettie Weybright was with us for an all-day service. Our birthday supper was held on March 24. Lela Miller will serve as our delegate to Annual Conference. Evening services were held during Holy Week.—Mrs. Elias Eberly, Freemont, Ohio.

Eastern Maryland

Frederick—The ground-breaking service for the new church was held in August on the new building site. The building of the new church was begun soon thereafter. During the past year the women's fellowship guild made contributions to the Bethany nurses' home and educational program, the leprosy mission and the B.V.S. unit in Baltimore, Md. Inspirational programs were given at Christmas time by the young people's department with the senior choir participating. The Temple choir gave a special program at Easter. About 200 delegates from churches of Frederick County voted to go ahead with perfecting a council of churches of Frederick County. The work on the new church building is progressing nicely. The cornerstone laying will be held sometime in the near future. Evangelistic meetings were conducted in March by Bro. A. J. Caricofe, presiding elder of our church. The spring love feast was held on April 7.—Mrs. Florence B. Shober, Frederick, Md.

Eastern Virginia

Hollywood—We observed communion services with Bro. Davis Nolley officiating. Bro. G. W. Beahm of Nokesville worshiped with us and the Sunday-school departments presented a Christmas program. Bro. O. R. Hersch of Manassas, Va., was at our church on Feb. 22 and showed the picture, I Beheld His Glory. Bro. G. W. Beahm brought the morning message on Feb. 27.—Mrs. Bertha M. Quann, Fredericksburg, Va.

First Virginia

Hopewell—On Feb. 6 the Clericus chorus of Bridgewater College conducted the morning worship hour. The chorus were guests of the church for lunch. In March the men's fellowship painted the church. Revival services were held March 20-27, with Bro. Carroll S. Ringgold of Roanoke, Va., as guest minister for the week. April 7 was the date of our love feast and communion.—Mrs. E. D. Green, Hopewell, Va.

Northern Virginia

Mill Creek—Our school of missions was held in January with Brother and Sister I. S. Long, returned missionaries to India, in charge. Our men's work group entertained their wives at their annual supper in February. The young people of our church served the supper and Bro. Robert Sherfy of Harrisonburg was guest speaker. The women's organization has been organized into three circles with an overall cabinet. The Sunday evening committee has been granted permission to secure a sound projector for our church activities. Our 100% Messenger Club is continued for another year. One of the young people's classes is moving ahead with plans for a nursery in the basement of the church. We are making preparation for a family Bible school for one week in July. At our council meeting we passed a resolution to accept the outdoor bulletin board erected by the James W. and Myrtie Trobaugh family. Delegates to Annual Conference are Martha Lou Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Clifford Good, Wilbur Garber and our pastor, Cecil Showalter. The music committee is planning for a week's music school. A Sunday morning's offering was set aside for the Linville Creek church, which was recently destroyed by fire.—Mrs. Leon A. Mundy, Port Republic, Va.

Salem—At our last council meeting our congregation voted to retain our present pastor, Bro. Arthur G. Carper. We also decided to make plans for remodeling and repairing the church house. Our membership is gradually increasing. Three applicants are awaiting baptism. We are planning a vacation Bible school the last of June or the first of July. We have a community hymnsing the third Sunday night of each month. The women's work group sponsored a program with Bro. Stanley R. Wampler showing the filmstrips, A Chance to Live and Frontiers Near Home.—Mrs. Leola C. Starkey, Stephens City, Va.

Timberville—During our school of missions in January, we studied India. On Feb. 15 the father and son banquet was served by one of our women's groups. A number of our workers attended the community leadership training school. Our pastor, Joseph M. Mason, recently attended the political seminar in Washington, D. C. Elder Paul H. Bowman brought us a report of the World Council of Churches meeting and showed slides. A special offering was received on Feb 13 for the Linville Creek congregation to help rebuild their church which was destroyed by fire. Our men donated a heifer to the Heifer Project. Pre-Easter services were held Sunday through Wednesday evenings with communion on Thursday night. We joined with the other churches of the community in a special Good Friday service. Bro. Floyd Mitchell of Martinsburg, W. Va., conducted a series of meetings in our church in April. —Martha A. Huffman, Timberville, Va.

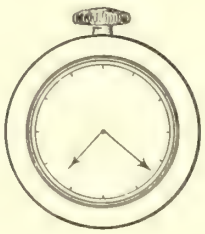
Antioch—The young people delivered the fruit baskets from the church to the shut-ins. The children brought joy to the shut-ins also as they went from home

This book deals with the Biblical concept and its meaning for the church.



"In my judgment this is one of the finest books I've read in the field of Bible exposition in the last ten years. Every minister should read it, then take time to go back and read the Biblical books with which it deals as it traces the development of the Kingdom of God concept in Jewish and Christian thought. A scholarly work, simply written that should be studied and understood by every minister and adult Sunday-school teacher."—Charles Zunkel.

In THE KINGDOM OF GOD readers will realize afresh the significance and unity of the whole Bible. They will receive again a summons to citizenship in the Kingdom, and learn its meaning for the modern world and the present-day church. Footnotes are adequate for easy use. There is also an index covering references and subjects. Cloth. 288 pages.

to home singing. The reception and installation service for our new pastor, Bro. Carson M. Key, was held Jan. 1, with Bro. Galen Crist, of the district ministerial board, preaching the installation sermon. The women of the church received cut garments from New Windsor and have been sewing and quilting for relief. The films, A Chance to Live and Frontiers Near Home, have recently been shown. The World Day of Prayer service was held in our church with all the churches of the community participating. The youth are conducting a study of the Church of the Brethren to which they have invited the adults of the church. The junior high department had a special fellowship meeting to which they invited junior highs from other churches. The membership list of the church has been revised and a special effort has been made to locate all members of the church. A yearbook has been mimeographed and distributed.—Julia Laprade, Boones Mill, Va.

Coulson—Five new members were received into our church by baptism at the close of a revival held by Bro. G. W. Slagle, Limestone, Tenn. Proceeds from our harvest festival sale were used to put a new floor in our church. Our young people under the direction of our B.V.S. workers have exchanged a program with the youth group at the Fremont church. A number of our young people attended the hilltop meeting at the Laurel Branch church in December. Our church was host to the district training school for parents and church workers, Feb. 25-26. Interest group leaders were Paul Fike of Cloverdale, Glenn Garner of Pulaski, Guy Wampler of Bassett and Edgar Martin of Christianburg, Va. The consecration service was led by Julia Laprade of the Antioch church. Total attendance at this meeting was approximately 150 persons, representing 21 churches of the district.—Wyvetta Robinson, Hillsville, Va.

Danville—From Feb. 11-13 the district hilltop retreat was held in our church. The retreat was climaxed by a young people's communion service. The pre-Easter revival services were held each evening April 4-10, with Bro. Orval S. Garber bringing the messages. On the evening of April 3, a deputation team from Bridgewater College presented the Program of Love. Our children's department of the Sunday school has added a class to care for the children and expects to add two more classes soon. The church kitchen is nearly completed. The men have done most of the work in the kitchen and the ladies' aid has taken care of most of the expenses for the materials. The ladies are planning a shower to supply the necessary needs for the kitchen. During the latter part of March our pastor, Bro. Eugene H. Kahle, conducted the morning devotions on the local radio station. Since our last report four new members have been baptized and four received by letter into our fellowship.—Mrs. Orva Shaw, Danville, Va.

Jones Chapel—Bro. Abraham Eshelman of Mount Joy, Pa., conducted our revival meetings May 11-22. Five have been received into our membership recently. At our January council we decided to hold another vacation Bible school and Brethren Lloyd Richardson, Carol Eanes, Macy Bowman, Frank Hylton and Luther Hopkins were appointed as trustees. One Sunday morning the young people were in charge of the Sunday-school service. Our adult class is sponsoring a supper to which our church neighborhood is invited.—Ruth H. Turner, Martinsville, Va.

Pulaski—Revised plans for our new church from Bro. Forrest Groff, our building counselor, have been adopted. Besides our regular building fund offering each Sunday, the ladies' aid is raising money for kitchen equipment. The young people purchased a new piano which was dedicated last fall. The adult Sunday-school class is raising money for a picture window and the intermediates for an electric water heater. Our building committee chairman, Paul Phibbs, recently moved to Bridgewater to further his education so we elected Cecil Bucker as vice-chairman. Youth Week was observed with special activities during the week climaxing with a banquet. We observed Race Relations Sunday by inviting Rev. O. L. Johnson of the Negro Baptist church as guest speaker along with his congregation. Their choir rendered several numbers in song for us. On Feb. 20 we reciprocated with our pastor, Bro. Glenn Garner preaching at their church and our choir singing several selections. Our men's and women's organizations both held banquets recently. The Sunday-school attendance campaign is well under way now. During the month of March all of our 6:30 p.m. group meetings studied temperance. A large number of our CBYF members attended the district round-table at Laurel Branch.—Mrs. Cecil Buckner, Pulaski, Va.

Spray—Since our last report one was baptized and one received by letter into our fellowship. One Saturday in December Bro. M. R. Zigler was guest speaker in our church. Nine of our men attended the district dinner at the Bassett church. Our father and son banquet was held in December. The young people have organized under the Youth Action Plan. Four of our young people and their directors attended the district rally at Laurel Branch. The CBYF sponsored a prayer vigil at the church in January. Our evening services through January were on foreign missions. Bro. Ora DeLauter, regional executive secretary was recently a guest speaker in our church. James Thompson, Don Rebert and Thomas Rotruck, students at Bridgewater College, were in charge of our service at the close of Youth Week. Two of our young people attended the hilltop at the Danville church. On Feb. 13 Armon Snowden and Roger Sappington of Duke University were guest speakers. Bro. Guy Wampler had charge of our service on Feb. 20. Our elder, W. C. Sweitzer conducted our pre-Easter services. Plans are being made to build a parsonage. Bro. Homer J. Miller has accepted the call to be our pastor beginning Sept. 1.—Mrs. Ersley Odell, Leaksville, N.C.

TOWARD HIS KINGDOM

THERE can be no kingdom without a king. Unless Jesus Christ stands at the center of every endeavor to realize the kingdom of God, that kingdom will not come in answer to our prayers or in response to our efforts. For this reason the church's ministry must be rooted in a historical person whose life and death and resurrection became the turning point of human history. Having looked back to Galilee and Judea, the church must also look forward to the opportunities for witness and service that lie ahead. The church must look outward beyond its own horizons to the hungry, homeless, hopeless millions who do not yet know where their homeland is or where their hope lies. By proclaiming the gospel of Christ as the only hope of the world, by witnessing to his kingdom as the only homeland in which men can find peace, the church points the way toward his kingdom. Some steps along that pathway are graphically revealed in these pages. They encourage us to greater devotion in seeking first his kingdom.

The Gospel Messenger welcomes letters commenting on editorials, articles and news. Letters should be brief and brotherly.

Denominations

Owing to a change in address I missed a few copies of the Messenger and did not get to read the article by Sister Woods which appeared in Readers Write on the subject of denominations.

The article on the same subject by Bro. Sherfy brought forth some thoughts concerning our apparent Protestant discord.

A glance into history seems to bring up a few pertinent questions.

If Abram had been a conformist to the dominant religion of the people of the Ur of the Chaldees, do you think God would have called him to become the leader and founder of the great peoples which recognize him as their father?

Would Moses, raised as the son of Pharaoh's daughter, ever have become the Lawgiver of God's chosen people and the one under God's guidance to lead them from bondage, had he conformed to the religion of that dynasty of Egyptain rule?

What if Jesus himself had been a strict conformist to the Jewish religion of his day. I am thinking now not of the law and the prophets which he did literally and spiritually fulfill, but of the Jewish religion as taught and practiced in his day. Could he have so conformed and even have become the Savior of the world?

We Protestants cannot consistantly criticize others too severely when we think of the experience and treatment of Roger Williams and many others of our great leaders because of their insistence on the right to worship God according to the dictates of their own conscience as led by the Holy Spirit.

It was because of this fundamental principle of Christianity that most denominations, including our own beloved denomination, were started.

One of the major effects of these various denominations is to assure continued religious freedom in the land which we love.

Now there remains the question, What should be our attitude to members and churches of other denominations? Jesus, when talking to Jews (God's chosen people when the rest of the world was heathen) said, "Other sheep I have which are not of this fold, these also I must bring."

It seems to me therefore that each one of our denominations can fill its vital place in the advancement of God's kingdom here on earth just as each family in a community can and should contribute to the security and advancement of the whole group.

Again all history and our current time reveals that many of the world's problems of religion and brotherhood are too big for any one denomination, however large it is.

This seems to have been the real reason for the organization of the National Council of Churches of Christ in the United States. In this larger group each denomination may have its place as a co-operating member and the opportunity to make its particular contribution to Christ's great work here and now. In this way denominations do not and should not lose their identity nor sacrifice the right of each individual member to his freedom of religious beliefs and freedom of expression.—E. O. Slater, Brentwood, Mo.

Christlike

Read with interest your reply to the article of a brother entitled "The Best Way, Not the Easy Way." Would it be like Christ to organize a group of folks and say, "We don't care what you believe, or what you don't believe, we will accept it and follow along according to your ideas"? Would it be like Christ to teach baptism and tell folks if you don't believe in it, we will accept your principles of unbelief? "Be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers."

Would Christ have called on the apostles to "go teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost," and not expect them to do it?

If they had not done it would the promise hold good when he said, "Lo I am with you!" When Philip preached unto the eunuch, how did he come to believe and know about baptism? Please stay by the doctrine of Christ.—Edwin Groff, Paradise, Calif.

Firm Foundation

Is the Brethren church built on a firm foundation, the Bible? An article referred to church members being taken into the church anyway they prefer. Is that Christ's teaching or man's?

We have all kinds of agencies where folks can have their preference these day to satisfy their needs. . . . Beware of false teachers. I'll stand for the Bible.—Mrs. H. Wagner, Kissimmee, Fla.

PARENTS and their CHILDREN

Levi K. Ziegler

Waltner

Mutual understanding and confidence between parent and child are to be expected in a Christian family

GOD needs parents. He instituted the home and the mechanics for its perpetuation. He intended that children should be born in homes. A man alone can not make a home. Neither can a woman alone. In the beginning it was ordained that man and woman should become husband and wife and have offspring. That is still the divine plan.

"They shall become one flesh" has a number of interesting connotations. They become "one" in the procreative process which brings into being others of their kind. They are "one" in fulfilling God's purpose that the earth should be peopled with human beings. They are "one" in perpetuating the divine institution and purpose of the home. This is to say that the home is one of the best symbols of the orderliness of God. It is an integral part of God's plan for the existence of an orderly, dependable universe.

It appears that in all times God's plan of orderliness for peopling the earth has been antagonized. In high places and in low, this counter plan has flourished. Recent revelations indicate that in Soviet countries sexual promiscuity has become a part of the national intended plan for increasing the population. Every possible opportunity is invented to circumvent God's intended plan. God forbid that this up-surging of humanistic, pagan philosophy, in terrible and frightening conflict with God's plan for life at its best in good homes, should go unrebuked. Rather, let it be our prayer that it be brought under quick judgment by an outraged, dishonored Creator and by a morally incensed and sane society. Nations live or perish, not on the basis of numbers in their populations, but by their spiritual convictions, attitudes, ideals and faith.

Sexual promiscuity creates many uncertainties, many sorrows and regrets and much injustice. This method of man's expression of his innate sexual potentialities is not approved by the Creator, God. "God established the home to people earth and to people heaven," it has been said. God needs parents who will work in harmony with the divine blueprint for the kind of a home God wants, where parents and their children are wholly committed to the fulfillment of the divine design.

Parents can be co-operators with God. God wants the earth populated with good people, with people who are pro-God rather than anti-God. The first people had to be taught, commanded, reproved, entreated, warned, punished, comforted. They were not denied the right of learning by experience. Early experiences seemed to be pleasant; later ones, bitter and anguishing. Their schooling was painful and slow. Experience then, as now, was potent in making real the lessons taught by the divine Teacher.

In these days there is little excuse for being uninformed. Young people, long before they contemplate marriage, have access to an amazing array of authentic information in books, magazines, lectures, institutes. Much that has been written and that is being written and said is but a personal recital of what has been successful and useful. Included also are warnings of pitfalls, of disaster and heartbreak. The wedding day is too late to begin to become informed on the meaning of marriage and the purpose of God in the family. It is too late to wait until the first baby is born to inquire as to what is to be done with this "bundle from heaven." Tragedy awaits ignorance, indifference, the trial-and-error method, in getting the new family started.

It seems so strange that for thousands of years the same mistakes have been made and the same home tragedies experienced. The life of humans is regulated, not by instinct, but by what we have learned, by our moral convictions, by our loyalties and our aspirations. This should be especially true of our home life. If, then, the future depends so greatly on our evaluations of the past and present, we should, by all the mistakes, successes, heartaches and satisfactions, be able to progress more securely, and measure up fully in our homes, to what God wants. Parents have a great responsibility as co-operators with God in building homes and in propagating the race. When we want what God wants we shall truly succeed.

Children need good parents. When do children discover that they have parents? The answer to this question may not be easy. Psychologists say that almost as soon as a baby is born it begins to register impressions. It is the impression of this writer that very early a baby responds to love in a bodily contact or in a note of love in a voice it hears or even in love shown in a facial expression. As the child grows and smiles, cries and laughs, walks and talks, it watches what its parents do; it evaluates the tone of voice when they talk; it discerns early whether or not it is really wanted and loved. In the early months the foundation is laid through the sincerity and love of parents, for wholesome response on the part of the child to necessary discipline. You cannot fool a child. It detects unfairness and insincerity very quickly.

The boy who said to his father, as he followed him in the snow, "Father, watch where you step for I am walking in your tracks," suggested an important principle. Parenthood is a stewardship with heavy responsibilities. While the child is expected to respect his parents, the parents must earn the right to be respected. Parental authority and discipline and love cannot be delegated. Movies, television, comic books and social clubs cannot love a boy or a girl.

Mutual understanding and confidence between a boy and his dad and a girl and her mother are to be expected in the Christian family. This kind of a family can stand a great amount of strain. Is it too much to say that sound, devoted and loving parenthood will be reflected in the character of their children? Churchgoing, family prayers, a thoroughly dependable integrity, a mutual respect and trust—this is good ground upon which to build wholesome, enduring and redemptive family relationships.

And what shall we say about the later years of parenthood? After the children are grown up and have homes of their own, their parents are their parents still. How many happy Mother's Day and Father's Day experiences are marred because parents and children have fallen out some place along the way! The traditional Mother's Day and Father's Day are to be commended. But they should be more than traditional observances. There is a great difference between mere words, spoken in praise of parents, and what may be felt in the heart.

The best tribute to a good father and mother is the reflection of their traits of character in the lives of their children. The best bouquet a mother and father can receive from their children is their gratitude for

When a Church Wakes Up

ONLY a few weeks ago Fred made his decision in favor of Jesus Christ. In the special services just before Easter he strode forward confidently and took his pastor's hand. He did not wait until Easter morning to blossom forth in a new suit. That very moment he showed by the light in his eyes that he was beginning to walk in newness of life.

This was the moment that Fred's family and friends had been praying for. They were thrilled to see him make this step, but even more overjoyed to hear him say that this was just the beginning. Before the congratulations were over Fred had already put a direct question to one of his friends who had also neglected to decide for Christ.

Yet Fred's conversion, encouraging as it was, cannot be half as thrilling as what might happen if Fred's church really wakes up. One reason Fred had delayed so long was his feeling that the church hardly mattered anyhow. In a way Fred was exactly right, because in most respects his church was asleep. With Fred's awakening perhaps the prayers of others will be answered and the congregation will revive.

Too many churches are sleeping. They hardly need the rest because of overwork in the Lord's business. Some are simply at ease in Zion, caught in the clutches of a complacency that nothing can shake. They are satisfied with what they have and such satisfaction is deadly. Perhaps they sleep because they lack vision. For years they have held "service as usual" and they have resisted to the death any proposal that might disturb them in their lethargy. Or perhaps there are still old controversies between families and groups, old wounds that are not allowed to heal, old fires that a few careless words cause to smoulder.

Yet churches do wake up. A new pastor may arrive on the scene, no more able or consecrated than his predecessor but somehow he jolts a few, startles others or kindly nudges many more into action. Or it may be that the new improvement in the church house cannot be put off any longer. Members begin to see the old run-down building, the carelessly kept sanctuary as visitors see it. They realize that while they kept their homes modern, they were thoughtless about their church. Evidently if it meant so little to them that they let it go, strangers probably thought their religion meant just as little. Then they begin to look at building plans—and they wake up, not only to building needs but to what their church could offer in the name of Jesus Christ.

> If they who have Plenty love their Fellow Creatures in that Love which is Divine, and in all their Proceedings have an equal Regard to the Good of Mankind universally, their Place in Society is a Place of Care, an Office requiring Attention, and the more we possess, the greater is our Trust, and with an Increase of Treasure, an Increase of Care becomes necessary.
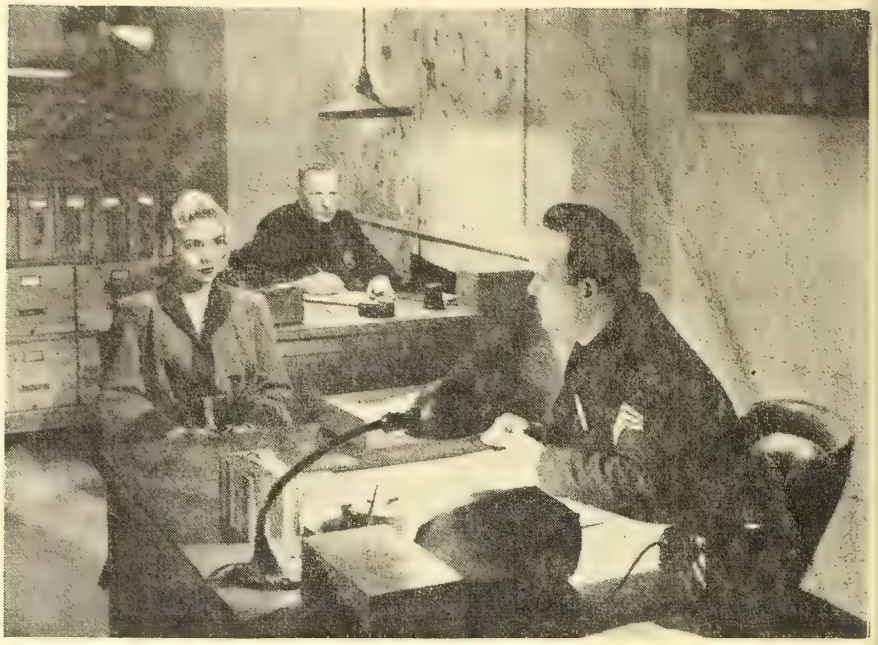
> —John Woolman, Journal.

Sometimes the awakening comes as the result of a conference where leaders are inspired. Or a prayer group of concerned members after praying and waiting for years see the Pentecost for which they yearned. The awakening may come because patient teachers worked year after year in the church school without much visible success until finally a new generation is won for Christ and the church is on the march.



Once the church awakes the Holy Spirit finds many avenues open. Families suddenly awaken to observe that they have lived for years amid families without Christ. At first they tell their pastor. Then they make friendly visits themselves. Then they begin to pray for their neighbors. Then they find an answer to their prayers by inviting their neighbors, even bringing them to church; often they go on to discover the joy of winning that family for Christ and sponsoring their initiation into the church fellowship.

Once the church awakens, opportunities multiply. Each new family knows five other families who ought to be in the church. The prospect list grows and the news gets around that here is a church that is active, friendly, where people are awake and working. Spiritual fervor, once the temperature rises enough to show, can be contagious.

Many churches are awakening from their sleep, but the great potential has still to be tapped. If there should be an atomic disaster in one of our major cities, many churches would awaken to realize how much they have dozed away from God. If our religious freedom were suddenly denied us, we would immediately discover how precious, but how unused, that freedom is. But must we have a world catastrophe or the threat of tyranny to awaken the church? Are there not warnings and alarms enough in every day's news as well as promises enough in the good news of the gospel to stir up the church that is sleeping?—K.M.

A CHANCE TO START OVER

Beata Mueller

Some form of sponsorship for released and paroled prisoners would help to reduce the number of those who turn again to crime when they are not given a chance to earn a decent living

THE young housewife angrily stared at the teen-aged boy standing at the door of her apartment. "You may be my brother," she said, "but you're a jailbird now. And if you ever come here again I'll call the police." She slammed the door shut. . .

The personnel interviewer turned from the application form on her desk to the gray-haired man who stood waiting.

"I'm sorry," she said, "but we don't hire ex-convicts. It's company policy. I hope you understand." He nodded. He had heard the answer so many times before. . . .

The dean shook his head regretfully at the dark-eyed woman seated in his office.

"I wish we could hire you," he said, "but state law forbids us to employ a teacher with a prison record." . . .

There are thousands like them —the teen-ager, the gray-haired clerk, the dark-eyed teacher— released each year from prisons and reformatories and trying, against steep odds to rebuild their lives.

When they were caught and convicted, they may have made headlines that shocked those who knew them. But after they have paid for their offenses, few remember them, and fewer still are ready to help them on their hard road back. And without help, says one church specialist in prison problems, their struggle may end in waste and desperation.

The Rev. Paul Tilden, associate director of the Department of Pastoral Services of the National Council of the Churches, is head of the council's special chaplaincy program for institutions. He has visited scores of prisons, interviewed hundreds of prison officials and inmates and given aid to ex-prisoners who turned to him for guidance. He knows by experience how few resources are open to these men and women.

From his experience came the stories of the three who tried to find their way back alone. The names and some details have been altered here, to protect the individuals and those connected with them, but the stories are essentially true. All three found their road barred by loneliness, law and public prejudice.

Jack, in his late teens, was released from the reformatory where he had served three years after he stole an automobile and was caught at the end of one wild ride.

"If there had been anyone he could turn to after his sister shut the door, it might have turned out differently," Mr. Tilden commented.

But Jack was alone in a strange city. He rented a room in a cheap hotel and when his few dollars ran out, he pilfered a check from an apartment house mailbox and tried to cash it in a neighborhood store. The storekeeper, suspicious of the youngster, had him arrested, and this time Jack was convicted and sent to federal prison as an adult offender.

Gray-haired Philip Stewart, Mr. Tilden noted, most of all needed help in finding work. He had served three sentences for small burglaries and had been trained in prison as a clerk. When he was set free for the third time, with his new suit and ten dollars from the state, he was determined never to go back to prison. But ten dollars does not go far. It paid his bus fare to the nearest town, his week's room rent in advance, the price of a bag of apples he planned to live on till he found a job, and that was all. And no one would hire the ex-convict as a clerk. Finally one night broke and hungry, he tried to steal food from a grocery, and for his theft was sent back to prison for life as a fourth-time offender.

Miss Roberts, the dark-eyed teacher, had been convicted for falsifying her income tax return. The understanding she gained in prison might have made her a better teacher than before, Mr. Tilden believes—but she was forbidden by law to teach. The end of her losing battle came one morning when she was found in her rented room, hanged from a ceiling fixture, an overturned chair under her dangling feet.

With friendly help, Mr. Tilden emphasized, all three might have been useful and productive people. He is convinced that this kind of help would come from the churches, if church people understood the problem and the reasons for it. To back up his belief, he cites examples of ministers, laymen and women who have given friendly and understanding aid to released prisoners.

There are only a few of these church aid projects now, but soon, Mr. Tilden predicts, there will be many more. Through his department, church representatives have come together with national experts on prison and parole problems to develop a co-operative program in which they hope to enlist churches across the country.

Chairman of the new group is Mr. Robert Hannum, a Congregational minister's son who has been helping ex-prisoners for twenty-five years, for the last ten as director of the vocational placement bureau of the Osborne Association in New York City. From Mr. Hannum came an outline of the special committee's objectives: first, to stir the conscience of the nation's church men and women to realization of the difficulties of those trying to start new lives "outside"; and second, to map out practical ways in which church people can give the aid that is needed.

"Our work is just beginning," Mr. Hannum declares, "but we hope in time our efforts will initiate a nation-wide movement that will help thousands on their road back to normal and useful lives."

Formerly titled the Committee on the Churches and the Problems of Parolees, Probationers and Ex-Offenders, the group is concerned not only with those freed from prison, but with those released on parole, those eligible for parole if jobs are available for them outside, and those convicted and placed on probation instead of being sent to prison.

What kind of help can the churches give them? For one thing, Mr. Tilden points out, many churches could undertake the kind of practical project that is now carried out by an isolated few.

As an example, he cited from his records the story of the minister and the church member who helped Mike Sedgewick, a lawyer who had served time in prison for a fraudulent stock market deal. Sedgewick's wife permitted his release on parole only on condition that he never again come near her or their children. The community where he had once been liked and successful was closed to him.

"But Sedgewick was one of the fortunate few," Mr. Tilden commented, "his chaplain in prison knew an understanding pastor in another town and wrote to him on the ex-lawyer's behalf." When Sedgewick arrived on the train, the pastor met him at the station and took him to a room that had been made ready for him. A businessman in the congregation had found a job that would use at least some of the former lawyer's skills. And no one in the community but the minister and his aide from the congregation knew of Sedgewick's record, Mr. Tilden emphasizes—he was free to start with a clean slate.

Another form of direct assistance that the committee will consider, Mr. Tilden said, is a plan used in England, Holland, Denmark and some other countries, where citizen volunteers under professional supervision act as sponsors for specially selected problems. Usually under this plan, he explained, the parole officer has a list of ministers, laymen and other volunteers to whom he can refer individual parolees who seem most likely to succeed in starting over again.

The volunteer works under supervision, most often that of the parole officer, and offers the parolee in his care a spirit of friendly acceptance, a receptive ear and occasionally some practical aid or guidance, until the parolee has gotten well-started on his new life in the community.

"In very few cases," Mr. Tilden added, "have parolees sponsored in this manner gotten into trouble again."

Further, he noted, in countries where this system is used, the number of "repeaters" — those sent to prison for second and third offenses—is less than five in a hundred. The U.S. on the other hand, has the highest percentage of "repeaters" on record, he pointed out—more than half of those who once serve a prison term are convicted and sent to prison again for other offenses.

A program of volunteer sponsorship adapted to American use, he believes, might change one of the factors that contributes to the U.S. "repeater" problem— the overburdened parole system where even efficient parole officers can rarely see their charges for more than a few minutes once a month.

Directed toward legislative reform, rather than immediate aid projects, Mr. Tilden added, is the possibility the committee is considering of enrolling local councils of churches and of church women in a study of prison and parole practices and laws in their own states.

These practices and laws vary widely from state to state, he explained. At one extreme, California is the only state where a judge may pass sentence but may not determine how long a time the sentence will last. A special authority decides when the prisoner has been rehabilitated and is ready to leave the institution. At the other extreme is New York, whose list of laws restricting the ex-offender Mr. Tilden described as "formidable and occasionally fantastic." An ex-offender who was a doctor, lawyer, dentist, nurse or veterinarian cannot practice his profession again; he —or she—cannot teach or enter civil service, even for such a humble job as sweeping the subway platforms. One regulation, he noted, provides that the ex-prisoner cannot take out a license to go fishing.

Whatever understanding, sympathy or programs of study and direct action the committee initiates among U.S. church people will have value, Mr. Tilden declared. "For Miss Roberts, the schoolteacher, and for Stewart, the gray-haired clerk, our help comes too late," he said. "But for teen-ager, and for thousands of others, there is still a chance, if we will give it to them."

parental understanding, for constructive discipline and sympathetic guidance. The white carnation or the red rose worn on the lapel on Mother's Day is a beautiful symbol of the appreciation of the fragrance of the life whose beauty, integrity, love, sympathetic understanding and helpful guidance are thus recalled and honored.

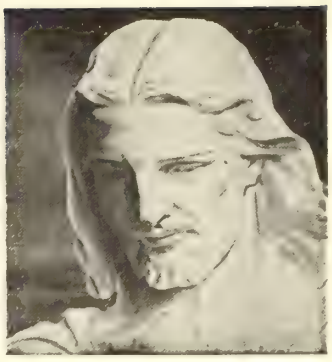
In the later years of beloved parents more than carnations and roses may be required to express the devotion which children owe their parents and which is needed to comfort them and to make life a little easier as they come to the end of the earthly journey. Parents can do much to avoid heartache and downright tragedy in aging years if they are alert to the deepest needs of their growing children, demonstrating their understanding through the uncertain years of adolescence and undergirding them in the adventurous years of the beginnings of their own homes.

MATIN AND ORISON

GEORGE E. MILLER, M.D.

This peaceful dell calls me today;
But duty says, "You cannot stay
Save for a quiet hour to pray."

There sing for me the feathered choirs
Where, mid the pine trees' gothic spires
The sun breaks through like altar fires.



Oh, here I find my spirit freed
From any man-made cumbrous creed,
And faith enough for human need.

Perhaps, when day its course has run,
I may return with work well done
To breathe a twilight orison.

IN THE world-wide program and witness of the Church of the Brethren we "Seek First His Kingdom." At best we glimpse that kingdom enough to know it should be pursued with a mounting urgency of dedication, faith and sacrifice. We know it is the answer regarding all the kingdoms of this world. In local congregations and homes, on college campuses and in camps, in country, town and city, in our land and every man's land, Christ's kingdom needs to be revealed!

The Brotherhood program is our co-operative enterprise encouraging and aiding the church in her movement toward Christ's kingdom. The interpretative stories on the following pages are representative of Brotherhood work and are not a complete report of the total program. It is hoped that as you read these accounts you will envision the scope and purposes of the entire witness of the church, recognizing that it extends from every individual and congregation to many peoples and lands of the earth.

This witness of the Brotherhood has developed across the years. It represents the accumulation of a heritage forged into an ongoing program to serve Christ and his kingdom's purposes in this day. But this is far from the end of the story; rather, this is still only the early beginning of a great witness needed as far into the future as we can discern. The program must be conservative enough to rest solidly on the basic convictions of a faith no age alters; yet it must be sufficiently agile to be prophetically relevant to every new situation. His kingdom must come!

Let us and our church pursue with primary devotion the tasks given us by the King! Only then can he say to us, "Come . . . inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the earth."

A MIRACLE continues to grow...

WHERE a year ago cotton grew, now children play. An occasional farmhouse or barn stands strangely out of place amidst a sea of new pastel colored houses. New schools, new supermarkets, new industry, new people—yes, everything is new. But underneath this newness is a yearning for something substantial and secure that cannot be uprooted. Here is a task for a church that earnestly works "toward his kingdom."

In this setting is the Lynnhaven community at the edge of Phoenix, Arizona, in the Valley of the Sun. With its green fields of vegetables, groves of golden oranges and stately palms, the county encompassing Lynnhaven is the fastest growing in the nation. Houses built by the acre or square mile are occupied by families from all over the country, needing to develop new ties of friendship and worship.

In the Lynnhaven community of 6,000 to 8,000 persons is a Church of the Brethren now under construction. The idea for a Sunday school and eventually a church in this new area was conceived by the two Brethren churches in Arizona, Phoenix and Glendale. A missionary association was formed by the Harold Wagners, the Walter Coffmans and the Frank Durands from these two congregations. While looking for facilities to establish a Sunday school, the association found a subdivider happy to give a strategic two and a half acre corner site for a church.

In a matter of days a modest dream had exploded into a full-scale church, with the missionary alliance receiving a comity approval from the Arizona council of Churches. The entire district of Southern California and Arizona accepted this as a project, and plans were advanced rapidly under the leadership of J. W. Lear, Galen Ogden, Stanley Keller, H. L. Ruthrauff and E. K. Beekley, the district church extension commitee.

Aid was sought from the Brotherhood and granted in the form of a $15,000 gift and a $10,000 loan. The district promotion committee came forward with a plan to raise $20,000 over a two-year period for home missions. The progress was termed "the miracle of Lynnhaven," for all this developed within two months!

I. V. Funderburgh, the Pacific Coast regional secretary, and H. L. Ruthrauff, district ministry director, secured Wayne L. Miller, a Bethany senior, to direct the work. Beginning last September, he and his family moved into a rented parsonage next to the church property. A survey of the community was started immediately and still continues. Two hundred families have indicated interest in a community church.

Last November the church school started, each class convening in a different home. Attendance the first three Sundays was 32, 42 and 62. To serve youth needs in the community in a way consistent with the Christian faith, a Boy Scout troop was formed. Now thirty adults and ninety children and youth are active on committees, as teachers, in church school or Scouts.

On Easter the present unit under construction was complete enough to hold the first services. The immediate needs of space for church school, worship and fellowship are met by this $35,-000 structure. Full plans have been drawn by the Brotherhood building counselor, Forrest Groff.

What of the future of Lynnhaven? "The future is bright for the church here," Pastor Miller states. "People of many different backgrounds and traditions join hands to make this church their church. People who have been uprooted soon discover that likenesses are much greater than differences and that God is not a denominational Being. Difference brings richness, and tolerance of others' views brings growth. The future is bright because God is working and his kingdom will come to Lynnhaven through the church."

Lynnhaven is one of nine home mission developments which the Brotherhood is aiding financially this year.

Currently the Ministry and Home Mission Commission holds requests for gift grants to a dozen churches. More funds need to become available before the Brotherhood can grant this help. During the current year $67,000 has been allocated by the Brotherhood as special and gift grants to churches. An additional $112,-500 has been loaned by the General Brotherhood Board for church building purposes. Also, support of pastors in eighty-seven home mission churches and of fieldmen in nine districts totals $91,000 annually.

Building a new church becomes a major though often revitalizing task for a well-established congregation. Reliance on older sister churches and on district and Brotherhood help for building and pastoral support is generally imperative for new or rapidly expanding churches.

Nearly 600 persons contributing to the building of churches through the $10 Club support home missions directly. Since 1952 these Ten Dollar Club members have helped finance the erection of the following churches: Valley View, Whittier, California; Albany, Oregon; Lansing, Michigan; Front Royal, Virginia; Monroeville, Pennsylvania; Beacon Heights, Ft. Wayne, Indiana; Battle Creek, Michigan; York Center, Illinois; Drexel Hill, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; and Norfolk, Virginia. Lynnhaven will be the fourteenth church receiving Ten Dollar Club support.

Dotting the Brotherhood are Home Mission churches, of which Lynnhaven is the fourteenth to receive assistance through the Ten Dollar Club

A challenge to missions

Nourishing Souls and Bodies

Hunger encumbers a majority of lives in today's world. Missionaries seek to expand agriculture developments and enhance levels of subsistence

Most of the population of the world is rural. But in spite of the proximity of so many peoples to the source of food supplies, an estimated two out of three persons in the world are hungry almost all the time.

The hungriest may be naked children with swollen stomachs or half-clothed adults with emaciated forms. But the average individual in this mass poverty has a subsistence with only one half to two thirds of the recognized minimum caloric need in his diet, a life span of perhaps thirty years and an illiteracy that thwarts initiative and change.

This situation is no new development. For centuries the forebears of these millions of half-starved persons struggled for bare sufficiency. Today the world's peasants are observing that a better life prevails in more favored areas and are clamoring for help.

Since the inception of missions Christians have deplored the low economic standards in India, China, South America, Africa and other places. Medical and educational programs have been launched hand in hand with our own evangelistic endeavors abroad. Since most of the Church of the Brethren missions have been largely with rural people, agricultural betterment has been of much concern.

Illustrating this, Leland S. Brubaker, secretary of the Foreign Mission Commission and a former missionary in China, asserts, "The Christian message has to do with daily living as well as with Sunday practices. Since its beginning our mission program has incorporated this belief. Thirty years ago in China we introduced new varieties of fruit trees, wheat, poultry and domesticated animals as well as proper methods for cultivation and care. Our agriculture work on all mission fields is growing."

Further expansion of agriculture work in the mission program is indicated in Nigeria, where the Rural Development Committee, composed of Dallas Oswalt, Monroe Good and Harold Royer, has stated the following policy:

"The life of the African is rooted in and guided by his religion. Should this most certainly not be true of the Christian African? His life is not departmentalized but is centered around the basic necessities of life, i.e., food, protection and procreation with the spiritual woven throughout. In the area of food our emphasis should be increased or our gospel tends to become abstract religious dogma. The acceptance of the Christian faith depends, more than we realize, on the condition of the body which is dependent almost entirely upon proper foods and hygiene for good health."

Let's take a field-by-field survey of what Brethren are doing, and hope to do, agriculturally through missions.

A submissive creature, this burro has a major role to play in helping to feed hungry people. Above, water is carried in barrels in Ecuador. In Nigeria, where donkeys and oxen have long been used for hauling, peasants are now beginning to use them to pull

India

The annual income in India as late as 1953 averaged less than $60 per person. Two out of three persons in India are engaged in agriculture, the highest proportion in any civilized country. The chief problems of the peasants are ill-health, fear, ignorance and poverty. Few farmers with India's extremely low incomes, religious and social stratification and unscrupulous usury (sometimes charging seventy-five per cent interest on farm loans), could rise above the status quo economically. In the Christian community of Khergam the Brethren mission helped form a co-operative, in operation for a score of years. A revolving fund permitted large numbers of poor Christians to buy land at fair interest rates. Recently there is some decentralization of the village communities where farmers have lived heretofore.

At a training school at Anklesvar in Gujarat young men experiment with new agricultural techniques while receiving a broad education. The junior youth grow a co-operative garden. Older classes allow each boy to plant and care for an individual garden, from which profits are used in his schooling. Breeding and care of poultry, growing of cotton, general gardening and irrigation are taught and spread throughout the country as boys assume jobs of their own. The approach at this rural life training center conducted by Brethren and four other denominations is to help the Indian solve the food shortage through his own efforts and planning.

One of India's best trained agriculturists, Shantilal Bhagat, is a member of the Church of the Brethren. He studied in America under the sponsorship of our church and Rural Missions Cooperating Committee of the Division of Foreign Missions of the National Council of Churches. His time is spent in extension work in villages throughout India.

Experimentation itself is not readily undertaken by India farmers, who with one crop failure know their families may starve. Demonstrations of successful crops and methods are convincing, however, when performed by mission or government agencies.

Nigeria

South of the Sahara the rural people in Africa compose ninety-six per cent of the population. Unlike India and Ecuador, good land has not been depleted generally. While virgin land is harder to find than a few years ago, still when soil becomes unproductive, the native farmers move on to new sites. The land is owned by the government, but in order to claim farming rights a village of peasants must cultivate the acreage.

Four trained agriculturists are among our mission personnel in Nigeria. Bob McKay and Dallas Oswalt are located at the Waka Training Center where prospective schoolteachers maintain gardens and experiment with new methods of farming, ideas they will share in villages where they go to teach.

Harold Royer, who is located at Shafa, is coordinating the rural program in Africa and is involved primarily in extension service. Royer has conducted considerable research in soy beans.

An agriculture class works in a garden at the school, an old hacienda, in Ecuador

Participants in a short rural-training course in India examine a crop of corn

Jerry Neher, a new agriculture missionary, is establishing a demonstration project in the Chibuk area, where land has been wasted most extravagantly.

The real capitalist in Nigeria is the man with a team of oxen and a steel plow. In areas of Brethren mission work, animals have never been used to pull plows. Land was usually tilled by a convoy of twenty to thirty workers rhythmically hoeing across a plot while listening to a drum or singing.

To retain natural resources the Brethren agriculturists wish to implement practices of conservation and fertilization. Orchards are being encouraged. Continued experimentation with dwarf guinea corn, improved peanut varieties, rice, potatoes, cotton and forage crops, and with milk goats, poultry, cattle, swine, sheep and rabbits, is planned.

Buildings made of mud bricks improve the living conditions for the Nigerians

Ecuador

"It will likely be some time before the government in Ecuador does anything to help the peasant," Brubaker commented. "There seems to be a passion on the part of the Indians to get land back from the Spanish who conquered them centuries ago."

Through the school gardening program at our mission in Ecuador a number of new vegetables have been introduced into the diet of the Indians. An experimental farm supervised by Rolland Flory is seeking to demonstrate the reclamation of worn-out land. The farm has been successful in growing corn, beans and alfalfa. Goats and other domesticated animals have been shipped to Ecuador through Heifer Project, Inc. Many of the men near the Brethren mission travel to the city to work, leaving the farming to wives and children.

Tradition-bound minds amidst primitive conditions and limited resources are reluctant to give up old ways even where dissatisfaction prevails and betterment seems apparent. Acceptance of gradual change from within, rather than an imposition of drastic change from without, must be the approach of agriculturists among underdeveloped peoples. Such a method has been known for sometime by missionaries and is being encompassed in the United Nations FAO and in the Point Four programs. Even a shovel or steel plow or mowing scythe may be the major innovation needed to facilitate a more adequate food supply. American know-how is needed more than material investments, but with it must go understanding of culture, and patience, love and faith. This missionaries can give.

An observation of Tagore on India's situation may be universally relevant: "Village life is a whole life. The development of scientific technique will not build a new village India. The spirit must be lifted and formed." The church and her missions have been aware, but are being alerted further, that "when I was hungry you gave me to eat" is a simple truth yet to be fulfilled.

The Power of a Redemptive Fellowship

Melvin S. Ritchey

Which man is the alcoholic? He is among volunteer workers helping remodel the Milledgeville church, Illinois

The Milledgeville church has a placement committee to help young couples and alcoholics. Temperance training was given this group by James Renz of the Brotherhood staff

Mr. Bihl in the story — shown with Carl Patterson, employer, at milking time. The alcoholic has been with the Pattersons for 15 months

Without patience and fellowship of the Edgar Imel family, Milledgeville, the rehabilitation of Mr. Al Cohol, seated at the center, would not have occurred

I DON'T help drunks," said Mr. Pharisee as he looked in the car window at Mr. Al Cohol. Al's car had just landed in the deep ditch as he tried to straighten out a curve. But a near-by Samaritan farmer brought his tractor and pulled Al's car out. With a word of thanks Al was on his way again.

Al mutters to himself as he drives down the highway: "That guy wouldn't help me. He'd probably preach me a sermon on the sins of drinking. Maybe I need it. But to have someone tell me how sinful it is would be like pouring more salt on popcorn already too salty. I don't need more salt. I need a cool drink—encouragement and confidence. Oh, I'm not worth anything any more!"

If we as a church represent Jesus reaching out to help people, then we have a big task helping alcoholics to understand themselves and to get back to a controlled life again. "The fields are white unto harvest, but the laborers are few." At Milledgeville we have found patience, love and understanding are most important. Pharisaic attitudes will kill other attempts made in love and helpfulness.

As a church we took deliberate training steps for the two alcoholics coming into our fellowship, since we did not have one already in our group. Through continued consultation with James Renz, Brotherhood temperance secretary, our church was waiting for Mr. Bihl.

He was to live and work with one of our dairy farmers at regular farm-hand pay. The family Mr. Bihl resides with is active in the church, and he soon began coming, too, making new friends. The Samaritans he lives with have three children, to whom he is like a grandfather. His experience and sincerity in dairying have helped raise the butterfat average of the 35 Holstein cows from 310 to 373 pounds in a year.

Mr. Al Cohol works for another family in our church. Through literature on alcoholism they had in their home and the knowledge of what the church was doing for Mr. Bihl, Al became interested and began to share his problem. There have been many struggles in the past year. Several slips, borrowed money, a wrecked car and some days in jail gave the opportunity to think. Understanding and patience by the family and church have taught love and how to accept it. Today Al has been without a drink for five months.

The church can be the Good Samaritan to "the least of these, my brethren" by helping restore self-control and self-respect. It can help bind up wounds of alcoholism and allow God to become the controlling power of life. For did not Jesus say, "Go and do likewise"?

HELPS FOR CHRISTIAN WORKERS

ALL phases of the church's program need workers. For the most part, churches must find and develop these workers in their own community. Assistance in this training is provided in the following ways by the Christian Education Commission of the General Brotherhood Board.

Fellowship of Growth in Service

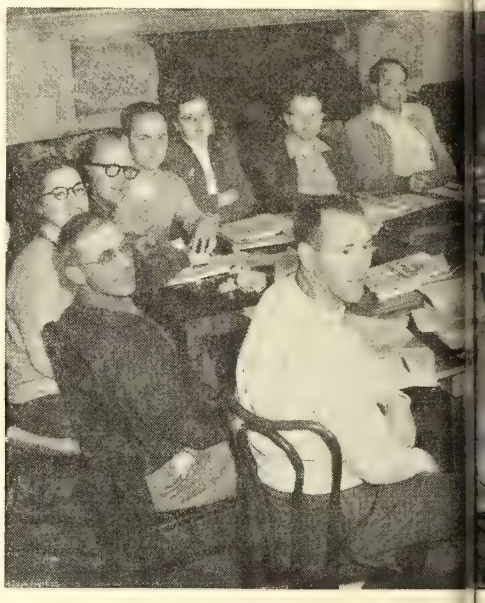
The Fellowship of Growth in Service is an organization among children's workers. Presently 1,469 persons are members, having acquired credit for at least four growth experiences each year. One experience must be in the area of study, gained by reading two books from an approved list or by reading an acceptable magazine throughout the year. Other experiences may be acquired by participation in regular local church workers' conferences, in a community leadership training class, in a district or regional training school or in an interdenominational convention. At Annual Conference each year, recognition is given to those workers who have completed membership requirements.

Recreational Leadership

Wholesome recreation is a decided asset for balanced living. Recreation needs to be creative and active. A National Recreation Committee gives consideration to this work. A number of recreation labs over the Brotherhood have helped many attain a Christian philosophy of recreation and skills in leading various activities.

Camp Leaders

Camping has come to be one of the most potent activities for Christian education available to the church. To prepare qualified leaders, the Christian Education Commission sponsors at regular intervals national camp planners conferences. Camping Director Paul M. Weaver announces such a conference will be held at Camp Alexander Mack, in Indiana, June 7-10. Regional training conferences for camp leaders are encouraged and a number attend the national camp held under the auspices of the National Council of Churches.



Church Music Institute

Worship is one of the most important activities of life. The Music and Worship Committee, with representatives from all regions of the Brotherhood, has sponsored a series of music and worship conferences. In this series Bethany Biblical Seminary will conduct a church music institute, June 9-13. Advance registrations are necessary, and a flat fee of $20 will cover all expenses at the institute. Paul Halladay, professor of music at Manchester College, is to be the dean of the institute, which will accommodate forty people. Requests for registration should be addressed to Bethany Biblical Seminary, 3435 Van Buren St., Chicago 24, Illinois.

Drama Workshop

Drama has been a powerful means of presenting Christian truth and has been used by the church through the ages. This year for the first time a drama workshop of our own is planned, to convene at Bethany Biblical Seminary August 15-19. Sunday-school teachers, youth and youth workers, pastors, ministers of music and directors of Christian education are among those who may be interested. It is thought that expenses at the workshop, including a $10 registration fee, may not exceed $25. Registrations are desired before July 1

Leadership Training Courses

The Standard leadership curriculum is provided on a co-operative basis by the National Council of Churches. The Church of the Brethren emphasizes First Series Courses, requiring a total of ten hours in class and outside preparation, and Second Series Courses which require a total of twenty hours. The entire program is set fourth in a Leadership Education Handbook. The Christian Education Commission accredits schools and classes and certifies teachers for our denominational schools, and the National Council of Churches, for interdenominational schools. Last year, over 900 Brethren received Course Recognition Cards. The First West Virginia and Northeastern Ohio districts have outstanding records in maintaining these schools each year.

College Leadership Certificates

Through the co-operation of the six Brethren colleges the Christian Education Commission offers a college level leadership training program leading to a certificate. It is based upon seventeen semester hours of work, six semester hours of elective courses, and one year's practical experience in church school work, while in college, under the supervision of capable leadership. Many students can qualify for the certificate by selecting a few electives in their program. To date, Elizabethtown College has led in promoting this program with her students.

Workers' Conferences

The monthly workers' conference is an effective instrument for the local church to use in giving in-service training to its workers. To give some guidance for such conferences, the Brethren Bible Study Monthly has a regular feature article entitled For the Workers' Conference, giving plans for holding successful meetings. Complete plans for monthly workers' conferences, prepared by Dessie Miller Myers, are available. Superintendents may wish to refer to the book, Planning Church School Workers' Conferences, by Benson.

The Brethren Bible Study Monthly

The Brethren Bible Study Monthly is a professional magazine for the church school superintendent and teacher. In addition to helpful suggestions for interpreting and teaching the International Uniform Lesson, each issue contains articles of general interest for all teachers.

Hoosiers Explore the Gospel of Giving

BRETHREN in Hoosierland are probing their responsibilities as Christian stewards. Skill shops in stewardship —the first in the Brotherhood— were held earlier this year in churches in the Northern and Middle Indiana districts and have created keen interest in the Christian's use of time, talent and money.

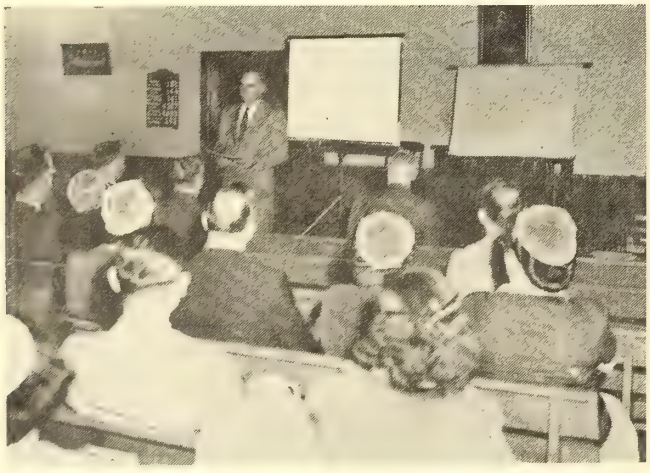
Conducting the skill shops for three-week periods in each district was Harl L. Russell, stewardship and Brotherhood Fund secretary of the General Brotherhood Board. A presentation to area church workers was made weekly in six churches in Northern Indiana and in four churches in Middle Indiana during each three-week series.

Topics considered in the skill shops included the Scriptural basis of stewardship, motivation for giving, building and interpretation of a church budget and evaluation of resources. Assistance in church finance and guidance for every-member enlistment canvasses was given.

Samuel A. Harley, executive secretary of the Middle Indiana district, asserted, "The skill shops in our district engendered much enthusiasm for our district-wide stewardship lessons. These will replace the regular Sunday school lessons for five consecutive Sundays. A new interest resulted also in developing local, unified church budgets and in instituting every-member canvasses."

Churches serving as hosts to the skill shops in the Northern district were Middlebury, Cedar Creek, New Salem, Yellow Creek, Plymouth and Second South Bend, and in the Middle district, Salamonie, North Manchester, Wabash and Flora. Consultation with finance or building committees was included in Russell's schedule.

In an evaluation of the sessions by sixty laymen and pastors, Northern Indiana officials learned ninety per cent of them rated the skill shops as "excellent" or "good." As a follow-up the persons participating in the evaluation proposed for the district a year-round stewardship education program.



Skill shops within the next year have been slated in the North Atlantic district and in the Eastern, Southern and Middle districts of Pennsylvania.

Transplanting the Uprooted

Moyne Landis

"SHE is my flesh and blood—I must give my life to save her." The thought pierced the confused mind of Mary Skarupa, emotionally frayed and physically exhausted by war.

After a moment of hesitation she retrieved her baby, dashed from her arms by an explosion. Only moments before the two had fled from a train as it was bombed. For days and months they had traveled on foot, amidst contending battles, seeking refuge in barns and in partially destroyed buildings along the trek to Poland from their home in southern Russia.

Implanted solemnly in the minds of Mary and her husband, Michael, are recollections of such experiences as these. Today in their new home in Dayton, Ohio, the Skarupas and their three children look back upon fonder memories, realized largely by a Church of the Brethren congregation.

The Oakland church near Gettysburg in southern Ohio took steps to assure placement through the Refugee Resettlement office, New Windsor, Maryland, for a displaced family. One member donated an acre of land, several farmers donated trees for lumber, the men's work built a small house, and the ladies provided furnishings. Christmas 1949 was most meaningful to the Oakland congregation as they welcomed the Skarupa family—including Mike, Mary and two children.

At first Mike worked on the farms of church members. But his interest was in radio and television work particularly, for in Russia he had been trained as an electrician. The church people provided him with repair work.

Mike's radio and television work was soon extended to the neighboring city of Dayton, and to save the expense of transportation, the family moved there. A Brethren extended him credit to purchase a house, where he now has his own television business.

Their love for their new home, their new land, their new friends are in evidence in their countenances and expressions. And this radiance as a contrast to their long and drawn countenances in December 1949 is a spiritual experience for all who learn to know the Skarupa family.

Return to a Land of Poverty

A BRETHREN farm couple from Eastern Pennsylvania have undertaken the supervision of free distribution of U.S. surplus commodities in Greece for Church World Service.

The couple—Mr. and Mrs. Peter B. Kruger of the Spring Creek Church of the Brethren—have arrived at their Athens headquarters where more than eight million pounds of surplus foods are to be distributed this year. The Krugers themselves were homeless victims of the first World War.

In 1923 the Krugers and infant son arived in this country as refugees from early Communist Russia. With funds exhausted, they settled at Annville, Pennsylvania, on a borrowed $120, most of which they used as down payment on farm land. And here they lived and prospered. Another son was born, they increased their farm acreage, they became citizens, they raised their family under what to them was a blessed new freedom.

Mrs. Helena Kruger examines chicks arriving in Vienna from U.S. in 1947

Because of their own experiences the Krugers' empathy directed them to help World War II refugees. Helena, the mother, assisted in European Brethren Service work from 1946 to 1949. Her ability to speak several languages aided work in refugee camps. Following an assignment in Poland, she helped establish the Brethren Service program in Austria. She was especially instrumental in equipping the Thalham refugee hospital for tuberculosis patients.

Upon return to the States, Mrs. Kruger has served as a field worker for the refugee resettlement office of New Windsor, Maryland, making personal contacts to help newly placed refugees adjust.

In their fifties, the Krugers turned their Annville farm over to the oldest son.

The program which they will administer in Greece is a major material project of Church World Service and the World Council of Churches.

"Our work here is really a service to the poor people of Greece," the Krugers wrote from Athens recently. "Our American government is demonstrating the idea of humanity by practicing Christianity in sharing the surplus food of our rich country with our poor fellowman across the ocean."

Mrs. Kruger, right, who with her husband was a World War I refugee, confers on World War II refugee problems with a Protestant worker in Austria

Largely through the efforts of Mrs. Kruger mattresses and beds and other equipment were secured for this ward at the Thalham tuberculosis hospital following World War II

Apostles in a Trailer

Edward K. Ziegler

THE Leathermans are apostles in a trailer. Let me introduce them to you: Irvin and Orpha Leatherman, Brotherhood evangelists. After many years of happy and successful pastoral service, Brother Irvin accepted the call to travel among the churches, holding a new kind of evangelistic meetings. Now for eleven years they have been in this fascinating but demanding work. For the past seven years they have lived in a house trailer and have served churches from Pennsylvania to the Golden Gate, from Minnesota to Miami Beach.

A new kind of evangelistic meetings? Yes. Instead of preaching only, the Leathermans offer four kinds of evangelistic campaigns:

1. A two-week preaching revival meeting.

2. Pastoral visitation—revival: Visiting done by the pastor and the evangelist for a week, and preaching the second week.

3. Fellowship evangelism followed by a week of preaching.

4. Visitation evangelism followed by a week of preaching.

Whatever plan is followed, Sister Leatherman gives separate service for the children of ages four to eleven each evening.

The department of evangelism of the General Brotherhood Board provides general supervision of their work, a trailer and a guarantee of a modest salary. Since many of the churches they serve are smaller churches, the board invests some funds each year in this creative program.

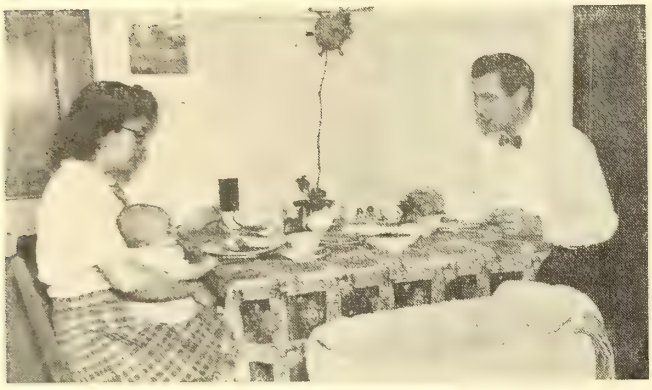
What have they accomplished in eleven years? Results cannot all be measured in statistics. But consider these: 1016 accessions to the church, 519 recommitments to Christ, 197 evangelistic campaigns, 2,881 sermons preached.

The real results are immeasurable. Here is a young pastor struggling with difficult problems. He finds a wise and able counslor, who also stirs his church with new compassion. Here is a church leaning to undisciplined emotionalism. Now they are steady, warmhearted and united reaching out to the community.

Brother Irvin says, "It is our desire not to push people to a hurried decision in an emotional way, but to lay a foundation and create an atmosphere which will lead to their decision in a normal and wholesome way."

Our church needs more "trailer apostles."

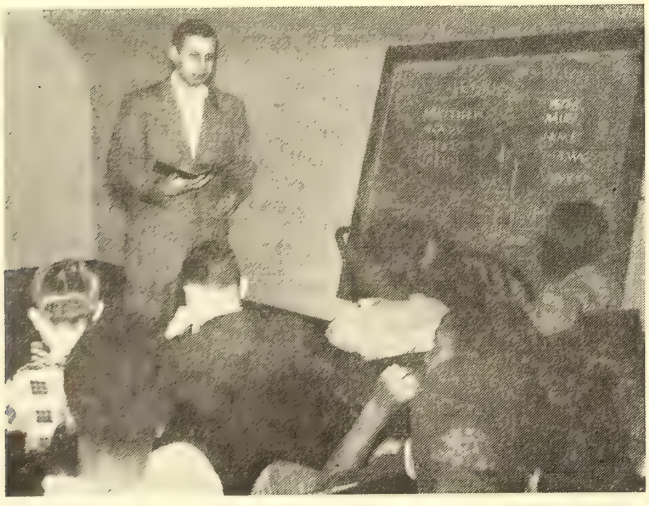
Working with committees in the church, the Leathermans help leaders plan for follow-up evangelism. Here they meet with a committee at Boones Mill, Virginia. The Brotherhood helps support their work



Nearly two hundred churches across the nation have been destination points for the Leathermans. Their preaching services are but a part of the work they do to stimulate more vigorous life in congregations

Why I Am Entering the Ministry

David C. Wilson



A hurried meal for Dave Wilson is often necessary in a schedule that involves full-time studies at Bethany Seminary and twenty hours' work weekly in a grocery. His wife, a nurse, works part-time at Bethany Hospital. Son Dean receives attention, too

Dave did not consider entering the ministry until after a year in B.V.S. Here Dr. Floyd Mallott of the Seminary counsels with Dave

I NEVER thought much about becoming a preacher when I was growing up. I found, though, that jobs and higher education did not afford real satisfaction until I started training to serve God as a minister. Experiences gained in volunteer service helped point this direction.

I was born into a fine rural Christian family, my father being a schoolteacher. Upon graduation from high school, I vowed I never wanted to see a classroom again. By the end of the summer, however, I decided to enroll in Elizabethtown College.

In the middle of my college work and still uncertain as to what my vocation would be, I entered B.V.S. for a year. For the first time, during my assignment in Puerto Rico, I was confronted with the needs of humanity, and I saw how they were being met. I felt a call to help people through the ministry.

After I graduated at Elizabethtown, my wife and I held a summer pastorate at Newville, Pa. The challenge to serve and love and present the message of Christ seemed to be God's will for my life, working full time through the church.

Upon completion of my next two years at Bethany Seminary I want to assume work in a rural or small town church. There is a big job to be done in these areas, where many churches have been neglected. With God's help and the education and inspiration I am receiving at Bethany I hope to make religion vital in a country community.

Paul in his fourth chapter to Ephesians explains that our gifts from God vary and that they are to be used to the greatest benefit possible. Thus we choose different vocations. To be satisfied, however, I think one should strive to determine to find the place God has intended for him.

Each student at Bethany spends part of his week in practical service that may include pastoral duties in Chicago area churches, work at missions and visitation. Here Dave teaches a group of delinquent boys at the Chicago Parental School

Legislators Hear Brethren Views

Ralph E. Smeltzer
Director of Social Education, Brethren Service

WHETHER Brethren should be involved in political action is now largely an academic question. For the past three months they have been intensely involved in expressing to national leaders their peace views.

During this time the church has been directly engaged in an intensive anticonscription campaign in the nation's capital. Official representatives have testified before House committees, a temporary office has been established in Washington, carloads of Brethren have visited congressmen and hundreds of letters have been written from churches regarding the draft legislation.

John Eberly, of the New Windsor Brethren Service Center staff, was appointed in January as Washington representative. Two B.V.S. girls, Roma Jo Mickey and Betty Crouse, were assigned to assist in the office work. Co-operating in the establishment of this project was the Friends Committee on National Legislation.

H. R. 3005, a bill to extend the draft four more years, was testified against by the writer on Feb. 2. DeWitt L. Miller, pastor of the Hagerstown Church of the Brethren, Maryland, testified on Feb. 28 to the Brooks subcommittee of the House Armed Service Comittee regarding H. R. 2967. This bill, known as the National Reserve Plan, embodies universal military training and compulsory reserve service.

Most of the 225 participants of the Brethren youth seminar held in February and of the Brethren adult seminar in March conferred with legislators concerning conscription. At least sixty Brethren from Indiana, Virginia, Maryland, West Virginia and Ohio have made special trips to visit congressmen on this issue.

Weekly memoranda have been sent since January to Brethren pastors and church school superintendents from the social education department of Brethren Service. These anticonscription reports reveal progress of bills before Congress and suggest means of expressing effective opposition to UMT bills and of working for a more constructive American foreign policy.

Letter writing has been a continuous and growing aspect of the campaign. As I am preparing this article church members are encouraged to write especially to members of the House of Representatives, where legislation is now pending. In several rural Iowa homes the writer noted correspondence with congressmen on this issue.

Eberly writes from Washington, "Congressmen are taking the short view that military conscription and the National Reserve Plan are a necessary deterrent to communism. They still see this military preparation as a necessary emergency. We need to emphasize the long view, showing the spiritual, moral and political effects on the life of the nation. Sooner or later the conflicting 'congressional short views' and the 'military long views' will meet and we hope that it won't be too late for the congressmen to act."

In his testimony before the Brooks subcommittee, Miller stressed, "We humbly believe our nation's chance for survival depends upon the consistency with which we adhere to Christian principles and the thoroughness with which Christian values permeate our national life."

Since February 300 Brethren attending political seminars and making special trips have visited congressmen concerning proposed conscription legislation. Above, a group with Senator Paul H. Douglas of Illinois

Brethren "Town Meeting"

June 14-19 Brethren will trek from across the Brotherhood to Grand Rapids for the 169th recorded Annual Conference. Awaiting the 10,000 who may attend is a unique program combining official church business with inspiration

AN EXPECTED 10,000 members will be in attendance at the Annual Conference of the Church of the Brethren, to convene in Grand Rapids, Mich., June 14-19. Few other religious meetings involving official church business attract so large a gathering.

Other denominational leaders find it a most remarkable fact that so large an attendance is an annual occurrence. Wherever held in any one of the five regions of the Brotherhood, there is the same enthusiasm among Brethren to turn out en masse for Annual Meeting.

Official business, however, is only one of many features attracting members to the Conference from across the Brotherhood.

"Seek First His Kingdom," current theme of the Brotherhood, will be also the theme of Annual Conference. Sessions will be held at the Civic Auditorium in downtown Grand Rapids.

Opening the six-day program Tuesday evening, June 14, will be an address by Dr. Joseph H. Jackson, president of the National Baptist Convention, U.S.A., and pastor of the Olivet Baptist church in Chicago. Keynoting the Conference on Wednesday evening will be the address of Moderator A. Stauffer Curry, presently executive secretary of the National Service Board for Religious Objectors, Washington, D. C.

Dr. Harold A. Bosley, pastor of the First Methodist church, Evanston, Ill., will be featured as the Thursday evening speaker. The McPherson College Players will present the play, Deep Are the Roots, on Friday night.

Saturday evening Robert E. Richards, pastor of the Long Beach, Calif., church, will deliver an address. Leland S. Brubaker, executive secretary of the Foreign Mission Commission of the General Brotherhood Board, Elgin, Illinois will speak at the church convocation session Sunday evening. His message will be followed with the consecration service for missionaries, closing the 1955 conference.

Morning sessions, too, will feature lectures, to be given by church college educators in a Bible Hour series. These speakers will be: Robert A. Byerly, Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania; R. H. Miller, North Manchester, Indiana; Burton Metzler, McPherson, Kansas; and M. R. Wolfe, Bridgewater, Virginia. All will speak on topics pertaining to the Bible Hour theme entitled The Kingdom We Seek.

Harry K. Zeller, Jr., pastor of the McPherson church, Kansas, will speak at morning worship on Sunday, June 19. On Sunday afternoon the oratorio, The Messiah, will be presented.

Sectional meetings, luncheons, postbreakfast conferences and picnics will be scheduled throughout the week in 23 areas of church life.

Guest speakers for some of the sectional meetings include Dr. T. K. Thompson, executive director of the Joint Department of Stewardship and Benevolence of the National Council of Churches; I. W. Moomaw, executive secretary of Agricultural Missions, Inc.; and Dr. Glenn L. Clayton, president of Ashland College.

Youth and junior high will meet separately for evening recreation and morning programs at the Pantlind Hotel, adjacent to the auditorium.

The program of inspiration and education creates an atmosphere conducive for the determination of church policy and the enactment of program plans for the fiscal year ahead. Matters of business will be discussed in open sessions on Thursday, Friday and Saturday mornings and afternoons.

Processing the business will be a Standing Committee of eighty members, representing the state and overseas districts of the church, and over 800 delegates from local churches. Together the two bodies compose the voting power of Annual Conference.

In the Yearly Meeting which Brethren commenced in 1742, a face-to-face town meeting approach was used for over a century. Since 1880, however, the practice of representative democracy through delegated authority has been pursued. The impending sessions will mark the 169th recorded Annual Meeting.

Officers of the Conference this year, besides Moderator Curry, are Paul M. Robinson, president of Bethany Biblical Seminary, Chicago, assistant moderator; Chalmer Faw, professor at Bethany, secretary; and Robert Greiner, treasurer of the General Brotherhood Board, treasurer.

Kurtis F. Naylor, pastor of the Prince of Peace church, Denver, Colorado, is chairman of the program committee. Galen T. Lehman, executive secretary of the Central Region, North Manchester, Indiana, is chairman of the arrangements committee. General Conference director is Olden D. Mitchell, pastor of the First church in Detroit.

Civic Auditorium in Grand Rapids offers spacious accommodations for conventions. Annual Conference met here five years ago

Accepting the gavel from William M. Beahm, left, 1954 Conference moderator, is A. Stauffer Curry, of Washington, D. C., who will be moderator of Annual Conference this year

Conference time is vacation time for thousands of Brethren families, who will travel to Grand Rapids from all parts of the Brotherhood

Amendment to the Pension Plan

In the judgment of the Pension Board it is desirable and necessary that the Ministerial and Missionary Pension Plan of the Church of the Brethren be further amended. As provided in the Pension Plan, therefore, the Pension Board has adopted the following amendment, ad interim, and presents the amendment to Annual Conference of 1955 for ratification:

Article III. Member Contributions

Each member shall contribute an amount equivalent to four per cent of his salary during his active membership, except as hereinafter provided.

Any member of the Pension Plan shall be permitted, following his election of social security coverage under the 1954 amendments to the Federal Old Age and Survivors' Insurance Act, as amended from time to time, to make contributions to the pension plan equivalent to 3%, 2%, but not less than 1% of his salary basis, as determined under Article I, paragraph (j), provided the employing organization pays its regular contribution of 6%.

All such contributions shall be credited to the individual account of the member and be increased by the interest credits thereon.

The above and foregoing resolution is approved and adopted as a resolution of the Pension Board (Trustees of the Ministerial and Missionary Pension Plan of the Church of the Brethren) this 10th day of November, 1954.

Music at Annual Conference, 1955

Clyde W. Holsinger

FOR SOME TIME there have been plans in the making to present Handel's The Messiah for the Sunday afternoon program on June 19, at the Grand Rapids Annual Conference.

We would like to present as many choruses as we can do and do well. Fortunately, a number of the colleges have presented this work in past years and numerous church choirs or district choruses have been working toward performances which have occurred either recently or will take place in the near future. These performances should give a fine background for the presentation of this great work in June.

There are many people who have aided in the performance of The Messiah in past years. They are urged to dust off their copies and bring them to Grand Rapids. Others who wish to participate should acquire copies and attend rehearsals.

The Conference Choir will be augmented by the Manchester College a cappella choir for this large work. The a cappella choir participated as an integral part of the college choral society which presented The Messiah on Dec. 12, 1954. With several rehearsals leading up to the final presentation as well as with the fine background which many people already have, there is every reason to believe that the first rendition of The Messiah at Annual Conference should be a significant one.

The choruses which will probably be used are the following (the pages indicated are in the edition published by G. Schirmer): No. 4—And the Glory of the Lord, p. 16; No. 9—O Thou That Tellest Good Tidings, p. 54; No. 12—For Unto Us a Child Is Born, p. 66; No. 17—Glory to God, p. 82; No. 22—Behold the Lamb of God, p. 104; No. 24—Surely He Hath Borne Our Griefs, p. 113; No. 26—All We Like Sheep Have Gone Astray, p. 122; No. 33—Lift Up Your Heads, p. 144; No. 44—Hallelujah, p. 193; No. 46—Since by Man Came Death, p. 210; No. 53—Worthy Is the Lamb That Was Slain, p. 237. All of these numbers should move at about the tempo suggested by the metronome markings at the beginning of the number.

In addition to The Messiah the Conference choir will be presenting anthems throughout the week. A list of these is not available at the moment but will be made available to the Gospel Messenger for publication at some future date.

Plans are now in progress to have two rehearsals a day beginning on Tuesday afternoon, June 14. The afternoon rehearsals are planned for 4:00 p.m. and the evening rehearsals will take place after the evening sessions. As many people as possible who wish to sing in the Conference choir should plan to attend rehearsals. The choir program is an ambitious one and will need the diligent co-operation of all who wish to be a part of the whole program.

Obituaries

Balm, George, son of Thomas and Margaret Balm, was born near Denmark, Iowa, March 19, 1859, and died June 18, 1954. On March 29, 1889, he was married to Lizzie Winder Brown, who died in 1925. Church News

Northern California

Raisin—Eighteen have been added to our church by baptism since our last report. On the evening of Feb. 12, Clarence and Lucile Heckman talked about and showed pictures of the mission work in Nigeria. At the February meeting of the men's brotherhood, Russell Johnson, West Coast director of the Heifer Project for the Northern California Council of Churches, gave an illustrated lecture. The women's work organization gave a shower for a family whose home was destroyed by fire. The proceeds from a food sale which was sponsored by the homebuilders was used to buy silverware for the church kitchen. These women are also presenting Bibles to several of the young people who recently joined the church. Mr. Tierce is conducting a weekly singing class in the church. Midweek prayer meetings are held in the homes of the members. Robert Sink, our pastor, presided at the March council meeting, when plans were made for a vacation Bible school. Our Sunday school is growing in number.—Mrs. Sadie Scott, Raisin City, Calif.

Colorado

Haxtun—The CBYF had charge of an evening service and presented the mission playlet entitled Christ the Answer. Open House was held at the parsonage on Christmas Day. The women's work group has been quilting and sewing for relief. At their meetings the junior league has been making scrapbooks for hospitals. The Haxtun ministerial association sponsored the Billy Graham picture, London Crusade, at the high school. In Jaunary the W.C.T.U. held a meeting in our church. The Sunday evening Bible class is studying the Book of Psalms. Our pastor and his wife, Brother and Sister Ralph W. Anderson, were recently advanced to the eldership. The Fairfield Evangelical Covenant church was host to a singspiration service one Sunday evening. The women's work sponsored a chili supper followed by the mission film, No Place for Timba. Our Brotherhood Fund Offering in January went to the support of Brother and Sister Harold Royer on the Africa mission field. Lenten services were held at the local Methodist church with visiting pastors bringing the messages.—Mrs. August Bjorklun, Sr., Haxtun, Colo.

Southern Iowa

Fairview—The film, Second Chance, was used at our father and son banquet. Our church and three neighboring churches sponsored the showing of Billy Graham's film, London Crusade. Our annual birthday super was held in memory of Orlando Ogden, who was a long-time elder of our church. Jay Johnson spoke at our watch night service which was held in co-operation with four neighboring churches in the Methodist church. Bro. Lyle Albright of Pampa, Texas, conducted our evangelistic services in December. Two persons were received into our church. On the morning of Feb. 6, Bro. Brower of the Monroe County church gave the message and in the evening the first part of the film, Our Bible, How It Came to Us, was shown. The remaining parts of the film were used following Sunday evenings. In the evening of Feb. 25 the women of our church and the four neighboring churches sponsored a World Day of Prayer at our church. On Feb. 26 the evangelistic film, Mr. Texas, featuring Billy Graham, was shown at the Udell gymnasium. We have set up a building fund, not that we have any intention of a building program in the near future, but on the basis of the present growth rate. An organ fund has been set up as an exploratory fund. Our church was among the rural churches in Iowa to be presented with the Certificate of Merit through the Extension Service of Iowa State College.—Mrs. Robert L. Morland, Unionville, Iowa.

Northeastern Kansas

Kansas City, First Central—Ten persons have been received by letter into our church. Bro. Brightbill conducted evangelistic meetings through hymn singing during the week of Thanksgiving. On Dec. 4 we had our love feast and communion service and two persons were also baptized into our fellowship. Our Christmas cantata was presented on Dec. 19, and our white gift offering service was held on Dec. 22. Services have been conducted each Sunday evening in January on missions. One evening Miss Sara Shisler was our guest speaker. Our church is growing in attendance. Realizing the need for expansion, on Jan. 3 we had the Wells Organization canvass, which brought in $35,000 in pledges for our building expansion program.—Mrs. Nadine Davis, Kansas City, Kansas.

Southeastern Kansas

Fredonia—Installation services were held for our new pastor and his wife, Carlos and Elsie Ziegler, by John Mohler and Rev. Arthur Hardy, local Methodist minister. A number of our people attended the district meeting at the Verdigris church. Regular monthly class meetings are being held by the young married class and the youth group. A young mother's club has been meeting every two weeks to discuss problems related to children and the home. A nursery has been opened for use during the church hour. A book-of-the-month club has grown out of the ladies' aid society; they are reading one New Testament book a month. The pastor follows through with a sermon on each book. The pastor and his family held open house following the Christmas play. A candle-lighting and watch night service were some of the other seasonal activities. At a recent council it was decided to finish paying our church debt. We had a church fellowship dinner and saw the film, A Second Chance. We received one new member into our fellowship by letter. A girl's sextet has recently been organized. Three of our Sunday-school teachers attended the community leadership training school.—Elsie Ziegler, Fredonia, Kansas.

Southwestern Kansas

Monitor—Our school of missions during February included the study books on India, Pakistan and Ceylon. Rev. and Mrs. Arnold Dietzol, recently returned Mennonite missionaries from work among the lepers, brought us a morning service. Brother and Sister Paul Sargent took us on their pictorial tour of Brethren Service work in Europe. We concluded with a rice and curry fellowship supper and the film, Valley of the Sun. The women's work group has been collecting grease, tying comforters, making children's pajamas and other clothing for relief. During the past year many improvements have been added to our church, new tables and chairs, new table tops in kitchen, Sunday school supply cabinets in the social room and redecorating inside and outside. Plans are progressing to bring a displaced family who will make their home in the parsonage. Eight persons were baptized and five received by letter into our church.—Mrs. James Berkebile, McPherson, Kansas.

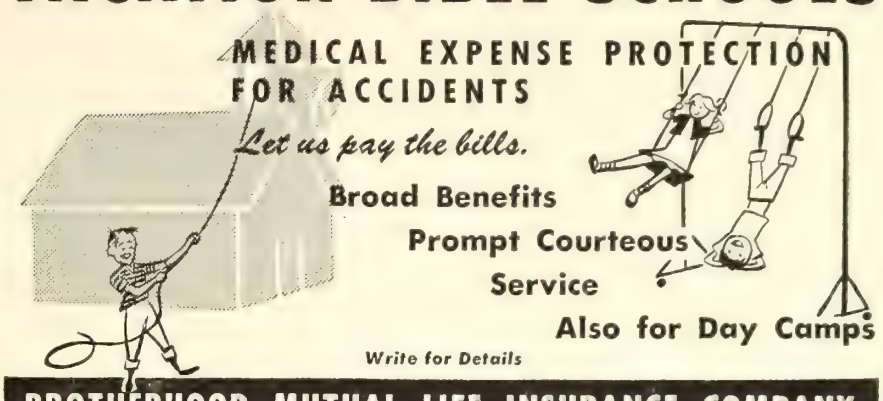
Northern Illinois and Wisconsin

Dixon—In December our church presented a program at the Mt. Morris Brethren Home. The Dickey class set up a Christmas scene on the church lawn and also presented the pageant, Christ—the Answer. Our pastor, Don Snider and his family, held open house at the parsonage on Saturday and Sunday over the New Year's week end. Beginning the first of January and lasting until Easter a state crusade was launched for increased church attendance. Our school of missions was held in January, featuring guest speakers and films, preceded by fellowship meals. Paul Macy, secretary of the Fellowship of Reconciliation in the midwest area, conducted an evening meeting on peace and understanding in a war-torn world. He also gave the Sunday morning message. An amplifying system has been added to our church. On Race Relations Sunday our church was invited to the union services at the Second Baptist church. Ten from our Sunday-school department joined in the interdenominational training school of Dixon. Our annual birthday banquet was held in February. The St. Luke's Episcopal church was host to the Dixon interdenominational World Day of Prayer meeting. Our pastor has been sharing with us his films and former experiences while with Brethren Service in Germany.—Mrs. Dwight Butterbaugh, Dixon, Ill.

Middle Indiana

Hickory Grove—We participated with the rural churches of Jay County in union services at the various churches during the Week of Prayer. We have had the sides of our church covered with asphalt shingles. Our women's work group has refinished the basement. Our last council meeting was held with Elder Frank Mulligan in charge. It was voted to have a day of visitation in the church community. Plans were discussed concerning our vacation Bible school which will be held the first part of June. The young people are planning a parents' banquet for the first part of June. The women's work group has completed the work project for the year. Some of the ladies attended the spring rally on March 24. We are planning a series of meetings, closing with a communion service.—Mrs. Edna Hudson, Portland, Ind.

Northern Indiana



Florence—At Christmas our church sent gifts to church families in Kentucky. Our Christmas program, The Meaning of Christmas, was presented by the children and young people. The young people went caroling which was followed by a fellowship meeting at the pastor's home. During most of the winter months the young people and adults have met together for their mission study and fellowship as several young people are away to school. Two members have been received by letter. The ladies' aid is making a number of new small dresses besides its regular relief work. The CBYF carried the Brotherhood program for fifteen minutes. The men's work gave a contribution for the new Beacon Heights church at Ft. Wayne.—Martha A. Rummel, Constantine, Mich.

Turkey Creek—Bro. Orvin Kilmer and his wife began their pastoral work in our church the first of September. Bro. Claude Wolfe of North Manchester preached for us on our harvest meeting day, and in the afternoon he told of his work with the church in Ecuador, South America. Our evangelistic services were conducted by Herbert Fisher, assisted by Roy Metzler, song leader. Six members were added to the church by letter. The children of the Sunday school presented a Christmas program one Sunday morning, and in the evening the young people presented a play. Rest rooms have been installed in the church by the men. A new furnace has also been installed. We are decorating and furnishing a kitchen in the church basement. The women's work groups are meeting three times a month this winter to sew for relief. They are also preparing medical kits for relief.—Mrs. Leroy Fisher, Milford, Ind.

Northwestern Ohio

Black Swamp—In the absence of our pastor, Bro. Jay Hornish of Popular Ridge brought our Sunday morning message. We held a special council meeting to hear Bro. Forrest Groff; then at the recent council our congregation voted to retain Bro. Groff as architect for our extensive remodeling program. We are now in the midst of a fund-raising program. The twelve new members who were recently baptized meet for training at the parsonage on Saturday mornings. The women have been sewing for relief, tying comforters and collecting clothes and shoes. Our pastor attended the Ohio pastor's convention. In February the men's work sponsored a special sweetheart party. The young people had charge of our Sunday-school and church services during Youth Week. Erma Simmons attended the youth seminar at Washington, D. C., and visited the UN in New York. On Sunday evenings we have had the films, Village of the Poor, Faith of Our Families, They Also Serve, The Boy and His Bible and Bill's Decision. Four of our Bible school teachers and our pastor attended the training period at North Manchester, Ind. At a recent council Sister Inez Carlisle was elected as our delegate to Annual Conference at Grand Rapids. At the women's work meeting in the evening, Mrs. Orville Noffsinger of Defiance was guest speaker and the Toledo church women were our guests.—Mrs. David Kaser, Perrysburg, Ohio.

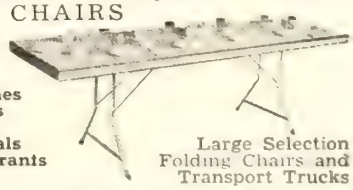
Fostoria—Since our last report Bernard King of Ashland, Ohio, held a series of evangelistic services with three new members being added to our membership. At Christmas time a family night service was held at the church with the primary department giving a program. World Community Day was observed in our church and the women from the other churches also brought their relief bundles to be sent to New Windsor. The district CBYF met at the church for a conference on Feb. 27, and Myron Clark, a Negro singer of Bellefontaine, Ohio, gave an evening service of song. The women meet once each month for a business and social meeting; they are busy mending and packing clothing for relief and making comforters for relief. The church was saddened by the untimely death of Lowell T. Newhouse on Feb. 18.—Lena Hall, Fostoria, Ohio.

Southern Ohio

Brookville—Six new members have been received into our fellowship by letter. At our March council with our elder, Bro. John Good, presiding, we passed the resolution to have a permanent evangelism committee in accordance with a recommendation from the district board. A public address system will be installed in the church. A few of our young people attended the youth conference at New Carlisle. On Feb 20 our CBYF had a special program, a court scene entitled Peace on Trial. Our morning worship service on Feb 20 was conducted by our junior high group. During our school of missions we used the film, Village of the Poor, and books were reviewed by our local readers. Mr. Hammond, superintendent of Brookville schools, was guest speaker at our father and son banquet on Feb. 22. World Day of Prayer was observed with services at the local Methodist church. Guest speakers have been Raymond Peters; Martha Coy, Methodist missionary to India; and Don Kinsel, formerly of our church and now a student at Manchester College.—Mrs. W. Russell Miller, Brookville, Ohio.

North Atlantic



Coventry—Our church was represented at the annual rally of our four historic peace churches at the Edom Mennonite church at Schwenksville. The church choir gave a musical interpretation of the Twenty-third Psalm at a Sunday morning service. Later the choir presented the same program at the Mingo church. Brother and Sister Charles Bieber showed pictures and told of their work at the mission in Nigeria. Previous to Christmas the senior choir presented the cantata, A Star in the Sky. The senior, treble and chapel choirs participated in the annual Christmas Eve candlelighting service. The cherub choir also sang at a Sunday morning worship service. The play, A White Christmas, by Dorothy Clarke Wilson, was presented by our young people. Special Christmas offerings were designated for missions. The children's department of our Sunday school filled stockings for Korean children. One of the adult women's Bible classes filled stockings for the children at the Neffsville children's home. Two new members have been baptized into our church fellowship. Betty Ann Clark from our church participated in the youth seminar at Washington, D. C. At a Sunday morning service she made a report of the meetings.—Mrs. Trostle P. Dick, Pottstown, Pa.

Eastern Pennsylvania

Lebanon—A junior high fellowship group was organized recently. Our pastor, Carl W. Zeigler, was elected to serve as a member on the Standing Committee for Annual Conference. The women of our church attended the World Community Day Service. Our missionary society contributed to the leper fund. Christmas stockings were filled and given to members at the state sanitoriums. Esther Bucher reviewed the mission study book, Face to Face With India, at a regular monthly meeting of the missionary society. Our float which was entered in the Christmas Christian parade depicted the holy family with an angelic choir in the background. The young people sponsored a party for twenty-five children who received personal gifts at the party. We had several musical programs which were presented by the various choirs, also the pageant, A Star in the Sky. Our building fund is growing. The women ironed and mended one day at the Neffsville orphanage. The young people held a singing party one evening following the regular church service. A service was held at the county home by the young people. Recently groups from our church were in charge of programs at the Widows' Home. Our men's quartet sang at one of the meetings during the Week of Prayer services. During our mission study we used the films, Empty Shoes and Village of the Poor. At another service Mrs. Charles Hauser of Harrisburg was guest speaker. The men held their father and son fellowship with Rev. C. C. Hollingsworth of the Salem Evangelical United Brethren church as speaker.—Mrs. Ruth B. Reinhold, Lebanon, Pa.

Salunga—During our Sunday morning services guest speakers have been Brethren Daniel Hoopert, Richard Hackman, Robert Stehman and Donald Ruhl. The CBYF sponsored a program by the Chiques male quartet with Bro. Robert Faus giving a sermonette. One evening Bishop Samuel Wolgemuth of Waynesboro told of his experiences in traveling through the East and the Holy Lands. This program was sponsored by the women's work group. Bro. Roy Pfaltzgraff from the Africa mission field gave a message one Sunday morning and in the evening he showed slides of the work. Three Sunday nights in February we conducted a school of missions on India, and the church and the city. Several films aided in presenting the facts for our school. Galen C. Kilhefner of Elizabethtown was speaker at our organ dedication service. Bro. Nevin W. Fisher, professor of music at Elizabethtown College, conducted a music institute one Sunday. Our church has participated in community fellowship services at Thanksgiving, Christmas caroling, Week of Prayer and World Day of Prayer. A combined choir furnished special music at the closing night of the Week of Prayer, with Dr. Harry F. Baughman of the Lutheran Theological Seminary of Gettysburg as guest speaker. The men's work sponsored a program on temperance at which several films were shown.—Mrs. Paul R. Cope, Landisville, Pa.

Middle Pennsylvania

Burnham—Brethren Charles E. Weaver of Manheim, Pa., and Elmer Ebersole of Dunnings Creek were guest speakers for our home-coming and rally day services. Our pastor, Bro. J. Donald Plank, was ordained to the eldership at the district meeting. Our program for expansion began with the purchase of a parsonage including an acre of ground which is to be used as a site for a new church. Mr. Goodwin, formerly of the Wells' organization was with us and presented a plan for fund raising. In January Bro. Forrest Groff, church building counselor, met with us on our church building. A two-week evangelistic service was held in March by Bro. Ralph Ebersole of Reading, Pa. As a result of this meeting three persons were added to our church.—Mrs. Tolbert Filson, Lewistown, Pa.

Fairview—We observed interracial Sunday at our church with Rev. David Bradley of the Zion M. E. church of Bedford as guest speaker. Our evangelistic services were conducted by Bro. Charles Heltzel

New Fairview—At our last council meeting it was decided that we purchase new songbooks, Vesper Chimes, to be used with our Brethren Hymnals. In February Bro. A. C. Baugher held a Bible institute in our church. The men's class, taught by Bro. Harry Knaub, had charge of an evening program on the theme of mountain climbing. The men's work group is co-operating with the young people's group in their project to promote outdoor gatherings and evening vespers. The women's work group supplied the new pulpit scarf and is furnishing the church bulletin one Sunday each month. The women also made donations to the Brotherhood Fund and to the nurses' training school at Bethany. Twenty-five women from our church went to work in the processing of clothes at New Windsor on March 9. The women's work group also made a trip to the Brethren Home at Cross Keys, where the women served lunch for the guests. At our Yorkana church a new furnace was recently installed and a kitchen is being built in the church basement. The young people are helping with this project. The young people of the Yorkana church have sponsored the following speakers at the Sunday evening services: Bro. Melvin Jacobs of York; Bro. John D. Miller from New Fairview and Bro. Melvin Jacobs of East Berlin.—Charles R. Cleaver, York, Pa.

Eastern Maryland

Meadow Branch—Five new members have been added to our church by baptism since our last report. Bro. George A. Early was re-elected as elder for the coming year. One evening a group from our church processed clothing at the relief center at New Windsor. The men's work completed their Lord's Acre project with the proceeds being used for the parsonage fund. During the year our women have presented two programs at the Fahrney—Keedy Home. The young adult class raised a heifer for relief. Guest speakers have included Brother and Sister Galen Wolfe, who work with our mission in Ecuador, and also Brother and Sister Charles Bieber from our mission in Africa. The addition to our church building is progressing; Forrest Groff is building counselor. Pastor A. Joseph Caricofe conducted our Holy Week services with communion on April 7. Bro. J. First Virginia

Roanoke, First—During the month of January a school of missions was held each Sunday evening. Quarterly council meeting was held on Jan. 11. One of the goals in our Sunday school this year is perfect attendance of members. Bro. Edward K. Ziegler, director of evangelism, was guest speaker one Sunday evening. Six new members have been received by letter into our church. One evening the women's auxiliary and the men's work held mass meetings prior to church services and had charge of the church services at which the district Brethren male chorus gave a program. On Feb. 16 the annual family birthday party was sponsored by the women's auxiliary. Bro. Merlin Garber, pastor of the Central church, was guest speaker at the men's fellowship supper in February. Special Lenten services were held each week during the season with guest speakers for each service. Our pastor, Bro. S. Earl Mitchell, conducted a weekly church membership class for boys and girls. During the month of February our Sunday morning services were broadcast over the local radio station. A committee of the church is preparing plans for an addition to the church building.—Betty Jordan, Roanoke, Va.

A maid of Israel, the heroine of Tolbert R. Ingram's exciting Old Testament novel, uses these words to tell her master, Naaman the Syrian, that he can be healed of his leprosy.

This girl's words were the beginning of a much larger story, the story of how God worked to bring salvation to Israel.

NO TURNING BACK

OBVIOUSLY the picture is out of date. The horses were superseded many years ago by a tractor and the horse-drawn plow went with them. But the good rich earth remains—unless careless use of the soil has ruined it—and the kind of vision that puts a man behind the plow remains also.

Though the picture may be dated it seems so apt an illustration for a saying of Jesus that can never be dated. When some of his would-be followers began to make excuses, he told them, "No man who puts his hand to the plow and looks back is fit for the kingdom of God." To work in his kingdom requires a forward look and no turning back. Whether you follow two plodding horses or sit on a tractor the same warning applies. In either case God's plowman must take responsibility for moving ahead. Sometimes it is a lonely plow that he guides, sometimes the plowing is retarded by rocks, sometimes his field seems more of a wilderness than an earthly paradise, but always he keeps his hand to the plow, looking ahead. For those who would seek first God's kingdom there is no turning back.

Why the Righteous Suffer

Don Snider asks: Why the righteous suffer and how Jesus would answer (G. M., Mar. 19).

Since this idea has been expressed to me by people who have suffered or have seen loved ones suffer, I have had to find an answer, at least one acceptable to me.

My first reaction is—Jesus suffered and we have a share in his suffering. If we can overcome suffering as he did, then we can be helpful to others in affliction.

When Job suffered, he overcame by concluding, "Though he slay me, yet will I trust him."

When Abraham was asked to sacrifice Isaac he concluded: "though God try me, yet will I trust him."

When Paul asked that the thorn be removed from his flesh he finally accepted God's no, saying "My grace is sufficient unto thee."

And so we can add Beethoven, Edison, Steinmetz, Bartok, Keller, G. W. Carver, Whittier and many others.—Imre Domonkos, Oberlin, Ohio.

Get Rid of the War System

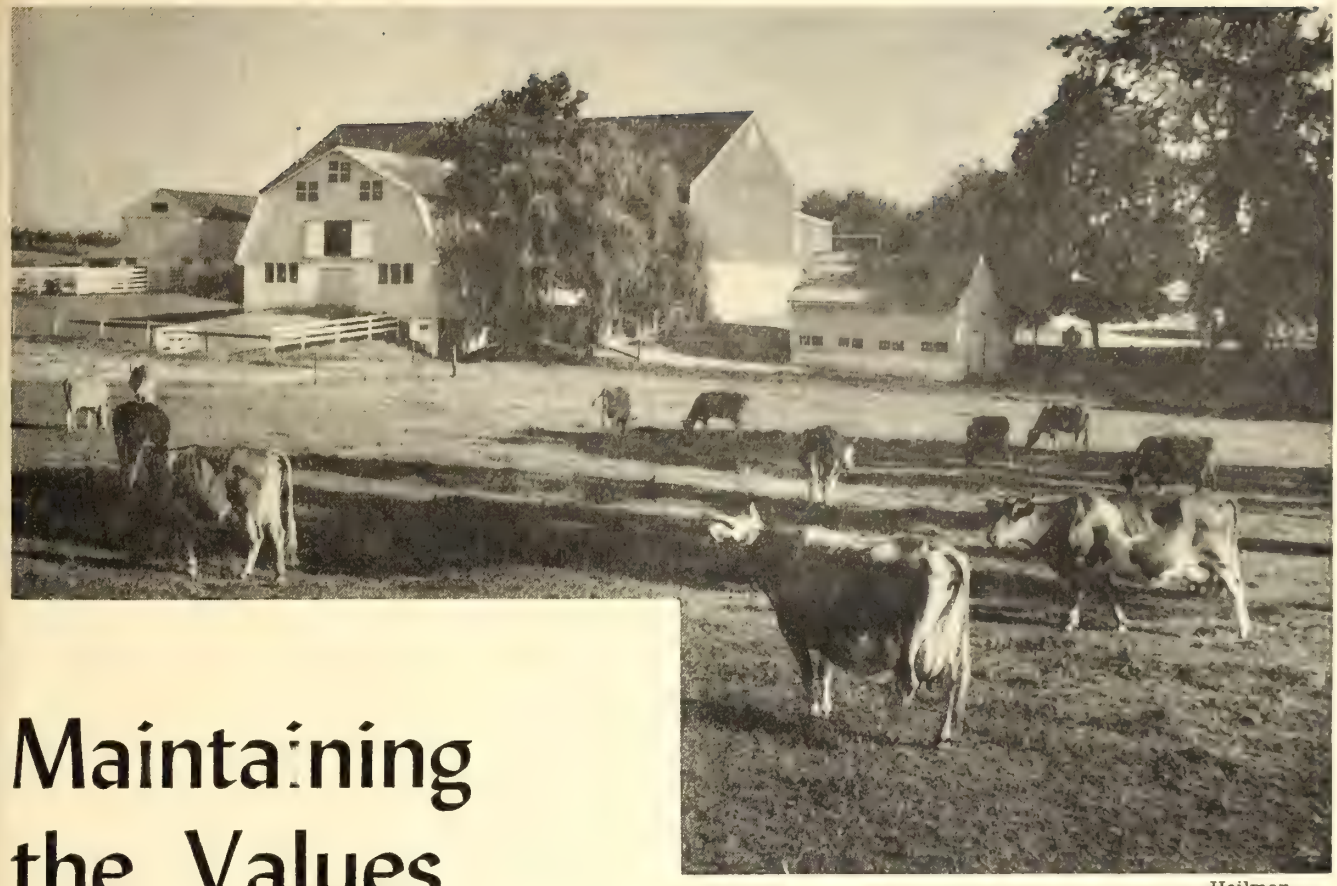
"Whither America" (Gospel Messenger, Feb. 26) and "Whither mankind" are now tied up in the same package. Indeed, they always have been tied up in the same package. But now the time has become ripe to do something about it.

A number of things have hastened the time to get ripe, or using the Biblical term, have hastened the coming of the "fullness of time." Fullness of time for what? one might ask. Fullness of time to get rid of the war system, now brought to the nth degree of destructiveness by the hydrogen bomb, could well be one answer.

The next question is, How are we to get rid of war? There are various means which must be used to accomplish this gigantic, but sublime, undertaking. No one single method will suffice. We must use every possible means to do as big a job as this. Then what are the various means to be used? To be specific, we must use identical methods which have been used to get rid of war between primitive tribes and clans and then, later, between cities, counties and states.

How many of us realize that Indian tribes tried to get rid of war between themselves, and partially succeeded, by uniting tribes into clans; and actually brought about peace within the clans. Pocahontas had a grand design for uniting all Indian clans, and thus substituting intertribal usages, or crude law, for war throughout the entire Indian empire.

Now the same method is being tried by the United Nations to outlaw war and thus usher in the reign of world peace. We have, in actual being, the machinery for making international law; for interpreting the international laws that are made; and for—do we dare say—enforcing international law.



Machinery for making, interpreting and enforcing the law represent the three integral parts of all governments which have outlawed war within themselves, and thus have ushered in the reign of peace, at least a major measure of peace. To be specific, this has been done within each state of the United States of America and between all the states of our nation; and within and between all the states of the British Empire; within and between all the states of the French empire; the western and eastern parts of the former German empire and all other nations.

This subject is too vast to be covered in a single letter. Others should follow and, in the meantime, every reader of the Gospel Messenger and, in fact, every one who will, should think, and think hard, pray and pray hard, for the ushering out of war and the ushering in of world peace.—George Fulk, Decatur, Ill.

People's Crusade

The March issue of Reader's Digest tells the story of Jimmy Yen and the People's Crusade to teach the downtrodden peoples of several countries to read and write a primary language of their own country.

Helping others help themselves, beginning with those at the bottom of the ladder, will appeal to many who do not believe the Bible but believe wholeheartedly in helping others. Churches of all denominations want to learn the languages of downtrodden peoples. The Jimmy Yen and People's Crusade sticker seals will appeal to many because poor people need to learn enough of their own language to communicate with teachers, doctors, trades people, missionaries and nurses.—Mrs. Kroon, Nordland, Wash.

Maintaining the Values of Rural Life

James H. Elrod

THOSE who are aware of the interests of the church as reflected in the queries of Annual Conference will recall the query on the employment of a full-time rural life secretary on the Brotherhood staff. This query indicates the concern of the Brethren for the values of rural life.

In my preparation for the discussion of the subject, certain questions inevitably arose. Some of them are: (1) Are there values inherent in rural life that cannot be had or maintained in any other society? (2) If there, are these unique values? Just what are they? (3) If there are these unique values and they can be maintained only in rural life, what will be the total impact of the present movement of our population to urban areas? Will this mean their total loss? (4) How can these significant values be maintained when only about seven per cent of the total population will be needed, in the near future, to produce the needed agricultural products for our society?

Since accepting this assignment I have contacted a number of ministers and others with regard to their ideas. I found some agreement and also differing points of view.

The following values were the ones most often mentioned: (1) In rural life you have the social and community setup whereby it is possible to maintain a closely knit sustaining fellowship. The rural community and church may be a great family fellowship. It was pointed out, on the other hand, that this may become a closed society or clique.

(2) The rural area furnishes the opportunity for family solidarity. This can be true especially where the family operates a family-sized farm. Here again some pointed out that with today's motorized farming there is as much round-the-clock working as is true in the city.

(3) Rural life furnishes the person an opportunity to work directly with God in the creative processes of nature. This is quite in contrast to those who face machines and brick walls in the modern factory.

(4) Absence of the noise and confusion of the city is another value. Something of the peace and quiet the average city person tries to find by driving to the

Religious News Service

Rural life gives one the opportunity to work directly with God in Nature's creative processes park or lake, the rural person enjoys most of the time.

(5) Several suggested that there was less demand on the time of the rural person in terms of organizations. Others feel that in the present enterprising community, about as much time is demanded of the rural person as those in the city.

What are the difficulties we face as we try to maintain these values of rural life? In giving consideration to the above questions and suggestions one must face reality. The reality is that under present circumstances we and other religious groups will be less and less rural, unless present trends in population movements are reversed. It is not enough to say we ought to keep our people in the rural areas. The job is not that simple. Fifty years ago the average man of the farm retired from active farming at the early age of forty-five to fifty-five. Usually he had some sons or sons-in-law who could take over the big muscle jobs of the farmer. This made it easy for the younger generation to get a foothold in the rural community. The time of retirement and that of beginning life's work came at about the same time. Only the surplus persons needed to move out to other farms or on to industry.

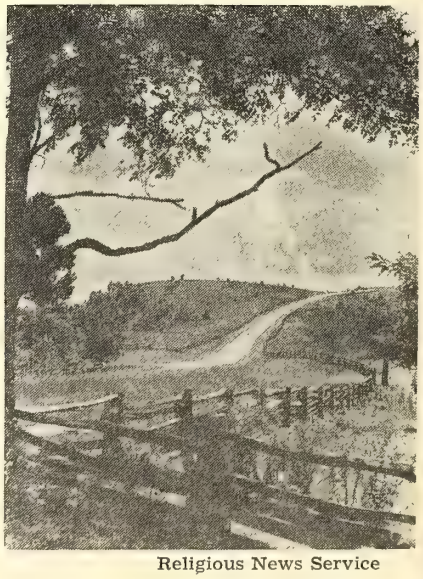
No such possibility exists in our day. Father does not retire at forty-five or fifty-five or sixty-five. At the age of seventy or even older, he gets on the tractor and not only farms all his father farmed but more. When father does decide to retire the sons and sons-in-law are all established in jobs in industry or are operating for themselves. The rural community is drained dry because father has not only occupied the land for ten, twenty or thirty years longer, but has farmed more land than his fathers.

The majority of young people who stay in the rural community today are those who early in life are taken into partnership by the older generation. Farming is now a skilled occupation. It is no longer a big muscle job.

Seldom do people seek to live in a rural area simply because there are greater values of life there. For both rural and urban people it is a matter of livelihood. Naturally, therefore, people go where they can make the easiest and the best living. So long as we continue to have the unbalance of earning capacity between the farm, especially the marginal farm, and the wages of industry rural living will suffer.

There are some who will insist that these values cannot be maintained apart from the rural life experience itself. If actual living in the rural area is essential to maintaining these values we ought to take a serious look at the problems we face.

The first problem, which seems to me to be insurmountable, is to get the people to choose rural life basically because it will culture these values. This means placing earnings, city conveniences, etc., secondary to these other values.



The second problem we face is distribution of land in order that those who choose the rural life may have opportunity to find a satisfactory livelihood. This is one of the most difficult problems facing the world today.

The third problem is the fact that for one to be able to make a livelihood in the rural area he must have considerable cash with which to purchase the necessary machinery for farm operations. All rural people know that even to rent land one must have adequate, modern machinery, and even then the big commercial farmer is favored in getting leases.

It is my firm conviction that the rural area furnishes the best place to nurture basic life values. On the other hand, I am just enough of a realist to feel that we of the Church of the Brethren, and other like groups, must begin seriously to re-evaluate the whole basic philosophy of our present day. We must face the fact that our people are going to the city. They are going to the city because of the conditions we have suggested and many you can suggest.

Can we maintain the values of rural life even though our people do move to the urban areas? If we are to undertake such a program it means certain definite planning. We will need, and that soon, adequate congregations of the Church of the

Fair Treatment for Indian Americans

ONE of our readers who was trying to make a case for segregation of the races insisted that God provided a proper place for each race and nation and did not expect them to mix. She admitted that American Negroes were not responsible for having left central Africa, but she thought their problems would not be solved until they returned.

In reply we asked her whether God intended that we palefaces should have usurped the land originally occupied by those of darker skin. Those who speak so proudly of their Americanism and look upon their darker brothers as intruders obviously forget that the original, one hundred-per-cent Americans were not white and did not speak English. If any group has a prior claim to be called American it is the American Indian.

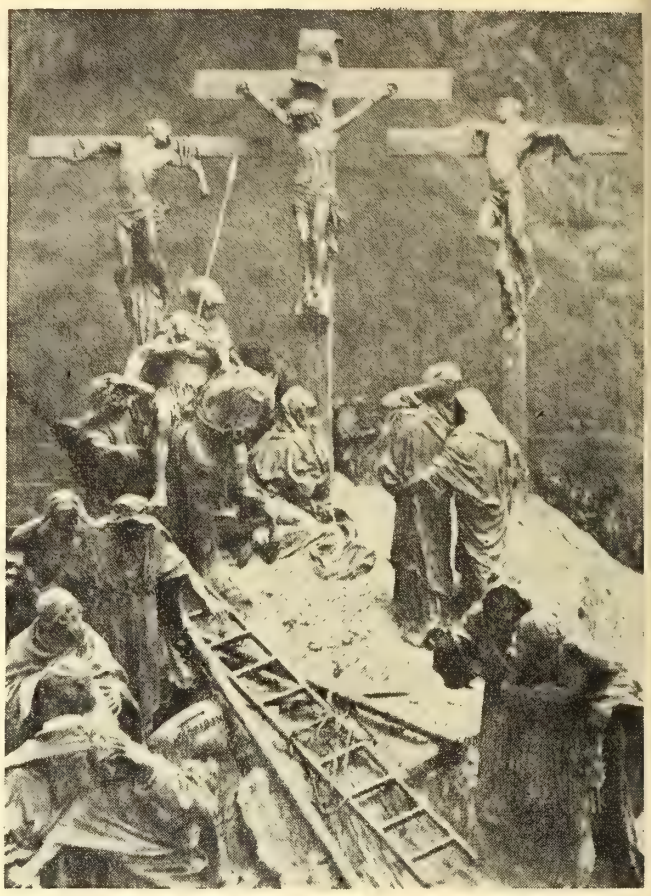
Because there are so many dark pages in the history of our nation's dealings with Indian Americans, we have a responsibility toward them that must be taken seriously. According to the Bureau of Indian Affairs there are now about 420,000 Indians in the United States. Those who live on reservations or other land units for which the federal government has responsibility are estimated to be more then 284,700. These Indians live in more than 200 tribes and on more than 300 reservations. Through the years the Indians have been considered as wards of the federal government which holds in trust more than fifty-six million acres of tribal lands and maintains a number of services for them.

About twenty-five years ago steps were taken to give the Indians more freedom, to improve their economic conditions and to provide better educational opportunities. But more recently the policy changed and many examples of discrimination and injustice toward Indians have been noted. Indians were not consulted concerning legislation that affected them. Their attitude changed from one of confidence to a feeling of distrust. Now they face the prospect of a new policy that will "as rapidly as possible" withdraw federal trust from Indian properties, end their status as wards of the United States, abolish tribal constitutions and corporations based on an earlier law and divide up tribal holdings into individual properties.

On the surface this legislation, adopted by the 83rd Congress in its first session, may seem to be a step forward. Its avowed purpose is to help Indians assume their full responsibilities as American citizens. But the whole situation is far more complex. The new legislation goes contrary to agreements made with the Indians in many treaties. They expect our government to live up to its treaty obligations. By terminating its provisions for Indians the government would be abandoning some of the most illiterate and poverty-stricken tribes. The pattern of community life in many tribes would be threatened. Their rights to valuable natural resources would be endangered. In many cases they would become subject to state governments that are unsympathetic. In brief, most Indians are not yet ready for the drastic changes this new legislation involves. It is not surprising that they are protesting its passage and that educational and church groups, deeply concerned for Indian Americans, have also spoken out against the present Indian policy.

Many of our churches will be studying Indian Americans in their schools of missions next year. But even before that time Christians should pay close attention to legislation which can easily run counter to the aims of our mission work. We recommend to our readers a series of articles by Harold E. Fey that appeared in the Christian Century for March 2, 9, 23 and 30. Obviously readers cannot follow the details of each of the 125 bills now before Congress that involve Indian affairs. But we can express our sincere concern that there be no one-sided abrogation of treaty rights, that there be careful planning with Indian leaders before federal trusteeship and services are ended, and that in all matters concerning Indians the government seek their consent and participation. —K. M.

A Radio Church?



WE HEARD of a man who, when he was asked about his church membership, said he belonged to a "radio church." Just how active his membership was and how loyally he supported his church we did not learn. He may have been attracted by the personality of a radio preacher. He may have preferred to sit in isolation by his radio rather than to sit in the company of fellow worshipers. Yet we doubt if his radio church, however well conducted and organized, can ever take the place of a church fellowship.

Radio and television offer unique opportunities to confront listeners with the message of the church. But they can never become substitutes for the actual assembling of ourselves together that contributes to corporate worship.—K. M.

The CHRIST of GOD

G. Wayne Glick

God's action in making Jesus who was crucified Lord and Christ has become for Christians the gospel and has given them purpose and motive and a faith that keeps them faithful

Three Lions

ON THE wall of my study is a painting which was given to me by a former student. It is a picture of the crucifixion. In the background, leaning on his spear, stands a Roman soldier, doing his duty. In the foreground stands a person with his finger pointed accusingly at the figure of the dying man on the cross. And the accuser is saying, according to the title of the picture, "Save thyself!"

Something like this really happened about nineteen hundred twenty-five years ago. This Jew who had come from Nazareth and had preached and taught and healed, had been arrested as dangerous to the official religion and to the Roman government. His career was very brief. When he was no more than thirty-three, he was dead. According to all the standards of the world, then and now, he was a miserable failure. He had written no great books, he had led no armies to triumph, he had founded no great school of thought, he had amassed no wealth. His name was not known beyond the borders of the tiny Roman province where his whole life had been spent.

Tiberias Caesar, sitting at Rome, probably never saw the report that stated that on such and such a day a Jewish peasant who claimed to be the Messiah had been crucified, along with a couple of thieves. Even his closest friends, a group of twelve men, had deserted him; one had actually led the arresting officers to the place where he had been praying; another had sworn viciously when he was accused by a little maid of being in his company; and all of them had fled in the hour of his arrest. A woman or two whom he had helped remained at the cross, watching helplessly as the cruelty of Roman crucifixion quickly drove the life from his body. Those who passed by, seeing only another egomaniac, mocked at his claims, saying, "You who would destroy the temple and restore it in three days, save yourself, come down from the cross"—surely that must be very easy for you! The religious leaders summed it up in a sarcastic formula: "He saved others; he cannot save himself."

The balance sheet of his life: a man despised and rejected; a man who knew grief; a man who died alone and forsaken, unable to escape the Roman punishment for revolutionaries; a form so forlorn in the hour of his death that even to think of it calls from us tears of pity.

Fifty days later, those who had been scattered by his crucifixion and others who had followed him, a hundred and twenty in all, are in Jerusalem. They have been praying and suddenly something comes over them and they begin to make ecstatic noises. Quickly a crowd gathers, and seeing the actions of this group, they express their amazement in several ways. Some are quite puzzled as to what this all means. Others find a mocking explanation: these people are drunk. Then the man who had sworn viciously in front of a little maid stands up and begins to talk. This is the first Christian sermon.

Peter points out that it is too early in the day for these men to be drunk; the ancients did not possess the modern man's knowledge of fermentation! He declares that this is the fulfillment of a prophecy of the Jews: that in the day of the Messiah God shall pour out his spirit on men. And the Messiah has come, the Christos, the man of God. And this Messiah is none other than that lonely and rejected man who had been killed by the Romans fifty days before.

Notice the difference in the two scenes: the one filled with suffering, the other with triumph; the one a picture of betrayal and desertion, the other a picture of new-found loyalty and bravery; the one filling our hearts with grief, the other capturing our hearts in joy. "This Jesus . . . you crucified and killed by the hands of lawless men; but God raised him up."

This sermon of Peter's is very important and very rich. One cannot read it without being struck by the fact that God is at its center. And God is at its center as a living, working, active God, doing that which is according to his purpose. This Jesus was a man attested by God; God did through him the mighty works and wonders which men had seen; God had a plan all the time, and this plan included the delivering up of Jesus to death; but God raised him up after death; God exalted him at his own right hand; it is through the promise of God that the spirit is now poured out; in summary, this Jesus, Jew and carpenter of Nazareth, has been made by God both Lord and Christ. This is the scandal of Christianity, that one accursed, according to man's lights, dying a criminal's death on a tree, has been declared by the God who rules and governs to be his own Messiah and the Lord of all mankind.

Let us notice these points: first, that this is God's action. We do not make Jesus Lord; Jesus is the Lord because one who is infinitely greater than man has declared him to be the Lord. He is not the Lord of men because men find in him the moral example for holy living; he is the moral example, to be sure, but the quality of his life grows out of his utter obedience to God and we follow the example, insofar as we will and can, only because he is Lord. Our commitment is not to a new law which Jesus gave, though that law is forever the norm by which we must be judged, but our commitment is to a person, who lives and reigns with the Father who made him Lord. He is our guide but we consent to follow him only because we believe that the credentials he possesses in his person command our obedience to him.

It is a mystery, without doubt, the mystery that the Christian church has come to call the Trinity, but it is because God has worked through this Jesus of Nazareth, giving the Spirit to those who believe, that we own him as Lord of our lives, commit ourselves to him in every ultimate concern, accept him as our Redeemer, as the one through whom we have forgiveness, as our only hope in life and in death. He is the Lord; God has made him so.

There are those who insist that a good moral life is all that is required of us; that preaching in Christian pulpits should concern itself with ways and means of a more healthy adjustment to the world as it is; that Jesus' ethical precepts, especially the

Jesus in the name of God ministered to the total need of men, healing crippled bodies, casting out demonic powers that possess men, feeding the hungry, challenging the rich

Sermon on the Mount, give us the gospel; that man's acts, good or bad, shall either save him or damn him. Those who hold this will probably talk a great deal about Jesus' life and example, not so much of his death. Those who hold it will seldom speak of the Jewishness of Peter's first Christian sermon, emphasizing as it does that profound insight that God was working in Christ, the God who is One. Those who hold this will say little of the Holy Spirit as he relates to God and to Christ, for they will implicitly believe that the "spirit" is simply the vague "spirit of goodwill" that binds man to his fellow man. In other words, these persons are "unitarians," who emphasize the role of Jesus in life, but forget his relation to God and to the enabling, living Holy Ghost.

The early church found it to be necessary to speak of a triune God, of a Father-Creator, and a Son-Redeemer and Reconciler, and a Spirit-Comforter. Each was related to the other but for our day, it should be most emphasized that Jesus was related to God in a way that we are not. We are not reconciled to God by Socrates' wisdom or his death, as noble as these are nor by the Hindu Gandhi's admirable forgiveness of the man who killed him. God has made Jesus his Lord and Christ for men and this can neither be put alongside other acts as one of a kind nor diluted into a too simple moralism by which his salvation is in his teachings.

It is in the mystery of the Godhead that the worth-ship of Jesus finds its ground and Peter knew this to be so when he declared over and over that God has made him the first among men. The later church may have carried this further, to a full-blown doctrine of the Trinity, but they did not depart from Biblical presuppositions when they did so. The God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob was the God who acted for men in Jesus, whom he made Christ and through whom he gave his Holy Ghost. No unitarianism is therefore adequate to render justice to the gospel, even the noble unitarianism which worships Jesus alone.

Let us notice, secondly, that this is God's unexpected action. It ought not to surprise us that God works in mysterious ways. We are not able to know even a sizeable fragment of the total wisdom of men and what we do know always has to undergo revision. From man's standpoint, therefore, the action of a God who created and creates a universe of inconceivable distances, who creates organisms of baffling complexity and who crowned his creation by making a rational creature, must always remain in large part hidden. To our minds, as to the minds of the ancient Jews, lordship would mean visible triumph. The Messiah, the one who is to be God's chosen, would come in power, would show his messiahship in displays of power and would fulfill this messiahship by conquering all the enemies that beset righteousness. Peter's declaration that God has made this weak and suffering Jesus both Lord of all men and Christ, that is, Messiah, means that God's action was a completely unexpected action.

Death, as the final end of man, was heretofore regarded as the limit of life from which no one ever returned. This was common to all men, that they should die. And whatever was to remain, therefore, as memory of a life must be actualized before death. This is certainly the great appeal which prods men into creative activity today, the desire to be remembered, to cheat death in some way by producing that

Fools for Christ's Sake

FESTUS, the Roman procurator of Judea, turned to Paul and with a loud voice said, "Paul, you are mad; your great learning is turning you mad." The apostle had just finished his defense before Festus and King Agrippa, speaking of his own conversion and testifying that "Christ must suffer, and that, by being the first to rise from the dead, he would proclaim light both to the people and to the Gentiles." And to these men of power this had the ring of insanity.

To the Corinthians Paul wrote: "I think that God has exhibited us apostles as last of all, like men sentenced to death; because we have become a spectacle to the world, to angels and to men. We are fools for Christ's sake." Earlier he had reminded them that the word of the cross is folly to those who are perishing. The Acts of the Apostles and the epistles abound with references to the prevailing attitude toward the Christians as one of derision and bitter opposition, and many martyrs died for their faith.

All this was forseen by our Lord. He had undergone the experience of having his own mother and brethren come to take him home as demented and out of his mind. Men of authority accounted for his power by saying that he was possessed by Beelzebub the prince of demons. Time and again Jesus had warned his disciples that he would be crucified and that they would be hunted down. So severe was the persecution that the early church bracketed the world, the flesh and the devil as their arch enemies.

If Christianity and our present society get along harmoniously, it must be for one of two reasons —because our civilization is approaching the Christian level, or because Christianity has conformed to this world. Perhaps the most urgent need of the time is for the increase in the number of God's fools who rely upon his "foolishness" and put their trust in his weakness."

which will go on after death.

I have heard a curator of a museum give this as the reason why mummies have such a fascination for men: these corpses, in a somewhat unlovely state, to be sure, have managed to attain a certain kind of temporal remembrance thousands of years after life has departed. But this is a most shabby immortality, that of mummies or of those who write books or paint pictures, and man knows in his inmost being that if this is all there is, Koheleth was right and all is vanity. It is only a triumph over death that can give man a confidence that his life, his griefs and trials, his joys and triumphs, mean anything.

It was this new, unexpected meaning which was given to men in the action of God in raising Jesus. This explains the change in the disciples, and only this can explain it; these men, bound by the conviction that death is the end and the judgment on man's sin, had for a period hoped that this Jesus was to be the one who would, as God's Messiah, conquer the evil of the world and man's temporality. But they were beaten, discouraged and despairing, when they saw him killed and buried like any common criminal. They had hoped that he would be the one to redeem Israel but their hope had been frustrated, and they were still bound in the slavery which all men endure.

Pentecost sees an entirely different picture; the despair has given way to joy, and the fear has been replaced by a courage which was to move out into the Roman world and overcome it. For in the action of God, a new thing had happened. Release from sin had taken place; men found themselves standing in a new relation to God. No longer were they condemned to the awful loneliness that "lies awake, weeping for its sins"; they were forgiven, and they knew that this had come about through the chosen one whom God had vindicated thereby forever dispelling the fear of eternal death.

We note also that God has done this work of his not by avoiding the conflict and the suffering, but through this very conflict and suffering. This was the stumbling block, of course, for man has always found it easy to believe that goodness can have no reward except success, that suffering is a rather patent sign that sin is lurking beneath the surface. Not only had Jesus been killed, but his death had been the accursed death of crucifixion, and the despair of the disciples had grown out of their received belief that God was bound by his law and, therefore, Jesus was accursed. A Messiah who accepts suffering, who makes expiation and reconciles through it, was foreign to their thought. Though the unknown prophet of the exile had sung of one by whose stripes men would be healed, this too had been overlaid by a legalism in interpretation and thus obscured. That the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob should take upon himself through his chosen one the sin of the world—this had been lost by generations whose religion had become moralistic and ceremonial.

Then, in history, in a time which gives to all time its meaning, through a man, who shows to all men the intention of God for man, God acted. Through this real man he moved, ministering in the name of God to the total need of man, healing crippled bodies, casting out the demonic powers that possess men, feeding the hungry, challenging the rich, calling the complacent to repentance, posing a threat to all that the self-styled "religious" men of the time called valid religion. And in all of this activity for man, there was one word, spoken in the hour of extremity, which summarized the divine intention: "Forgive them." This was the action of God in Christ, release from the idolatries which man had, in his rebellion, set up in place of the God who is One and, with the release, that blessed reconciliation with the Father which permits men to live henceforward as the sons of God they were intended to be.

This was new, God's action, and "a marvelous thing in our eyes." The disciples, like all of us, had doubted in the face of death, for they had not yet been given that Holy Ghost which opens the eyes of the understanding and permits men to see life in the light of God. At Pentecost this light was given and the details of the giving are not, after all, too important. But it is forever important, and a fact that no amount of unbelief can destroy, that with the gift of the Spirit there came into the group (which from this point on was "the fellowship of the called") purpose and motive and the faith which is the ground of faithfulness. God's action did it, God's unexpected action. And once for all there was ratified in the annals of history the divine notice which has become for Christians the gospel; God has made him both Lord and Christ, this Jesus whom you crucified.

The CHURCH in the World's Rural Areas

I. W. Moomaw

WE NEED to view our mission to rural peoples of the world today in the light of certain new and decisive factors. While the message of the gospel remains, as ever, one of redemption and hope, there are new factors which impinge upon missionary policy and service at almost every turn. What are some of these?

Probably the central fact of our time is the striving of distressed peoples for a better way of life. The rural multitudes in Asia, Africa and Latin America have come to believe they need not remain impoverished for ever. Once the world accepted poverty, famine and mass hunger as just facts of life that could not be changed. Now neglected people everywhere have come to believe something can and must be done. This rising hope among nearly half the world's people presents to the church probably its greatest challenge and most noble opportunity since the Reformation.

The demands of the people are reasonable: some land to till, fair returns for their labor, food and raiment for their children. While relief and gifts do much to alleviate suffering, and are essential, a basic need is to express the gospel of Christ through programs of self-help. Dispossessed peoples are asking not for words of comfort and hope alone, but that the gospel be expressed in more concrete and tangible ways, so they can see its relevance to their day-to-day problems.

The Church of the Brethren has long been concerned for the welfare of neglected people. God has prospered the efforts of our missionaries in India, Africa and Ecuador. Some notable results may be seen. Christian education applied to life's needs, agricultural improvements, co-operative credit and the settlement of families on their own land have contributed much toward wholesome family life and stronger village churches. Now awakened world conscience and governmental programs for technical assistance help to create a climate in which the churches can and must reveal the gospel of Christ and his way still more effectively.

There are several hopeful developments. During the past two years an extension service has been developing with Anklesvar, India, as a hub, designed to deal with the problems of agriculture, credit, village health and literacy. Amsey F. Bollinger and Shantilal P. Bhagat have been asked to lead this worthy effort in which four other denominations co-operate, with generous financial support from World Neighbors, Inc.

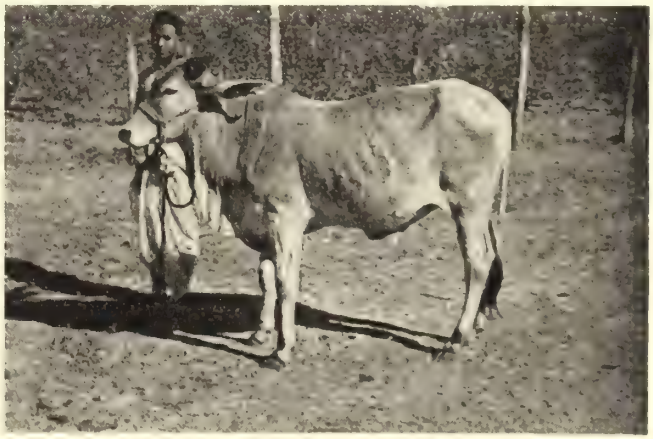
A high-yielding strain of rice is being tested in South India. The Japanese method of planting rice is also being introduced. Involving careful spacing, this method results in an increased yield and lowered costs for seeding

We are glad to note other areas of progress in providing a Christian answer to rural problems. Some of them are: (1) A moderate but steady increase in the number of missionaries qualified for rural service. (2) The growing number of agricultural graduates taking Bible or seminary training, either for service as rural churchmen or as agricultural missionaries. This is fulfilment for those who have long stressed world service in agriculture as a Christian witness to the whole of life. (3) Requests from different fields for trained rural workers and adjustments in field organizations to provide place and facilities for such work. (4) The opening of sixteen new extension service projects during the past eighteen months. Especially notable is a trend toward indigenous efforts in co-operation with the village church.

Last year in South India, we met with a group of laymen who had gone through four years of famine. Their cattle were dead or sold, their implements had been pawned for food and their little church was all but closed. They faced the problem of starting life over again with neither capital nor equipment. They talked and planned until about midnight. Then they decided to form a small co-operative credit society as a means to help one another to start farming again. They turned to the local pastor for prayer and he first read the words of Paul, "Bear ye one another's burdens and so fulfill the law of Christ." I was never more proud of the Christian faith or more deeply moved by the constructive work of missions than I was while those men took council together and with their pastor and local missionary planned for self-help and rebuilding life again after famine had done its worst.

The Role of the Home Church



A staff of trained and dedicated missionaries can well be the church's most valuable possession. Their task during the years ahead may be increasingly difficult. Great care is used in the selection of young people to serve abroad. That is well. But we are in one world now, and if their high purposes are to be realized the whole church must manifest fruits of conviction, humility and hope.

There is a disturbing lack of conviction among us as to the urgency of Christ's way of life, and its relevance to the problems of our time. Technology has much to offer, but technology alone without a guiding and sustaining faith leaves men afraid and confused.

Our world mission also calls us to penitence and humility. So much has been given to us, and it becomes us to bear witness before the world with great humility. Of ourselves we have done very little.

Finally, ours must be a mission of hope. Struggling peoples are looking for a faith that lifts, strengthens and redeems all of

Bargaining From Strength

Clarence E. Pickett

Pinney from Monkmeyer

Doubling up a fist and saying, "You don't dare to touch me, for I am stronger than you," is fatal to negotiation and creative settlement of disputes

THE most common assumption made today by commentators on our foreign relations is that we must, of course, always "bargain from strength." This term is, by those who are more sophisticated, interpreted to include not only military but economic strength. We must calculate carefully on the balance between these two, to see that we do not break our economic back in building too exclusively our military might. The argument has also a higher moral ingredient. We would, of course, like to see taxes reduced and not to require our boys to do what for many is felt to be meaningless military service. But we must forego even our fortunes and our boys' greatest welfare for the sake of our common "security in the free world." As Americans, we must be willing to bear this extra heavy burden as the price exacted of us for the protection of the cultural and spiritual values we hold sacred.

Honorary secretary of the American Friends Service Committee

Two Questions

So the argument goes. And it is all very plausible if we avoid two questions: (1) How does this look to the people of other countries? (2) What does it do to the very heart of our religious faith? On the first point it has to be admitted that our enormous economic and military preparedness does at times deter temporarily aggressive action. Our recent support of, if not incitement to, a coup in Guatemala is an illustration. And I recall asking why the Jewish army stopped its drive against the Arabs eight miles before it reached the Mediterranean, leaving what is now known as "the Gaza strip" heavily peopled with refugees. I was told by a well-informed official of our government that the British intervened and their might was conclusive. The Jewish army did not dare to run the risk of British involvement. The reader has only to consult himself as to what he would do if his pathway to free action is crossed by overpowering force. Unless he is prepared to court martyrdom, he recoils. However, the immediate result is often taken to be the final one. And that is not likely to be the case. The shock to inter-American relations by our performance in Guatemala is sufficient indication of the long-time corroding effects of such high-handed action on our part. It has given a severe shock to the "good partner" policy. And certainly British "threat of intervention in S. W. Palestine, though it seemed to favor Egypt, has not prevented her from yielding to Egypt in the Suez Canal dispute.

Granting, however, that heavy arms is at times a deterrent to unfortunate action, it says to the victim: "I know better what is good for you than you do." This may be accepted by small countries, at least until they mature politically. But its tendency is, if accepted by the suppressed, to thwart growth and to arrest development. Political maturity does not develop under such subservience. But what about relations between larger states? For after all they all believe in might, and if we do not accept that thesis we will be crushed out.

Effective Weakness

This thesis should be challenged even on its most common level. It caused the defeat of Germany, and it has removed France and England from the category of the "great powers." Now their true greatness shows in their ability to negotiate from weakness. Whose was the most effective voice in the disarmament discussion? At the recent sessions of the Assembly of the United Nations, I would say Jules Moch's of France. And he spoke from military and economic weakness! But his was the voice of moral concern and passionate dedication.

In the long effort made by good and true men to bring the Korean struggle to a truce, India had a heavier influence than any other country. But not because she is rich or militarily powerful. And while the Indo-China settlement is far from satisfactory, our friends, England and France, showed alarm when we blustered about "massive retaliation" and "revenge." Our very strength tied our hands for negotiation!

And why should we be surprised at this? Do we not know that doubling up our fist and saying, "You don't dare touch me, I'm stronger than you," is fatal to negotiation? Who, if he can help it, will negotiate under those circumstances? Certainly not strong men! Only weak men or those who can only say "I surrender." And that is not the path to creative settlement of disputes. Perhaps some will say —but we should "tread softly but carry a big stick." Well, very few people, and fewer countries, can tread softly when they have a big stick. And if the big stick is to be used to prevent war, how can it fulfill its purpose if silence is attempted?

Political Peril

In a time of atomic weapons, their number and power are well known. And it is just because we have this power that so much of the world is afraid of us. It is not Russia alone, but others who call us imperialists. Not that we want to have colonies. But we want friends and allies. What of friends who come to us because they fear to oppose us? Speaking largely from the observation point of the UN during five Assemblies, the one outstanding deterrent to gradual degeneration of our standing as a responsible great power was when President Eisenhower proposed to the UN the development of atomic energy for peaceful purposes. The acceptance of that development by unanimous vote of the recent Assembly ought to be an object lesson to those who seek peace. This military preparedness and cold war doctrine is heady diet. Those who indulge in it are so prone to like it—and to accept its burdens as a Messianic virtue. And this is most dangerous.

Spiritual Peril

But there is a further word necessary. Whether we be Jews who look to Isaiah's suffering servant or Catholics who worship through the agonizing of Christ during his trial and crucifixion (the heart of the Mass) or Protestants whose hopes center around varying sets of dogmas—all assert the power of the Spirit to overcome the flesh, of truth to triumph over falsehood, of good to overcome evil. And yet when we accept the thesis for our government's action, that evil can be overcome by military force, we deny our faith!

And I submit that denial of our faith stands as the greatest danger from which we suffer. If missionaries' work was hindered because in early days they operated under the protection of gunboats in the harbor, so does our religious faith wither on the vine in our own homeland if and when we accept as useful or right a cordon of guns, planes,

No Slackening

Glen Weimer

GOD'S WORK is continuous.
There are no breaks in the activity of God.
There is no slackening in the pursuit of his purpose.
God sustains his completed work and carries forward his unfinished work. Such is the abiding source and ground of the Christian's assurance and hope.
God is consistently true to himself.
God never lays aside the tools with which he is shaping man.
God doesn't ignore moral distinctions:
God sees the output of life as it is and for what it is.
No one deceives God and God deceives no one.
God sees sin as sin, wrong as wrong, right as right, truth as truth.
For God, between these there is a great gulf fixed.
God assures the heart in all that is right—we know that assurance in the peace and well-being that abounds in our hearts.
God wants us to know the peace that is alive and vibrant with love
Jesus is the reach of divine love to where we live—where our problem is—where our burden wears us down—and where our hope is reborn—and where life begins again. And as we obey him we live in the orbit of God's peace and abounding favor.
O Father, through yearning love and in great patience thou dost await our full response to thee. Break the chain of habit that has bound us to this world and to ourselves. Amen.

soldiers, bombs, to protect our "way of life." The very fact of accepting this thesis indicates that decay of both morals and courage has set in!

Maintaining the Values

Brethren in every great urban area. At present we do not have any church in many of the great urban centers, let alone an adequate one. Urban churches must specifically set their program to cultivate as many of these coveted values as they possibly can. Some of these will be difficult and some practically impossible.

Our remaining rural churches must take on new concepts as to their significance in the community. Many rural churches do not attempt to serve the total community. They think in terms of serving a certain constituency or to be very bold, only Brethren. If the Brethren move from the community we often close the church assuming that there is no longer reason for its existence. We must come to serve the total community if we are to preserve our cherished values.

We must help our rural congregations make the pastoral job in their communities as challenging as any urban pasorate. This can be done now if we mean business.

We must inspire our people to dedicated living, whether in rural or urban areas. We will maintain the values of rural life only as we help our people to cherish them enough to give themselves to them and to the church wherever they are.

Holding fast the truth with all our might we must follow God in soundness of mind, and consider all things to be his, as indeed they are; and further we must . . . entrust ourselves to him, loving the Lord.

Clement of Alexandria

A House of Prayer

Paul Thompson

JESUS entered Jerusalem with the pomp and glory due an Oriental monarch, but it was something like a swan song for it marked the beginning of a bitter ending; his last week was filled with pathos, suffering and seeming defeat. So it was that on the morrow he went to the Temple and, seeing the money changers at work in their dirty business, he overturned their tables and broke up their game. Then he announced: "It is written, My house shall be called the house of prayer; but ye have made it a den of thieves."

Jesus' pronouncement then may be apropos now. There has always been the danger that the church in all of its involvements might deviate from its primary function and so dissipate its energy and influence by its entanglement in divers activities. A clarion call has been heard for the past decade: Let the church be the church. The voicing of this admonition gives rise to the idea that perhaps the church may be lagging in its major objective.

When organized crime, the commercial segment, the political element say, "Let the church be the church," they mean that the church has no business attempting to change the social status quo. They concur in desiring the church to withdraw into its four cloistered walls and, having shut its doors on society and its evils, to sing its members to sleep with a prayerful lullaby.

Churchmen too say, " Let the church be the church," and they mean that the church is commissioned of God to speak and act in all conditions, relations and experiences of life, and that it ought to have the courage to do so.

It is plain to see there is no unanimity of opinion concerning the work of the church. Some think the church has no responsibility at all in the social order; others think it ought to be the most authoritative voice.

There is increasing pressure for the church to become more and more concerned about and involved in the supervision of the education and recreation of its youth. Some believe that the church has an obligation in the matter of helping youth find avenues for recreation and creative activity. Others do not think so.

Still others are saying the church must become more concerned about developing a larger and more inclusive social life for the adults. These believe that teas, dinners, socials and adult education and recreation should be sponsored by the church, helping its members find a complete social life within the frame work of Christian ideals.

Yet others say that the church should never try to compete with the world in the areas of education and recreation, but it should have more worship services, prayer cells and service units.

These ideas all indicate that the church is groping to find its rightful place in society and give hope that it will. Before the church can emerge from its present state of uncertainty concerning its real task, it will need to consider these observations:

The church must never use dishonest, corrupt or subterfuge methods in its program. It must be one organization in society that keeps itself free from the many human frailties that so often despoil others.

The church must minister to the needs of the present generation by synchronizing itself with present-day conditions, moods and opportunities.

Pastor of the Lima church, Ohio

The church must recognize that it is basically a fellowship of believers, and so it must do everything that will strengthen that fellowship which in turn sustains the lives of its adherents.

Because the secularizing influence of modern living is constantly infiltrating the lives of Christians, the church must empower its influence by enlarging its program to gain greater spiritual control over the total lives of its members.

The church as a denominational fellowship is giving way to a church as a community fellowship. Thus the church must become more outward looking and more ecumenical in spirit. It will need to be more concerned about making people Christian than about making them sectarian. It can no longer minister only to its provincially minded members and maintain its ardor in our social order. It should come out from behind its closed doors and identify itself with the community in which it exists and which it must serve.

The church must never lose sight of its main purpose of transforming human lives into ever-growing Christ-like spirits. It must learn to use all possible Christian methods in an ever-increasing number of areas of human experience. No longer are preaching and praying enough — other methods also must be employed if the church is to do what it ought to do.

With the increasing population and the rapid secularization of our civilization the church has its greatest challenge before it; its possibilities are limited only by its willingness to move forward. Let the church be what it ought to be and do what it ought to do and this will become known as the century of growth.

The harvest is plenteous! Where are the laborers?

Reviews of Recent Books

Books are reviewed here as a service to the church. A review does not necessarily constitute an unqualified recommendation. Purchase can be made through the Brethren Publishing House, Elgin, Illinois. Titles recommended for church libraries are marked with an asterisk (*).—Editor.

Do You Understand the Bible? J. Carter Swaim. Westminster, 1954. 173 pages. $2.50.

This easy-to read, dynamic book deals in a very helpful way with the peculiarities of Biblical thought and language and enables you better to understand the message of the Bible. For example, the highly poetic imagery of miracle stories and apocalyptic passages is to be interpreted in the light of the Hebrew sense of God's nearness. Biblical truth is not just to be believed but to be acted upon. The author emphasizes the Protestant principle that our best understanding comes not in private interpretation of the Scripture, but in togetherness. The last five chapters discuss, in the light of the differences in outlook between the Biblical world and our own, such great themes as God's proof of his love, the atonement, the fatherhood of God, Christian predestination versus Mohammedan fatalism and the philosophy of history. Dr. Swaim shows that our hope of a new and better world rests not upon technology and materialism but upon that which Christianity offers in Christ.—C. Ernest Davis.

The Woman of Tekoah. Clarence E. Macartney. Abingdon Press, 1955. 160 pages. $2.00.

This is another book of great sermons on Bible characters by Clarence Macartney. With his usual skill he makes the Bible and its characters live again, bringing eternal truth to focus on our life and problems. It is not only great preaching, but is the kind every minister can well use as a pattern for his own growth in effectiveness.—Charles Zunkel.

Nurse, Pastor and Patient. Granger Westberg. Augustana, 1955. 96 pages. $1.00.

A most attractive, excellently written, eminently practical and helpful little book, written by a pioneer in hospital chaplaincy work —Granger Westberg. It is beamed at the nurse to help her perform a Christian ministry and witness of real help to her patient in the three- to five minute contacts with her patient. Also it helps her make use of the minister and chaplain in this ministry and instructs her how to do the little things to make their ministry most effective.

It is a most understanding and helpful treatise, making use of the finest in psychology.—Charles E. Zunkel.

In-Laws Pro and Con. Dr. Evelyn Millis Duvall. Association Press, 1954. 400 pages. $3.95.

Mrs. Duvall, the well-known writer in the area of marriage and family relations, has produced another book which will be, we predict, well received. Based partly on her original research findings, persistent and recurrent in-law problems are treated in an objective and reliable yet human and interesting fashion. Many old stereotypes are challenged. The book ends on a positive note with advice for those who are going to be involved in close interpersonal relationships with in-laws.

Special attention is given the mother-in-law role. Especially useful for ministers, counselors and teachers, the book can be recommended to any intelligent adult.—Atlee L. Stroup, Wooster, Ohio.

life, saving not only from sin, but from poverty and oppression that blights both body and soul.

We live in a time when the molds of history have been broken and the floodwaters of destiny are flowing rapidly for many nations. The Communist did not cause this striving and rising hope among peasant peoples, although he is ever present to use it for his purpose. In a true sense this rising hope began long ago when the Man of Galilee placed the seed of mercy, justice and goodwill in the hearts of his followers and then walked up the hill to Calvary. Will the church languish in its world mission or will it arise with conviction, humility and hope, to become the helmsman of God for a new day?

KINGDOM GLEANINGS

Ora Seiss, Jr., is interested in acquiring some type of duplicating equipment to use in the Columbus church, Ohio. If you have such equipment to dispose of, write Bro. Seiss at 2836 E. 13th Ave., Columbus 19, Ohio.

Special summer rates will apply on many of the Cathedral Films available to our churches from the Visual Education Department. Complete information on these rates along with a listing of new films has been sent to pastors and elders in charge of churches. You may also receive this listing by writing to the Visual Education Department, General Brotherhood Board, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill.

The first two registrations received for the Citizenship Training Institute to be held at Grand Rapids, Mich., June 20-23, are from Lauree Hersch, president of the National Youth Cabinet, and Mrs. Helen Sealover, temperance director, Southern Pennsylvania. Anyone desiring to attend this worth-while institute should have his registration in before May 31. Mail registrations to James Renz, Temperance Director, General Brotherhood Board, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill.

The S. M. Dell home at McPherson, Kansas, was destroyed on April 18 by an explosion and the fire which followed. Mrs. Dell and her son, Bob, were sleeping at the time and almost miraculously escaped with only minor burns. Professor Dell was on the way to Europe on a cattle boat and did not learn of the disaster until he docked at Bremerhaven. Everything was completely destroyed and the McPherson church has started a fund to help them re-establish themselves.

If any of their friends are interested in contributing to this they should send their contribution to Harry K. Zeller, Jr., 1322 E. Euclid St., McPherson, Kansas.

On April 27 the officers of the National Council of Churches wired President Eisenhower indicating their support of his and Secretary Dulles' declaration of willingness to negotiate directly with Communist China for a cease-fire in the Formosa Strait. Dr. Walter W. Van Kirk, executive director of the Department of Inter-national Affairs of the National Council, urges Christian leaders throughout the country to express similar support for negotiation. He says, "If there was ever a time for the churches to witness to their faith in support of negotiation and against a 'preventive' war, the time is now." When this appears readers may still have an opportunity to express their convictions to President Eisenhower and Secretary of State Dulles.

More Church of the Brethren delegates can be accepted at the International Sunday School Convention, meeting at Cleveland, Ohio, July 27-31, according to assurances given at a meeting of the convention committee on April 26. The Church of the Brethren has already exceeded its original quota by approximately twenty per cent; so it is good to know that more Brethren will be welcome at this important convention—the largest interdenominational meeting that will be held in 1955 in the Americas. If you want to go, send to C. Ernest Davis, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill., for a registration blank. One should act promptly, for it is expected that registrations will mount rapidly during this month and June.

Delegates to the International Sunday School Convention who wish to stay in Church of the Brethren homes should send their lodging requests directly to the pastor, H. Robert Gemmer, 14280 Superior Road, Cleveland Heights 18, Ohio, before May 31, so that he can complete arrangements before going to Annual Conference and on vacation. Please tell Bro. Gemmer whether or not you are coming in your automobile so he will know how necessary it is to locate you near public transportation lines. More people can be taken care of by our Cleveland members if delegates will express a willingness to share a room with another delegate.

Dedications

Beacon Heights church, Fort Wayne, Ind., Sunday, May 29, at 2:30 p.m., service of dedication for the new building. Charles Zunkel, secretary of the Ministry and Home Mission Commission of the General Brotherhood Board, will be the guest speaker.

Milledgeville church, Ill., Sunday, June 5, dedication service for the new educational unit and the remodeled church. Former pastor, Jeff Mathis, will speak at the 10:00 a.m. service and Paul Miller, also a former pastor, will preach the dedicatory sermon at the 2:00 p.m. service.

Shepherd church, Mich., fortieth anniversary celebration, Sunday, May 22. Dr. Charles A. Anspach, president of Central Michigan State College, and Bro. Ernest Jehnsen, district executive secretary, will be the speakers.

Day Camp Training Opportunities

Three laboratory day camps are scheduled for this summer, planned by denominations co-operating through the special committee on camps and conferences of the National Council of Churches. These camps will offer opportunities for leaders-in-training to get necessary skills and techniques. The three camps are: Little Rock, Ark., June 5-18 (this will include junior high boys and girls and leaders); Paoli, Pa., July 11-22; Green Lake, Wis., July 16-23. More information can be obtained from your district children's director or the national camping director, Paul M. Weaver, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill.

Recent Publications

Readers will be interested in several recent publications by Brethren and by contributors to our Brethren periodicals. Dr. F. C. Neumann, professor of languages at Elizabethtown College, has written a book with the title, Man Reborn. This is composed of autobiographical sketches and chapel talks, many of which have appeared in recent years in the Gospel Messenger. Copies can be secured from the author by writing to him at his college address.

Paul R. Myers has written a record of his impressions and experiences during his pilgrimage to the Holy Land. The title of his book is Touring the Holy Land. Further information and copies of the book may be obtained by writing to the author at Box 117, Greentown, Ohio.

Mildred Allen Jeffery, who lives in Medford ,Oregon, and who for many years has contributed verse to Brethren publications, has now published a book of poems entitled, Behind the Burden. Copies may be obtained from Pageant Press, Inc., 130 W. 42nd St., New York 36, N. Y.

Brotherhood Theme: Seek First His Kingdom

Merle Brown of Mt. Pleasant, Pa., has entered the employ of the General Brotherhood Board in the treasurer's office. Prior to coming to Elgin, he was associated with the Brethren Service Center at New Windsor, Md. for five and a half years.

Elaine Jamison of Kearney, Nebr., began work in the office of the Brethren Service Commission on May 2. Sylvia Seese, who has served in that office for several years, is leaving to return to her home in Headwaters, Va.

The Compulsory Reserve-UMT Bill HR 5297 was approved on April 27 by the House Armed Services Committee in a 31 to 5 vote. The bill next goes to the House floor for debate and vote. Church members are urged to contact their representatives to oppose any form of compulsory reserve or military training in the bill.

Elizabethtown College

Dr. Ralph W. Sockman will address the fifty-eight graduates at the fifty-third commencement exercises to be held on Monday, May 30, in the college auditorium. President A. C. Baugher will confer upon Dr. Sockman the honorary degree, Doctor of Humane Letters. Two alumni will be honored with Doctor of Divinity degrees: the Rev. Nevin H. Zuck, pastor of the Elizabethtown Church of the Brethren, and the Rev. Charles F. Jenkins, pastor of the Second Baptist church, Columbus, Ohio.

Religious emphasis week brought to the campus April 20-22 Dr. Raymond Veh, adult counselor of the General Youth Fellowship, Evangelical United Brethren Church, "God's Way—My Way" was the theme for a sunrise service, personal interviews and student-led discussion groups. Dr. Veh addressed the faculty on The Growing Religious Emphasis in American Higher Education.

William Bechtel of East Berlin, was chosen president of the student association for 1955-56 in the first of a series of student elections. Other all-campus positions go to Carl Denlinger of Salunga, editor of The Etownian, college newspaper; and to Dorothy Stotz of Middletown, editor of the Conestogan, college annual.

Cooperative business education for high school seniors was considered pro and con at the eighth annual business and education seminar meeting on March 26. For the first time the National Secretaries Association joined with the college and the Lancaster, York and Harrisburg chapters of the National Office Management Association in planning the seminar. Business education teachers from a seven-county area, office managers, salesmen and secretaries heard the discussion and participated in a panel. At the closing luncheon Dr. Harvey A. Andruss, president of Bloomsburg (Pa.) State Teachers College addressed the group on Facts and Fallacies. Prof. Albert Gray, department of business education, was campus co-ordinator for the conference.

The capital fund campaign of the ten-year development program is in progress in the York area and is about to be organized in the Philadelphia area. The initial campaigns in the Lebanon, Hershey-Palmyra, Harrisburg, Elizabethtown and Lancaster areas have been completed with goals exceeded. Following the Philadelphia campaign there will be a general alumni campaign for those not contacted in the general areas.

News and Comment From Around the World

Religious News Service

Dr. Billy Graham and his wife are shown aboard the liner Liberte before he sailed for Glasgow, where on March 21 he began a four-month preaching tour of Europe. His six-week all-Scotland crusade is being sponsored by the "Tell Scotland" movement with a $133,000 campaign budget

National Council Reaffirms Opposition to UMT

Opposition to universal military training has been reaffirmed by the General Board of the National Council of Churches. The board noted that "we are now in a situation in which it is most important that the churches uphold the hands of leaders who are seeking to reduce tension among the nations." It urged the council's constituent churches to study current legislative proposals having to do with military training from the standpoint of their international and domestic significance.

1954 High in Religious Radio and Television

Nearly 500 individual religious radio and television programs were produced in the United States last year by the 30 major church bodies co-operating through the Broadcasting and Film Commission of the National Council of Churches. Counting as a single broadcast unit each time one station carries a program the figure totals 58,400 broadcasts and telecasts—up 21,000 over the previous year. Anticipating an even broader program in 1955 the Commission authorized a record budget of $1,405,000 for this year.

Korean Ambassador Gets Church Mobile Unit

A mobile anti-tuberculosis X-ray unit has been sent to Korea as the gift of American Protestant church groups. The first X-ray equipment ever to be made available in Korea, it is especially designed on a four-wheel drive automobile chassis and carries with it on a trailer its own gasoline-driven electric generator. It will be put to immediate service in areas of Korea where such clinical apparatus is unavailable. Officials of Church World Service said tuberculosis is "by far the greatest of the disease enemies in Korea with a death rate of 400 per 1,000 population."

Warns Against Haste in Indian Citizenship

The federal government has been urged to heed a "go-slow" admonition of the churches in facilitating the long anticipated transition of the American Indian from status as a ward of the government to full citizenship lest it constitute a program of abandonment.

The National Council of Churches through an action of its General Board deplored the haste with which Congress has enacted legislation to terminate federal trusteeship and services for American Indians who instead of being a vanishing race now number more than 400,000. The council has urged planning on a co-operative basis of the federal, state and local governments, working with the Indians and voluntary agencies.

Dr. Purd E. Dietz, chairman of the Division of Home Missions, warned that the effect of the hasty action in many cases will be to make the Indian a public charge and put him on the relief rolls of states and local communities.

Walls of Jericho Tumbled Twenty-four Times

A team of British and American archaeologists have concluded that twenty-three successive walls of Jericho tumbled down long before Joshua's priests blew their trumpets about 3,000 years ago. Joshua led the Israelite invasion of Canaan in the fourteenth century B. C.

This season the archaeologists finally reached Jericho's earliest known town wall, built on bedrock and buried fifty feet deep beneath the debris of at least 7,000 or 8,000 years of history. Miss Kathleen Kenyon, director of the British School of Archaeology in Jerusalem, said that Jericho's first wall encircled a town of approximately eight acres.

Jericho's first wall was constructed of uncut stones and apparently was built against a mud embankment. Its remains were used as a foundation for the second wall of identical contruction. The wall that fell down before Joshua's invading host has

The Sixth Annual Conference of the National Council and Regional Presidents

THE NATIONAL COUNCIL of Women's Work and the regional presidents of women's work assembled at Elgin for their annual spring conference, Feb. 28 to Mar. 3. The National Council met a day prior for business which needed to be done before the conference began.

The major business was to plan the program material for the coming year. Key leaflets and all packet material of missions, home and family life, aid service, temperance, spiritual enrichment, peace and citizenship, as well as the new president's packet, received due consideration. Because each of these departments is closely linked with the work of the staff at national headquarters staff members met with our group and told us the part that women's work could play in promoting the work of the church.

Often at these meetings a need arises which must be taken care of immediately. In presenting the needs of Brethren Service Harold Row said the most urgent one was to work against UMT and the resettlement of refugees came second. The group moved to send a telegram immediately to Chairman Overton Brooks, saying, "We, the national and regional officers of women's work in the Church of the Brethren, representing the women of our denomination, strongly oppose House Resolution 2967, National Reserve Plan, because it is contrary to our basic belief that the conference table is the better way to settle disagreements than military might. This bill moves towards permanent military conscription and engenders suspicion and fear at home and abroad." Ralph Smeltzer urged all women who were local and district directors in women's work to attend the citizenship training institute to be held in Grand Rapids, June 20-23, following Annual Conference.

The new missionary themes were given to us for the year 1955-56. They are as follows: The Christian Mission in a Revolutionary World for foreign missions and the Indian American for home missions. A challenge given to our women was to go out to help the weaker churches in the Brotherhood. It was pointed out that women have an open fellowship — if we want the unreached women to come in, that we are not crossing racial and cultural lines in our churches. When the Supreme Court is breaking down lines, how can we lag behind?

Many women will be interested in knowing that the local report blanks will be revised. One real problem has been that owing to the lateness in the program year in receiving all of our annual report blanks (usually Jan. 1) the mailing list to women's work officers is delayed entirely too long. This means that new officers do not receive any help until long after the program year has started. So it was voted to enclose in the April or May Local Women's Work Bulletin a postal card to be mailed to Elgin as soon as local officers are elected.

Because of the great needs that faced us we are anxiously looking forward to the coming of a full-time executive secretary of women's work, a director of home and family life and an adult education director, and to a closer co-operation with the men's work program, so that all together we can more efficiently do the work which our Lord and Master and our church is asking us to do. — Mrs. Paul Halladay.

disappeared, according to Miss Kenyon. Presumably built of mud bricks it has long since been washed away by rain. All that is left of the Joshua period is the stone foundation of a house at the eastern edge of the city.

Proposes Youth Hostels for Young Lawbreakers

The Protestant Episcopal Bishop of New York, Horace W. D. Donegan, has recommended the establishment of youth hostels for young lawbreakers. He believes youth hostels supervised by the churches, welfare agencies and the judiciary would help keep young offenders from returning to delinquency.

The hostels would serve youths over sixteen on probation or parole. They also could be used as transition points for boys discharged from correctional institutions and on their way back to society. The hostels would provide supervision for youth in an atmosphere as much like a normal home as possible.

Quakers Set Summer Work Camp Program

Summer work camps and study projects sponsored by the American Friends Service Committee are expected to enroll nearly 1,000 college-age youths. The Quaker organization will send young people to thirteen countries of Europe as well as to Algeria, Israel, Mexico and El Salvador. The United States projects will include work with migrants in Pennsylvania and in an Alabama community where a college has voted to accept both Negro and white students.

Bill Would Simplify Mailing of Church Publications

A bill to simplify the mailing of publications by churches under the second-class permit has been introduced in the House by Rep. James Wright of Texas. It would eliminate a requirement that a church group must obtain an individually signed statement from each of its members testifying that a part of the member's church contribution goes for a subscription to the church publication.

Under the new bill church groups would only be required to send to the Post Office Department a simple resolution of their governing boards, the procedure followed by other non-profit organizations.

Reflections and Observations

After a Trip to the Nation's Capital

Charles Anderson
La Porte, Indiana

A TRIP to Washington to visit the halls of Congress is almost like taking a refresher course in political science. One feels more keenly how ignorant he is of his government and its operation after having been there.

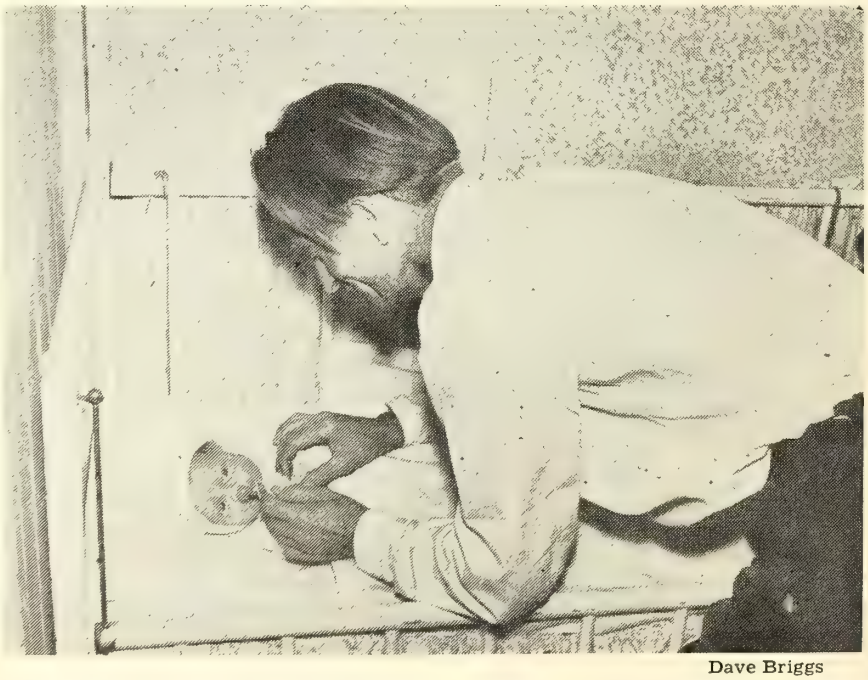
This feeling points out very vividly one of the most conscientious and honest concerns of many of our representatives — some of whom shared it with us — the need for a citizenry that is more interested and well-informed about the functions of his government. The very heart and secret of our American form of government has been that of representation, an idea and concept which is rapidly being lost by our people, who are so caught up in the mad rush for making a living that they find little or no time to think about government and to exercise the right of voting.

There are several things that we feel ought to be made clear at this time for the benefit of those of you who are writing and calling on representatives in regard to the draft and UMT. We have been asked by our Washington church representative, John Eberly, to share our observations and concerns after having visited in the offices of about fifteen representatives on the days of March 8 and 9. The first of these appear in the negative as "Don't's" and are followed by a number of "Do's" which we offer for a constructive approach to effective contact work with the representatives:

1. Don't assume or intimate that our representatives are trying to lead us into war or to fasten military controls on our government; most of them are doing their best to avoid such undesirable trends.

2. Don't use "stock phrases" or "trite sayings" in writing or talking to them. One congressman in particular has the opinion and distorted view that we Brethren are "flashing" campaign slogans before our people that border on being "half-truths" and that reflect immature and incomplete understanding, thereby leading to bias, prejudice and faulty conclusions.

3. Don't argue or challenge them with "party issues" or "politics"—things that are incidental and peripheral and indirectly connected with UMT. They hear enough about these things through the "interest groups" in government and from the nonchurch groups who have a stake in this matter of military training.



4. Don't talk world disarmament or complete abolition of war and war supplies; such things are legitimate ideals for which we are striving in the future, but they are somewhat irrelevant to the immediate issue at hand. Be as practical and realistic as possible in meeting squarely the immediate issue and in suggesting possible and workable alternatives and ways out.

5. Don't be impatient if you find very few men who are in favor of the United Nations or who show respect and appreciation with what it has done and is doing; quite a number of them, especially the "old-line" Republicans view it as an attempt at supra-government and as a threat to the right of each nation to rule itself and determine its own policies independent of other nations.

6. Don't write or talk as though you have all the answers to the problems of government; stick to UMT! These men are humble enough, at least most of them, to admit on their own volition that they did not have the answers but wish that they did.

1. Do emphasize the moral and spiritual dangers of any form of mass compulsory conscription for military indoctrination. This is the basis of your concern as a Christian.

2. Do emphasize national defense — a strong moral and spiritual defensive within our nation to stand in opposition to anything that is foreign to Christian freedom, democracy and religion.

3. Do suggest positive alternatives to the threat of communism —alternatives built on love, brotherhood and feeding the hungry people of the world, etc. Remember that many of the congressmen who just recently voted for the extension of the draft did so reluctantly and because they have not yet acquired sufficient faith in any alternative to communism but a strong military defensive.

4. Do carry a written statement with you which sets forth clearly your basic moral and spiritual concerns, convictions and views concerning UMT so that you can leave it with the many men on whom you will call and cannot see personally. Always remember to talk and write in your own everyday words and phrases.

5. Brethren from the South, the far Midwest, the Mountain states and the Pacific Coast states who do not find it feasible to travel the distance to Washington ought to write their men immediately. By choosing at random a few representatives from these parts of the country we found them to be quite uninformed about the positive alternatives to UMT and the moral and spiritual implication of military conscription. Perhaps they have submitted to the view that war is inevitable and, therefore, that a strong military defensive is absolutely necessary now and forever more.

These concerns represent the concensus of opinion of our group (Rev. Roy Richey, Rev. Waldo Kinsel, Rev. Emory Kintner and myself) and in some cases may represent more directly the mind of the writer. They are shared with you not because we think that we have the answers or because we pose to be political analysts, but for whatever value they may have to you.

Note: By the time this is printed it is quite likely that the UMT—National Reserve Plan bill (H.R. 5297, formerly H.R. 2967) will have passed the House Armed Services Committee and the House of Representatives. Both this and the draft extension bill will probably come before the Senate shortly. Whatever the status of these two bills at the time. this article appears, Christian people should speak through visits and letters, not forgetting to pray for our lawmakers as they discharge their duties. The basic principles contained in these Do's and Don't's could apply to almost any situation in which you want to contact your congressman.

REFUGEE RESETTLEMENT NOTES

Marvin Blickenstaff from the Brethren Service-WCC Refugee Resettlement office in Wels, Austria, writes:

Let me share with you the story and my impressions of a family for whom I have just completed visa questionnaires.

The name is Bedoe. The family consists only of the mother and the three children. They have not heard from their father since he was declared missing in the war. Herr Bedoe had been a government official in Rumania. After the war, because of fear of the partisans, the family fled to Austria. To reach their "home" one must travel up a very narrow road (which is almost impassable by auto in winter) to the small Austrian village of Pondorf. There in a large farm building this fine family exists in two small, crowded, unhealthful rooms which in my estimation almost pass the border of uninhabitable living quarters. The main room, where they cook, sleep and do most of their living, has only two tiny windows which at midday cannot furnish enough light for good reading.

Karl, the oldest child and only son, is living now in Linz where he is attending a civil engineering school. The elder daughter, Erna, is a very pretty girl. She is now attending commercial school where she rates among the best in her class. And little Hannelore! We Americans seem to have no other word for such people than "cute." She is full of curiosity and vivaciousness, and has a winning smile that attracts one immediately.

It is such family groups that make refugee resettlement the interesting work that it is. Naturally, all of our families are not this appealing, but I'm finding that people in Austria and Germany are just the same as people in the States with a very negligible difference resulting from environment. They deserve to be helped. God grant us the power, wisdom and understanding to carry out our program in service to our refugee brothers.

Notes From Fresno

A well baby clinic is now being conducted at the North Avenue Community Center, with the help of the public health service of the county. A few women from this community have been faithful in volunteering their assistance to the doctor and nurses. Some babies get their only attention from a physician after birth from the clinic physician. Many immunization and booster shots are given. Children are eligible for the clinic from one month old up to school age. The health department has attractive, easy reading and excellent literature on prenatal care, care of babies, helps for growing children, helps on diseases and living with teen-agers. The mothers are eager for this material.

Teams from the center have participated in the city-sponsored playground activities. Both the boys and girls teams competed in the basketball tournaments, yo-yo and marble contests. These activities proved very exciting to the children and youth and provide wholesome recreation for all.

Club activities in both the boys and girls groups, have consisted of a trip to the Sierra cotton gin, the Golden State dairy, the City Edge dairy, Southern Pacific roundhouse and Coca Cola bottling plant. The boys have also been making airplanes and doing other woodwork.

Of primary importance in the work program at the center now is the completion of the new house. With the help of a loan from the General Brotherhood Board of the Church of the Brethren, plus a lot of help from the local Church of the Brethren, the house for the director of the project will soon be completed.

New Film

THE SOUND OF A STONE, a new film on civil liberties, has recently been added to the film library. It is timely and very dramatic—a good discussion stimulator. It is excellent for use in churches, youth and young adult discussions, high school groups, PTA's and service clubs and other community organizations. In color, the story of a young high school teacher brought under suspicion because a book he had recommended is thought to be subversive is effectively told. 26 min., color, rental, $10.50. Order: Audio-Visual Education, General Brotherhood Board, 22 S. State, Elgin, Ill.

Summer Mission Conferences

EACH SUMMER a number of interdenominational missionary conferences are conducted in various parts of the United States. They are among the finest summer conferences in the nation, drawing upon great Protestant leadership for lectures and discussions. On this page are listed those which should be of interest to mission leaders in our local churches. Perhaps your church can send a delegate to one of the conferences. It will prove to be very worth while.

JUNE 12-17

Mount Sequoyah

ARKANSAS

The Southwest Conference on the Christian World Mission came to birth last summer in a valuable week of study and inspiration which the delegates insisted must be continued and expanded. An attendance of 200 persons is being planned for 1955.

The membership of the conference will be composed of delegates from the co-operating denominational bodies and the Councils of Church Women. Lay people and ministers will join with missionaries and other leaders in the Christian World Mission in periods of study, worship, and fellowship.

This ecumenical conference, like the other summer missionary conferences, is directed by a responsible local committee under the sponsorship of the Division of Foreign Missions, Division of Home Missions, Department of United Church Women, and Joint Commission on Missionary Education, NCCC.

Boulder

COLORADO

The Summer Conference and School of Missions conducted by the Interdenominational Board of Church Women for the Rocky Mountain Region was founded in 1906. The 1955 conference will add another great year to this long tradition.

The beautiful Chautauqua grounds at Boulder surrounded by majestic mountain peaks is a setting matched by the exceptional merit of the program offered. Five hundred people reveled in both the scenery and the inspiration of this long-established missionary fellowship last year.

Addresses, forums, study groups and visual presentations will form a varied program of great interest. Outstanding speakers and leaders will be featured in the program.

AUGUST 21-27

Chautauqua

NEW YORK

The Institute of World Missions is the concluding week of "the season" at famous Chautauqua Institution. A wide range of courses covering the mission themes, world order, the work of United Church Women and other major interests will be offered. An extensive literature exhibit is a feature of the institute. Amphitheater lectures on world topics will be followed by afternoon discussions. In addition, delegates will enjoy many features provided by the Chautauqua Institution such as the Chaplain's Hour, outstanding musical and dramatic offerings, plus every kind of recreational facility.

The faculty will consist of experts in their various fields, renowned missionaries and leaders visiting from other lands.

AUGUST 5-10

Asilomar

CALIFORNIA

The annual Missionary Education Movement conference is held at Asilomar on the point of the beautiful Monterey peninsula. This is the outstanding missionary education conference on the Pacific Coast. Its fame and superb program attracted almost 600 ministers and lay church leaders last summer.

Good facilities, Monterey pines, sand dunes and the lovely Pacific make the location ideal for thoughtful discussion and meditation.

Addresses by eminent leaders and discussions led by capable teachers will help another interdenominational group of delegates enjoy their preparation for making the current mission study themes come alive in local congregations.

Lake Forest

ILLINOIS

The World Missions Institute is located on the splendid campus of Lake Forest College, close to the shore of cooling Lake Michigan and a free bathing beach.

A superb program of missionary education and related subjects was offered last summer to an enthusiastic, capacity attendance of ministers and lay leaders. Here laymen of many callings may engage in free discussion of the Christian world Mission with ministers and faculty. Lake Forest serves the midwest and is characterized by its midwestern cordiality and zest.

The committee has planned a program and has engaged a faculty which will maintain the high standard set in 1954.

Her Only Son

Anna M. Warstler

I SAT on a bench on the veranda of the Bulsar hospital waiting my turn to see the doctor. Among the patients waiting also to be called was a very sad-looking lady. She really was a very beautiful elderly person, but her face showed the marks of sorrow. She was a Parsee by religion. Her priest was with her.

Finally the doctor called her name. When she arose she walked with great difficulty. She went ahead as the priest lingered behind. Ratonbai, the Bible woman, asked, "Does she have rheumatism?" He replied, "She has lost her only son." He paused a moment and then said, "Because of that she is sick. She has no one else in this world to depend upon."

Another Parsee woman sitting opposite us threw out her hands and declared that fate was like this and she must accept this. Thereupon, Ratonbai brought forth the point that God punishes us when we sin and that it is hard to understand why God allows these so-called calamities to come upon us.

It did not seem quite satisfactory to allow the matter to stop there; so we continued the thought and challenged our hearers to the thought that God would increase our faith through circumstances such as this one and called us to bring all such burdens to him for a more victorious and continued happy walk on this earth, in spite of sorrow.

"Sister, would you not like to fill the void left by the passing of your only son with the holy presence of God's only Son? God's Son came into the world that you might have life and that abundantly. We shall pray for you, friend."

Out of the Mailbag

"Our impressions of India are certainly good. While the future of missions here may be uncertain, the strength of the established churches and the toil of earnest missionaries indeed give one a hope for the future. We are grateful for the opportunity to take our places in the service of His kingdom."

Joseph and Virginia Schechter.

"The primary need for the future of the church here will doubtless be the training of national church leaders. The church still depends heavily upon missionary leadership though the pulpit is now being shared by lay preachers. These people are enthusiastic about the task of winning others and are receiving training on the job. The present economy of the area will not allow for a paid ministry for some time. The preacher must know how to earn a living in another way. However, a few of the more promising young leaders should probably be sent for thorough training in the years to come. We will need trained leaders if the Indian church is to take its place in the developing national Protestant movement."

Our Italian Neighbors in Brooklyn

James D'Amico
Pastor, Calvary Church
Brooklyn, New York

WINNING Italians to Christ always involves dealing with the one major problem of prejudice against Protestantism. The only successful method of meeting this problem is the same one which has been used throughout the centuries, i.e., winning men to Christ and not to an "ism." Men and women will recognize their soul's need along with the inadequacy of the Roman Church if they are made to see Christ clearly.

With this in mind our work among the Italians in Brooklyn has been one of witnessing individually to people in church, homes, places of business and street corners. The services at our church are no different from those in any Brethren church except that we have several Italian services throughout the week. Bro. Frank Ottaviano, an assistant pastor, spends much time visiting in homes where English is not spoken. He also preaches at the Italian services.

The work among the children is mainly done by our church missionary, Miss Laura Moyer, who has been with our Italian church for almost twenty years. As new children come into the Sunday school and midweek school she visits their homes and talks to their parents. A number of parents have come after their children have been won. It is easy for me to evaluate Miss Moyer's missionary endeavor by saying that because of her interest in me as one of her "little boys," I came to know Christ and now serve as a full-time pastor.

An important phase of our work which is peculiar to our Italian church is done in summer on a busy corner in front of a local bank. Here as many as thirty to forty of our people gather every Saturday evening. With five or six musical instruments playing and the whole group singing gospel hymns, it is not long before a crowd of spectators gather. The leader for this meeting is Charles Lo Prinzi, a man with many years of experience in this work. With his hearty voice, enthusiasm and love for souls he makes a capable leader. It is his God-given talent to lead these meetings with effectiveness. The crowd that gathers is usually large; so much so that a number of policemen will stand by to insure order. The entire program consists of music and personal testimonies. With a well-trained group of enthusiastic young people the testimonies are very impressive to the crowd. Businessmen and housewives as well as our young people give testimonies. The meeting is usually closed by a prayer from the pastor. After the meeting we distribute tracts, Gospels of John and New Testaments, with a personal invitation to those who seem interested to return with us to the chuch for some refreshments. Each Saturday evening there are three, four or five interested persons who accompany us back to the church. Here we talk to them about their personal relationship to Christ. One case is that of a cab driver who, as he said later, was impressed by our five trumpeters. He stopped his cab and listened to the music and testimonies. In response to our invitation he came to the church, accepted Christ and is now joining the church along with his mother who through him was won to Christ.

Another more commonly used method of evangelism used to reach our neighbors is to invite an evangelist for special services. Our next evangelist will be a missionary who will soon return from Italy. His coming will be publicized widely in our neighborhood with literature and canvassing. When he comes we will spend much time visiting prospective converts. This method of winning our neighbors is effective.

Interested Italians would much sooner attend a meeting in a home than be seen entering a Protestant church. With some cases it takes a few years of care before the prejudice of the Roman Church is broken down. Yet the opposite is sometimes true. One fine man a few months ago came because his wife and children had been coming. While they sat in Sunday school he visited the Italian worship service. After attending a few weeks he made the statement: "Why wasn't I told about the Bible before this?" He takes his Italian Bible to work with him, reading it while traveling the subway going to and from work. For him this makes a minimum of two hours of Bible reading a day. He, too, with his family will be baptized soon.

Teaching Brethren doctrine is done by emphasizing Christian brotherliness, love, consecrated service to Christ and the church, humility as exemplified by the love feast, and living at peace with all men. These doctrines our people readily adhere to. Our church building is of typical Brethren design in its simplicity and is a sharp contrast to the lavish edifices of the Roman churches around us. Some feel that our simple design is a hindrance to our witness, yet when souls are won to Christ they can see that this is in harmony with the character and personality of Christ.

An interesting incident occurred which dates back to the turn of the century and which was responsible for Mr. John Caruso founding the Italian work. As a member of the Roman Church he was told by his parish priest that if he did not want to see the devil face to face he ought to refrain from visiting a Protestant church. Thus, his curiosity being aroused, it was not long before he entered a Protestant church to "see the devil." Instead, he found Christ and a spiritual change took place in his heart; he decided that others should know of the great truths to be found in God's Word and he promptly started a Mission.

We, today, are grateful to Mr. Caruso and to the Brotherhood for backing him and making the Calvary Church of the Brethren possible. Through many combined efforts, the plan of salvation is made known and many have found new hope and life in Christ Jesus.

Amendment to the Pension Plan

In the judgment of the Pension Board it is desirable and necessary that the Ministerial and Missionary Pension Plan of the Church of the Brethren be further amended. As provided in the Pension Plan, therefore, the Pension Board has adopted the following amendment, ad interim, and presents the amendment to Annual Conference of 1955 for ratification:

Article III. Member Contributions

Each member shall contribute an amount equivalent to four per cent of his salary during his active membership, except as hereinafter provided.

Any member of the Pension Plan shall be permitted, following his election of social security coverage under the 1954 amendments to the Federal Old Age and Survivors' Insurance Act, as amended from time to time, to make contributions to the pension plan equivalent to 3%, 2%, but not less than 1% of his salary basis, as determined under Article I, paragraph (j), provided the employing organization pays its regular contribution of 6%.

All such contributions shall be credited to the individual account of the member and be increased by the interest credits thereon.

The above and foregoing resolution is approved and adopted as a resolution of the Pension Board (Trustees of the Ministerial and Missionary Pension Plan of the Church of the Brethren) this 10th day of November, 1954.

Brotherhood Fund Goal

The General Brotherhood Board recommends to Annual Conference through Standing Committee the adoption of a Brotherhood Fund goal of $1,325,000 for the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1, 1955. Through its report the General Brotherhood Board plans to interpret to Annual Conference the needs and opportunities which make this goal and increased support seem most imperative.

Scripture Text in Youth Quarterly

Because Annual Conference has spoken at various times regarding the printing of Scripture texts in our church school quarterlies, the General Brotherhood Board requests that permission be granted to eliminate the printing of the Scripture texts in the Youth Quarterly and recommends that the Bible be used as the resource for all Scripture texts in the church school classes for young people. The General Brotherhood Board believes, along with the National Youth Cabinet which originated this proposal, that such an action would allow greater freedom to use more scriptural references than at present, give more space for Bible helps and commentary and encourage young people to use their Bibles at home and to bring them to church on Sunday.

Ministerial Placement and Policy

1955 Report

The General Brotherhood Board received from the 1954 Annual Conference the request to revise, in keeping with the suggestions of the query, the statement of Ministerial Placement and Policy adopted by the 1951 Annual Conference. The Board, therefore, recommends to Annual Conference the following revisions as indicated by the parentheses and underlining:

I. General Recommendations

II. Procedures in Vacancies and Appointments

1. Extending a Pastoral Call
2. Pastoral Nominations
3. Terminating a Pastorate
   a. At the minister's initiative. The minister may for sufficient reasons and of his own initiative terminate his pastorate by resignation. The resignation should be presented to the pastoral board or corresponding board after careful counseling with them and the district and/or regional placement persons. Such counseling . . .
   b. At the pastoral board's initiative. The pastoral board of the congregation or corresponding board (after carefully counseling with him and the district and/or regional persons) may, for sufficient cause, suggest to the pastor the advisability of pastoral change . . .
   c. By vote of the church. If the pastor does not see fit to resign, the pastoral board or corresponding board (after carefully counseling with him and the district and/or regional persons) should have authority, if they feel the best interests of the church demand it, to call for a vote on the question of retaining the pastor . . .

The Functions of an Elder

1955 Report

I. Biblical and Historical Background

See 1954 Minutes, pp. 10 and 11, the two sections entitled:

A. "Biblical Background"

B. "Brethren Background"

II. Moderator of the Local Church

A. Title

The presiding officer of the local church shall be called moderator, regardless of whether he be a minister or layman. This is to take place of the term presiding elder or elder-in-charge since these terms are sometimes confused with the term elder as a degree in the ministry (Annual Conference Minutes 1951, p. 18).

B. Eligibility

1. The best qualified person available, whether minister or layman, should be elected moderator of the local church (see qualifications below).
2. The moderator should be a resident member of the church which he serves where there is a person available who meets the qualifications set forth below and where it would make for efficiency and harmony in church administration. Otherwise, the moderator should be chosen from outside the church which he serves.
3. Except in extraordinary conditions, no person should serve as moderator of more than one or two churches.
4. Where other leaders are available, someone other than the pastor should usually serve as moderator.
5. All newly elected moderators shall be confirmed by the District Board of Administration or the District Elders and Moderators' Council.

C. Qualifications

1. Such time-tested Scriptural qualifications as the following should be given primary consideration: "a man of irreproachable character," "master of himself," "dignified," "gentle," "not selfish or quarrelsome," "not covetous," "able to manage his own household well," "trustworthy," "a lover of goodness," "not quick tempered," "not over fond of having his own way" (see 1 Tim. 3:2-7; Titus 1:5-9).
2. Such qualifications for moderator of Annual Conference and district conference as have been outlined by Annual Conference should be modified as follows to apply to the moderator of the local church:
   a. Consecrated Christian living in home, church and community.

b. Faithful service and demonstrated leadership ability in the work of the local church.
c. Loyalty to the ideals and program of the Church of the Brethren.
d. A working knowledge and understanding of the Brotherhood and district programs.
e. Ability to exercise mature judgment in the solution of the local church problems.
f. Familiarity with parliamentary procedures and skill in presiding over a deliberative assembly.
g. The ability to secure from a congregation a true expression of their thinking on matters under consideration and to reconcile divergent points of view.

D. Duties
1. He should preside at the business meetings of the congregation unless he designates someone to serve in his place.
2. "He should be chief counselor and advisor to the pastor in all of his work" (see Annual Conference Minutes, 1951, p. 75).
3. He shall serve as an ex-officio member of the Pastoral Board, which board "shall serve as an advisory board to the pastor" (Annual Conference Minutes, 1951, p. 76).
4. He should be a member of the church board, church cabinet or board of administration and, when a resident member, may serve as chairman.
5. He shall serve as a member of District Elders and Moderators Council, representing his congregation at all of its sessions while he is moderator (see Annual Conference Minutes 1947, p. 10; and 1951, p. 18).

E. Installation and Training
1. It is recommended that when a moderator begins serving, he shall be installed into office with a suitable consecration service, arranged by the pastor and retiring moderator. (For a suggestive service, see Manual of Worship and Polity, pp. 153-156.)
2. Provision for in-service training of moderators shall be made by the districts.

F. Term of Service
1. The moderator shall be elected by majority vote for a term of one, two or three years.
2. He shall be eligible to serve not more than six successive years in the same church but, after one year, shall be eligible for election again.

G. Assistant Moderator
1. In churches where there is a nonresident moderator or a pastor-moderator, it is recommended that the church consider the advisability of electing a qualified resident layman as assistant moderator.
2. The assistant moderator shall act at the request of and under the supervision of the moderator in performing the duties of the moderator outlined above.

III. The Moderator-Pastor Relationship

A. There must be mutual understanding and a spirit of team work as pastor and moderator co-operate in the performance of their respective functions.

B. The moderator should be recognized as the official head of the church, working through the church board and church council in the formulating of policies, transacting of business and approving of plans for the work of the church.

C. The pastor should be recognized as the executive head of the church, the active leader in its program and activities, its spiritual counselor and the shepherd of the flock.

D. The moderator should protect the pastor from involvement in factions and misunderstandings in the church and community so that his work as shepherd of the flock may not be hindered; and the pastor should support the moderator in carrying out the functions of his office.

E. As genuine love for Christ and the church transcends any selfish ambition on the part of either moderator or pastor, the relationship will be a productive and happy one.

IV. District Elders and Moderators Council

A. Name
The former District Elders' Body shall be known as the District Elders and Moderators Council.

B. Personnel and Functions
The personnel and functions of the District Elders and Moderators Council shall be the same as given for the District Elders' Body (See Annual Conference Minutes 1951, p. 17, 18).

Summary

The term elder has been used in our church to refer to both the presiding officer over the congregation and to the highest degree in the ministry. In the above report we have tried to eliminate this confusion by using the term moderator for the presiding officer of the local church, and to reserve the term elder as a degree in the ministry. This report has dealt with the work of the moderator, which was the primary concern of the query. The committee feels there is need for further study of the elder as a degree in the ministry.

V. The Ministry

Since there are now no major differences in the functions of an ordained elder and those of an ordained minister, and since there is confusion and lack of guidance in the qualifications and requirements for those being ordained as ministers and as elders, we recommend that a study be made of the degrees in the ministry and especially of the degree of elder with the purpose of bringing our present ministerial structure and practice into harmony with recent Annual Conference decisions and with the present and future needs of the church.

THE COMMITTEE,
S. Earl Mitchell, Chairman
T. F. Henry, Secretary
F. S. Carper
Ray Emmert
J. W. Lear
Paul E. Miller

Choosing General Brotherhood Board Members

Whereas, we believe that members of the General Brotherhood Board should be selected, inasmuch as possible, from all areas of the Brotherhood; that this representation should over a period of time include each district, if at all possible;

And whereas, we believe a change can be made in the present method of choosing board members without weakening the administration of the board;

Therefore, we, the Little Pine congregation, petition Annual Conference of 1955, through the district conference of North and South Carolina, to authorize the revision of election of members of the General Brotherhood Board as follows:

1. That twenty members be chosen from different regions according to the membership of the regions and that one member be chosen at large from each of the five regions;

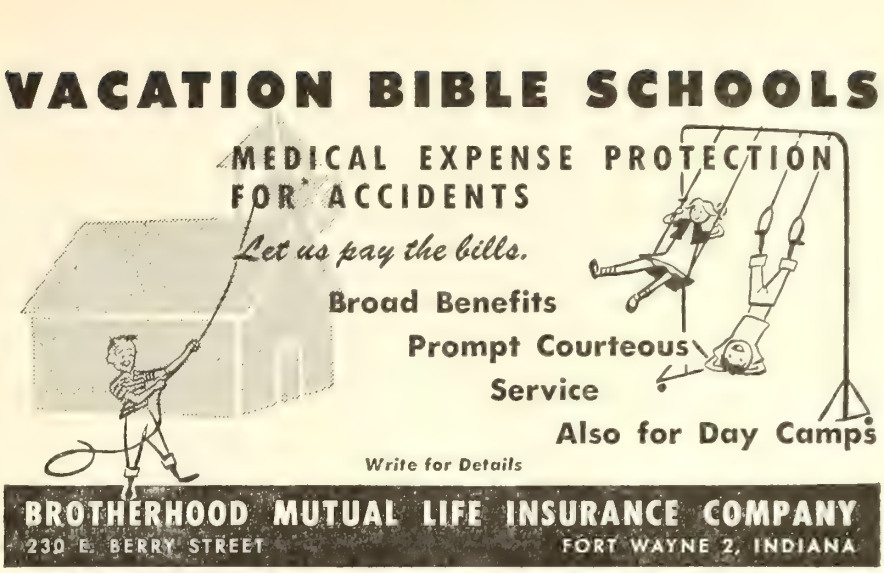
2. That the members of the General Brotherhood Board be chosen from each of the five regions according to membership;



3. Members selected from each region should be, inasmuch as possible, selected according to district or grouping of districts;

4. That the term of office be reduced from five years to four years.

Fred F. Dancy, elder.
Click Murphy, clerk.

North and South Carolina district conference, meeting at the Melvin Hill Church of the Brethren in 1954, voted to pass this petition on to Annual Conference.

Bristoe Osborne, moderator.
Virgie McIntyre, clerk.

Church News

Northern California

Empire—Our church will observe our fiftieth anniversary May 22 with an all-day meeting. Our pastor, Bro. Harley Stump will bring the message at the morning worship hour. The afternoon meeting will be reflections on the life of the church during the past fifty years. A highlight of this service will be when Brother and Sister W. M. Caywood of Lindsay, Calif., tell of their part as charter members in the organization of what is now the Empire congregation. The church started near Ceres, Calif., May 22, 1905. Former pastors and their wives will also be interviewed at this time. A dedication service in the evening will complete the program. All former members and friends of the church will be most welcome to attend any or all of the celebration. Palm Sunday began the Holy Week services with our pastor, Bro. Stump, in charge of the services. On Thursday evening, April 7, there was a prayer vigil. On Easter morning the La Verne College Chapel choir was with us. In the evening we held baptismal services and a reception for the new members. Bro. Stump conducted a class on church membership during the Sunday-school hour for a number of weeks. Thirteen persons have been received by baptism into our church.—Anna Kathryn Heisel, Empire, Calif.

Oregon

Medford—The first of January Bro. C. V. Stern took charge of our church. Bro. Peckover was in charge of the installation services for Brother and Sister Stern on Jan. 23. Our church participated in the Christian teaching mission and in the Day of Prayer service. Our women's work group collected clothing and sent them to Korea. The women also made more soap and gave it to the Salvation Army for Korean relief. On Feb. 20 we had a potluck dinner at the church followed by a business meeting. The women's work group sponsored a sweetheart banquet for our young people in February. Two persons were received into our church by baptism on March 13. We have begun Bible study each Wednesday evening at the church. The women's work group attended the annual rally at Grants Pass the last of March.—Hazel Jackson, Medford, Oregon.

Washington

Seattle, Olympic View Community—During the first part of the year our Sunday-school attendance increased and by March 20 we went over the 300 mark. Our educational building is far enough along in its construction that we can take care of this crowd in a much better manner. At the last report over 5,000 hours of donated labor had been given to the work of the new construction project. Our chimes are played every evening by Joan Wilmot and during the Lenten season they were played at noon by Mrs. Clifford Lueck. We are looking forward to having our pastor and the choir on TV again this year.—Mrs. Calder Muirhead, Seattle, Wash.

Northeastern Kansas

Navarre—Our church held a homecoming and birthday Sunday with Homer Kimmel of the South Beatrice church, Nebr., as guest speaker. Mr. and Mrs. B. H. Shank celebrated their golden wedding anniversary with their children and relatives attending church as a family on Sunday morning. The men's work group has four heifers which they will send overseas next fall with the district shipment. Brother and Sister Emory Shank were installed into the office of deacon by Bro. Gorman Zook, secretary for the Kansas districts, and their pastor, Bro. Elmer Dadisman. Special services during Lenten season included a love feast service on April 7, Good Friday services and the Chapel choir of McPherson College on Easter Sunday evening. Brother and Sister Hylton Harmon of Kansas City were with us March 20 concerning their trip to Brethren Service work in Europe.—Mrs. Elmer L. Dadisman, Navarre, Kansas.

Topeka—Bro. W. H. Yoder began his duties as interim pastor of our church the first of September. Our church was represented at the regional conference. The Christmas program was given the evening of Dec. 19 with an offering being received for The Cedars, our home for the aged at McPherson, Kansas. The Willing Workers' class presented two new flags to the church. A new Sunday-school class composed of the older members of the Home Builders' class has been organized and has chosen the name J.O.Y. Bro. Floyd N. Biddix of Orlando, Fla., was a guest speaker in our church in January. At a special called council meeting Bro. Biddix accepted the call to become our pastor the first of April. On Feb. 16 men's work and women's work sponsored a pancake fry at the noon and evening meal. A meeting of the district education cabinet was held in our church on Feb. 26. Three young people from our church attended the regional youth conference in McPherson.—Mrs. Lucy Black, Topeka, Kansas.

Washington Creek—The Cotton Blossom Singers from the Piney Woods school gave a concert in our church. Afternoon speakers for our home-coming services were Bro. Willard Brammell and Bro. Ralph Hodgden. Our pastor and his wife were delegates to the district meeting. Several young people and their sponsors, Mr. and Mrs. Calvin Hoover, attended the district meeting youth rally at the Richland Center church. The children and young people gave the Christmas pageant, The Glory of the Lord. The young people also went caroling to the shut-ins. On Jan. 14 Sister Sara Shisler, missionary to Africa since 1926, was with us. On Jan. 16 the McPherson College ladies' quartet, accompanied by Glenn Swinger, were with us. The district CBYF rally was held in our church Jan 29 and 30. Our two-week revival meeting began Feb. 20, with Bro. Milton Early as evangelist. Five were received into our fellowship by letter.—Mrs. Arthur Longfellow, Overbrook, Kansas.

Northern Missouri

Wakenda—Our guest speaker for the annual Thanksgiving supper was Bro. Eugene Gnagy. Neighboring communities helped with the special music numbers for the occasion. We are glad to welcome back into our fellowship Mr. and Mrs. Wayne Minnick, who have served two years in B.V.S. work at The Cedars in McPherson, Kansas. Our family night sponsored a watch night service at the parsonage on New Year's Eve. Brother and Sister Correll attended the youth conference at McPherson. Pre-Easter meetings were held in co-operation with the Rockingham church on April 7-9, in our church. Bro. Ralph Skaggs of Warrensburg, Mo., gave a talk and showed colored slides on the new proposed Springfield mission.—Mrs. Joe Minnick, Hardin, Mo.

Nebraska

Enders—At our March council meeting we voted to conduct a vacation Bible school as soon as possible after school is out for the summer. The senior CBYF assisted with the morning worship on Feb. 6. Several of our young people attended regional youth conference at McPherson. Our church took part in the World Day of Prayer services, which were held in the Imperial Methodist church. The district youth rally was held at our church March 26 and 27. The women's work council made ready-cut garments for relief. The women also made comforters during the winter months. The men's work group is planning a Lord's Acre project for this summer. Our love feast was held April 8.—Mrs. Albert Applegarth, Wauneta, Nebr.

Southern Illinois

Astoria—Christmas programs, caroling and a community hymnsing were held during the Christmas season. A school of mission on India was conducted each Sunday evening through January and was climaxed with an Indian meal served by Eller, superintendent of Bethany Hospital, was guest speaker in our church in January. Mrs. R. H. Miller showed pictures of the India mission at an evening service recently. A displaced family sponsored by our church will arrive soon. Gratifying results came from the church attendance for the ten weeks before Easter. A series of stewardship meetings for our section of the district were held for four successive Tuesday evenings with Bro. Harl Russell as speaker. On pulpit exchange Sunday, Bro. E. R. Fisher, pastor of the Huntington church, was with us. A music festival was presented by the adult and junior choirs on Feb. 27 under the direction of Bro. Marlin Brightbill. Ten churches of this area joined in a program of visitation called Four Nights for God, which was held the second week in March. Instructions for this visitation program were given by Bro. Samuel Harley, our district secretary. Pre-Easter services were held with Bro. Nevin H. Zuck of Elizabethtown, Pa., as guest speaker. Twelve persons were baptized into our church fellowship. An Easter cantata, The Holy City, was given by the adult choir on Palm Sunday evening. Communion services were held April 7. The young people arranged a sunrise Easter service which was followed by a breakfast. The women also made hospital kits for Austria.—Mrs. Edna Mae Younker, North Manchester, Ind.

Wabash Country—There have been three additions to our membership since our last report. We have redecorated the sanctuary and are improving the church grounds. Our ladies' aid meets once a month to sew for relief and has also been sewing for the Mexico home. We participated in the union pre-Easter services in Waltz Township.—Pearl I. Hasty, La Fontaine, Ind.

West Eel River—Since our last report three new members were added to our fellowship by baptism and two by letter. Bro. B. D. Hirt of Monticello held a one-week revival. Olin Mason gave a talk concerning the nurses' training home at Bethany hospital. Richard Reahard of North Manchester showed pictures and gave a talk on missions in Arizona. A Christmas play was presented by the young people's class at Christmas time and the married people's class had charge of the New Year's Eve service. Our exchange pastor was John Laprad of Delphi and our pastor, Bro. Leonard Custer, went to the Pipe Creek church near Peru. The committee on Christian Advance held a one-day institute at our church. Our church participated in the union pre-Easter service and will also co-operate in the union Bible school. The young people's class entertained the district youth cabinet on March 20. Our communion was held April 9 and the choir presented the cantata, God's Only Son, at Easter time.—Mrs. Harley M. Drudge, Claypool, Ind.

Southern Ohio

Salem—Our church building had completed a service to its members for a few months over a century when it burned to the ground. Our pastor, Foster Bittinger, and other church leaders began immediately to plan the future of the congregation. With the leadership of our pastor and a building committee we are planning to build a new church in the shape of a "y." We are now holding our services in a near-by school. The churches in our community had a united church census. Our young people gave the play, John Kline, the Christian Leader and Brethren Martyr. We closed our school of missions with Goldie Swartz telling of her experiences in India. Our church sent four youth to the Brethren youth seminar in Washington. We united with the Happy Corner congregation for pre-Easter services with Desmond Bittinger as guest speaker.—Miriam P. Wenger, Union, Ohio.

FEEDING COMES FIRST

WHEN three tiny birds fill a nest they appear to be all mouths. Perhaps it is characteristic of all growing things to be hungry, to be in need of food. They are so small you cannot yet see the wonderful engineering of a bird's wing, or catch the loveliness of flight, or hear the coloratura tones of a morning bird song. Yet if these mouths are fed their wings will strengthen, their feathers can develop into shimmering colors and the song will follow. But feeding comes first. In the church's own nurseries, in its classrooms and in its halls, feeding comes first. Education precedes the dedication of Christian life. Vocations of service follow after many years of feeding on spiritual nourishment. In the nest the food problem gets first consideration. Why not for fledglings in the church?

Wings for the Soul

Do you know we don't need to wait until we get to heaven to have wings? We can have them now, wings for our soul. We can soar to the heights like the eagle. In Isa. 40:31 we read, "They that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run, and not be weary; and they shall walk, and not faint."

Take the little cocoon. The life inside could think, "I am snug and safe in here, I am perfectly satisfied; I believe I will stay right here." But the little cocoon does not think that. It thinks, "there should be some way I can get out of here; it is dark; I would like to get out into the light and become what I am supposed to be." Then the truth dawns on it, and it begins to move, to push and twist and squirm and work and work. The time it takes for it to get out is according to its strength. After a while it begins to stir again. We feel sorry for it and would like to help, but its struggling and working to get out is what makes it strong. It is determined to get out and with a final struggle and push it comes forth into the light. It looks around and shouts for joy, "This is the life, real life. I am not bound any longer. I have wings." Then it begins to soar upward and onward.—Mrs. Mildred Stump, Lakeville, Ind.

On Baptism

The article on Spiritual Baptism, by Edwin L. Christman, La Verne, Calif., prompts this reader to write on baptism. The names of John the Baptist and Jesus are given as lay teachers. John the Baptist was divinely appointed as the forerunner of Jesus Christ. Jesus Christ was the Son of God the Father and received "all authority" from him. If lay teacher in either case can rightly be applied, it cannot in any sense weaken the authority which they used.

Jesus gave us an example, in complying to baptism, not that he needed it for himself, but as he said to John, "So it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness." And John baptized him on that ground (Matt. 3:14-15).

Jesus did not borrow anything from John or use him as a pattern. He got his authority from the Father. So close was he to the Father that he said (John 10:30), "I and the Father are one."

Water baptism is important and should be kept sacred in connection with the new birth. Jesus told Nicodemus, "Except a man be born of 'water' and of the Spirit he cannot enter the kingdom of God." Jesus and his disciples did practice baptism (John 4:1-2), and were doing it on rather a large scale. In the great commission his last charge to his disciples, was to "teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you."

The disciples understood and practiced water baptism in the early church. The church has used water baptism through the ages so there is not much question as to its need. It's not for any people, group or person to change the plain command Jesus gives in Matt. 28:19, by saying it is not necessary to salvation.

"If ye know these things happy are ye if ye do them."

It is true spiritual baptism is more important, but we cannot separate them, they go together.

Our brother gives Acts 19:2-4 as an example of the contrast between water and spiritual baptism, but read also vs. 5 and 6 which tells of Paul rebaptizing those who had not been properly baptized and laying his hands on them so that they received the Holy Ghost. Also Acts 10:38 is used to show the spirit baptism. This tells of God anointing Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power. This is used by Peter in presenting him as the holy one spoken of by all the prophets, that through His name all that believe in him shall have remission of sins. To believe in him is to do also what he taught.

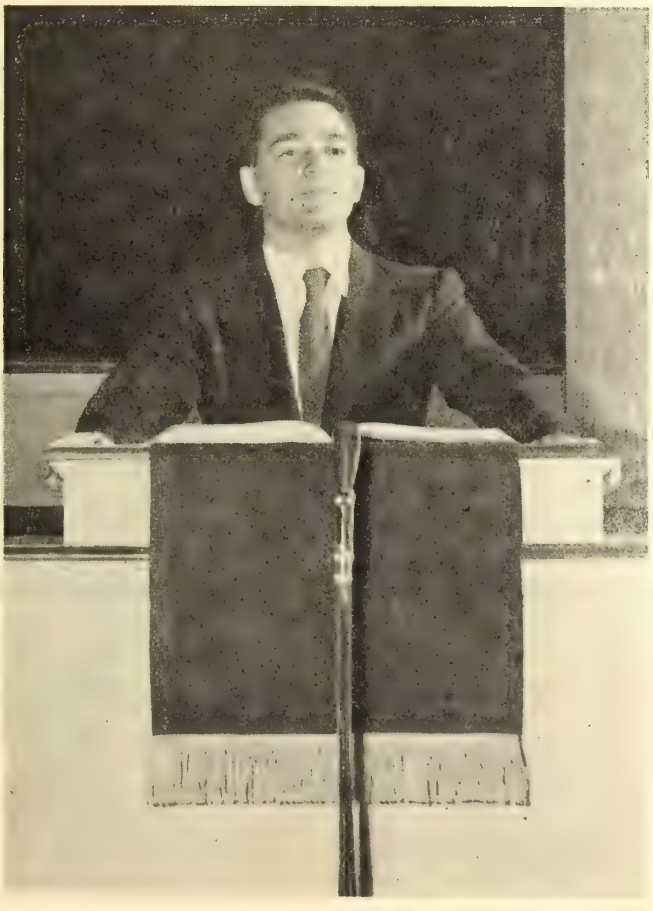
It is very clear that baptism was understood and used in the early church and serves its purpose in changing from the sinful ways of the world to the new life in Christ. The Holy Spirit accompanies the water baptism by the laying on of hands.

It is also to be remembered that we need to humble ourselves and seek Jesus and his ways, turning away from every trend that does not measure up to all his plain teachings and his righteousness.—O. E. Stern, Wausaukee, Wis.

There Is a Transformation

Interest, devotion and resources used in the work of the Christian church can transform lives

A. Stauffer Curry



Moderator of Annual Conference

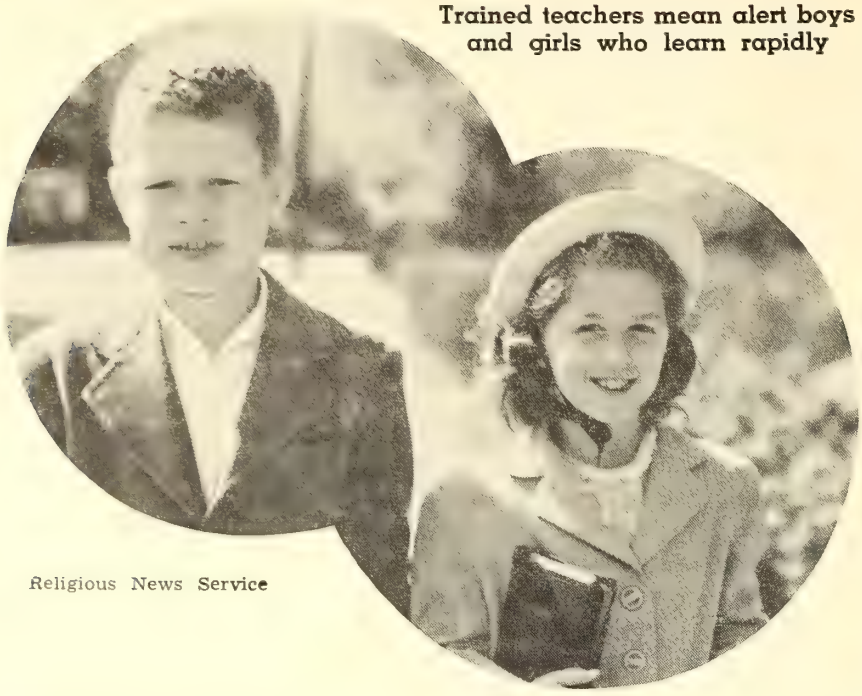
I SEE a transformation ahead. Our people have learned through the May 7 Gospel Messenger about our total church program. They have contributed to it in the Conference Offering. They will discuss the program at Grand Rapids. All this will lead to a transformation of our consecration, interest and resources into changed lives around the world. I see many pictures of the results of this transforming of resources into new living.

The scene is the front room of a parsonage. The pastor and his wife are counseling with the regional man. The pastor is misunderstood by his people, is very discouraged and is tempted to leave the ministry. He could maybe make ends meet by becoming a salesman for some product. But after a few hours the regional secretary persuades him to continue the ministry in a new pastorate. The regional man is paid by the Brotherhood —from your contributions. Your interest has been transformed into saving this pastor, and many others, for church service!

No Longer "Eine Fluchtling"

The scene is a compartment of a moving train in Austria. The nervous young mother with babe in arms, afraid she can not cross the German border, says, "Ich bin eine fluchtling (I'm a refugee)." The sympathy of all in the compartment is with her. Maybe she did not reach America. But many like her have new homes because the Church of the Brethren helped them—through your gifts. They have been transformed into self-respecting citizens. Yet, many more refugees are still hopeless wanderers, living in barracks and tents.

Young men have stayed in the ministry because of the counseling given by regional and district fieldmen, made possible through contributions to the Brotherhood program



Bill Smith

A Simple Infection Threatens Death

The scene is outside the dispensary of a mission station. A man is horribly raw and bleeding. He has a badly neglected simple skin infection which one call to a doctor or one antiseptic from the corner drugstore would have prevented in this country. He knew of no antiseptic. But Christian gifts erected the mission hospital. At last he could be informed of simple medical remedies. A few days or weeks of treatment cure his torture and the threat of death. Meantime he learns of Christ. The church's resources have transformed an invalid pagan into a healthy Christian prospect. The greater the gifts, the more lives will be thus transformed.

Church Is Planned in Trailer

The scene is the "parlor" of a trailer. There are many trailers and small homes in this part of the city. People have moved in from the North, South, and West. A small group is meeting with the district and regional officials. They have just had word that the general Board will grant them some money to start a church. They are overjoyed. From loneliness and isolation this group is being transformed into a warm, Christian fellowship — through individual resources and gifts to the total church.

A Marriage Saved

The scene this time is the pastor's study. The man and woman had previously conferred with him separately—now together they talk over the situation. They had felt sure they needed a divorce to be happy, even though it meant risk to the personalities of their children. As a last resort they came to the minister. Very fortunately the minister was trained in counseling in our seminary — Bethany. (He also was trained in Bible, doctrine, church history, how to preach, Christian education, etc.) He, after many weeks of such conversations, got the man and woman together again.

How did your gifts save this couple? Bethany Seminary receives a share of support from general funds each year. Our seminary imparts skills to our ministers. Thus your dollars helped save the personalities of this nearly divorced couple's young children.

A Sinner Is Saved in the Factory

This scene is a factory lunchroom. Two men have "hunted up" Mr. Jones and are talking with him. The whistle is about to blow, but they will be back tomorrow. Actually they conferred daily until Mr. Jones found salvation and became a church member. These men attended the special classes in evangelism in the local church. These were begun as part of our Brotherhood evangelism program. The men were convinced that Mr. Jones, and many others, would find Christ only if he were visited in person at his work. He never came near a church. So they made it a point, during their lunch hour, to speak to him. Your contributed resources, part of which help support an evangelism emphasis, actually were transformed into the buoyant Mr. Jones who now experiences personal salvation.

"You See, Mr. Senator"

In this scene a delegation is seated around the desk of the senator from their home state. The issue is probably war, temperance, delinquency, refugees or foreign policy. The church delegation seems to be well informed. The legislator listens intently. As they leave the senator expresses appreciation for the insights into their interpretation of the gospel. He promises to do what he can on the issues raised. How were these people so well informed? They had read the Gospel Messenger and other literature carefully. Our educational program had reached them. In fact, they knew much about every phase of church life through their reading of our good publications. They were transformed from inert residents to wide-awake Christian citizens. They were transformed from well-intentioned ignorant church members into well-informed all-around good church workers. Yes, through your gifts, because the materials which they read were produced, in part, from general church funds.

"Today, Boys and Girls . . ."

It is a beautiful view through the window as one observes the class in the church school. The children were not numb with fear and timidity while the teacher talked to them. Instead, they were asking questions, expressing their childish views

No Hitching Post?

THERE is no hitching post in the universe—so far as we know." This is the most simple version of Albert Einstein's complicated theory of relativity that has come to our attention —and the sentence had his approval in 1930.

If the statement offers little hope of certainty in an uncertain world, perhaps a more recent comment by the great scientist who died just a few weeks ago should be added, for Einstein also remarked, "I cannot believe that God plays dice with the cosmos." Evidently it was his conviction that even in the world of nature there are some hitching posts, some absolutes as yet undiscovered.

Before he was driven out of Germany by the Nazis Albert Einstein was an active participant in the peace movement. His motives were humanitarian, not political. To many of his friends he seemed naive because he urged young men to refuse military service. Even after Hitler's rise to power and the coming of World War II, he had little enthusiasm for militarism.

Though he had formulated the basic theory that opened the way for the development of the atomic bomb he had grave misgivings concerning its use, especially when it was dropped first on civilian populations. In recent years he was often misunderstood and criticized because he lacked enthusiasm for the manufacturing of still greater bombs and because, like other scientists, he protested against the conscription of our best scientific brains for nationalistic purposes.

In Einstein's concern for humanity, in his placing conscience above patriotism, in his warm appreciation for the world's finest music, one can detect a longing for hitching posts, a need for absolutes, a search for eternal stars to steer by. One Easter season, not long after Albert Einstein came to America, a church in Princeton, New Jersey, was presenting Joseph Haydn's Seven Last Words. When one violinist, a seminary student, was unable at the last minute to take his part in the string accompaniment, the famous scientist who walked across the seminary campus every day, offered to substitue. He often listened to the Westminster Choir present the finest church music, both classic and modern. If he listened as attentively to the text as to the music he must have known the hitching posts that the Christian faith offers to mankind.

For Christians do have hitching posts: the certainty of God's providence and mercy, the assurance that death has been overcome, the ultimate victory of a faith that casts out fear, the understanding that God's spirit is at work in his church, the conviction that Jesus Christ, our hope, has established a kingdom in which he shall reign for ever and ever.

Only the person whose mind and heart are anchored to such hitching posts can confidently face what Einstein viewed as a "drift toward unparalleled catastrophe." Only as we can anchor our public policies, our new experiments and our new discoveries to such hitching posts can we hope to avert catastrophe. Here is a tremendous task for the church of Jesus Christ, if it is to be more than a floating island on the sea of relativity —to offer its faith with certainty, to provide a safe harbor for lost ships, to teach those moral absolutes without which even the greatest minds will be all at sea.—K.M.

Dialogue Preaching

IF OUR churches are going in the direction of providing an open chancel with a pulpit on one side and a lectern on the other, perhaps they ought to look into the merits of dialogue preaching.

The way it works in a few churches is to have a second speaker who instead of preaching serves as an "honest inquirer." He is free to interrupt the speaker at any time with kindly but searching questions. This may seem to encourage debate but it need not lead to controversy. The result may be that the congregation gets a refreshing change, the preacher must guard against half-baked ideas, and everyone should be challenged to do some honest inquiring as well as honest searching of the Scriptures on his own.

Although few preachers want it that way, they often find themselves, as one of our own pastors put it, standing "three feet above contradiction." Many of them would gladly forego the compliments and bouquets they receive at the end of the service if they could be assured of some honest inquirers among every congregation.

Dialogue preaching is certainly not new, as any reader of the prophecy of Malachi, to use only one example, will soon recognize. To be effective it ought to result in another kind of dialogue in which each one of us comes face to face with his God to answer such questions as "Why do you persecute me?" or "What is that in your hand?" or Whom shall I send?"—K. M.

"Therefore let us be grateful for receiving a kingdom that cannot be shaken, and thus let us offer to God acceptable worship" (Heb. 12: 28).

A New Headquarters Building

FOR many years the church of the Brethren has given consideration in various ways to the matter of our headquarters location and building. In recent months significant developments have occurred with which the General Brotherhood Board believes the Brotherhood should be acquainted.

The following series of questions represent the ones Brethren are asking and the answers endeavor to reflect the Board's interpretation of the situation.

What decision has been made by the General Brotherhood Board regarding a new headquarters building?

The decision made by the Board in November 1954 approved the erection of a new headquarters building on a new building site in the vicinity of Elgin, Illinois. This decision followed a similar preliminary decision by the Board in 1953 at Colorado Springs, at which time the counsel of Standing Committee was sought and a statement was made to Annual Conference by the chairman of the Board regarding the situation faced by the Board relative to headquarters facilities. Studies of this problem had been made over a period of many years by the Board and staff.

Why did this decision seem necessary at this time?

The present publishing house building is antiquated and inadequate for printing operations and offices.

What is the condition of the present building?

It is a four-story U-shaped structure of mill construction. It was built in three sections, the earliest in 1902 and the latest in 1906. According to a professional analysis of the building, it is inadequate or obsolete in the following respects: production facilities on four floor levels are inefficient and costly; the office plan covering four floors without passenger elevator service is inefficient; the building does not comply with modern building codes and is unsafe as to exits and stairways; the wood frame of the building has sagged at places and been damaged by heavy loads at other places; interior finish is worn and patched from many years of use and expensive to maintain; mechanical equipment is obsolete or worn out, especially the expensive boilers which generate the electric energy.

Would it not seem advisable to remodel the present building?

The Board engaged a competent firm to study the possibilities of the necessary remodeling of the present building. In order to bring both office and publishing facilities up to code requirements and efficient operation, modest remodeling would cost between one half and two thirds of the total cost of a new building on a new site. This would mean the Brotherhood still would have a fifty year old headquarters building after investment of major funds.

Is a new location in Elgin necessary?

In order to remain at the pres-

Chairman, General Brotherhood Board

ent location and erect an adequate building on the present property, it would be necessary to demolish the present building and plan a building to cover the entire property now owned by the Board. The expense of such an operation is prohibitive, to say nothing of the impossibility of being without office and plant facilities for an extended period of time.

Where will the building probably be located in Elgin?

The Board has purchased, subject to proper rezoning, a twenty-seven and one-half acre tract one and one-half miles west of the city limits on West Highland Road.

How much will the building cost?

It is almost imposible to answer this question at this time. No decisions have been made regarding the type of construction, facilities to be included in the building and expenses involved in equipping a new establishment. The architect estimates in very general terms that on the basis of current building rates the total cost may approximate $725,000.

The material for any printing job is set in type and made up for the presses on the third floor and then must be taken to first floor where the presses are located

After being printed the Gospel Messenger and the story papers must then be hauled to the second floor to be folded and then taken to the other wing of the building for addressing and mailing

How does the Board plan to finance this project?

Throughout the years the General Brotherhood Board and Brethren Publishing House have anticipated the time when the church would face the necessity of more adequate headquarters facilities. The boards have held funds in reserve which, when added to the value of the present location and building, should provide nearly two thirds of the necessary finances. The Board is hopeful for modest assistance from the continued favorable operation of the publishing house and the income from undesignated bequests and lapsed annuities. In addition to these resources, the Board believes there will be many of the Brotherhood who will want to assist directly in the erection of this important building.

When will construction begin?

The Board has not projected a time schedule for the building. It will require considerable time to develop building plans. The Board will keep the Brotherhood informed as plans develop.

What values are to be gained for the Brotherhood in erecting such a new building?

First, the Board believes there is long-range economy in erecting a new building. Second, there is opportunity for greatly improving the efficiency of the office and plant services to the Brotherhood. Third, the health, safety and general welfare of those who serve the church at the Brotherhood headquarters is a major concern. Fourth, there is need to have a building that is appropriately designed and identified as the headquarters center of the Church of the Brethren.

Who will be responsible for planning for the new building?

The Board elected a building committee: Paul H. Bowman, chairman, Norman J. Baugher, Joseph Kettering, Floyd Yearout. Associated with the committee are Earl Kurtz, manager of the House, and Robert Greiner, treasurer.

The entire matter will be discussed with the Standing Committee and presented to the Conference at Grand Rapids, Michigan.

"Conversation" Is Behavior

Luther A. Weigle

THE word conversation in the King James Version of the Bible always refers to conduct, behavior or manner of life, and is never used in the sense that it has today as a term for the give-and-take of talk. "The end of their conversation" (Heb. 13:7, K.J) is now translated "the outcome of their life" (R.S.V.). The "vain conversation received by tradition from your fathers" (1 Peter 1:18, K.J.) is "the futile ways inherited from your fathers" (R.S.V.). Lot is said by the King James Version (2 Peter 2:7) to have been "vexed with the filthy conversation" of Sodom and Gomorrah, but it means that he was "greatly distressed by the licentiousness" of these cities. The injunction to the Christian wives of unbelieving husbands expressed in the King James Version of 1 Peter 3:1-2 is confusing to the reader of today: "Likewise, ye wives, be in subjection to your own husbands; that, if any obey not the word, they also may without the word be won by the conversation of the wives; while they behold your chaste conversation coupled with fear." That conveys the impression that these wives are to talk their husbands into becoming Christians, though it seems strange that husbands are to behold the conversation rather than listen to it and one can only wonder what being coupled with fear has to do with it. But there is no word in the Greek for "coupled," and no justification for dragging it in; the word fear stands for the reverent fear of God which is the mark of a good Christian; and the "conversation" of these wives is their behavior. The Revised Standard Version translates the passage: "Likewise you wives, be submissive to your husbands, so that some, though they do not obey the word, may be won without a word by the behavior of their wives, when they see your reverent and chaste behavior."

Writing to the Corinthians Paul, referring to himself as "we," expresses rejoicing in "the testimony of our conscience, that in simplicity and godly sincerity, not with fleshly wisdom, but by the grace of God, we have had our conversation in the world, and more abundantly to youward" (2 Cor. 1:12 in the King James Version). Note how much more clearly this reason for rejoicing is expressed in the translation of the Revised Standard Version: "The testimony of our conscience that we have behaved in the world, and still more toward you, with holiness and godly sincerity, not by earthly wisdom but by the grace of God."

of ethics and religion, while the teacher was answering their questions and asking some of her own, with facility and skill. Even a non-expert could tell that they were really learning fast. What had happened? This situation was transformed into genuine Christian education because teacher training was a part of the denominational education emphasis. Your contributed resources help to support this program. Quite literally, your gifts help to transform the silent, timid, non-learning group of church-school pupils into relaxed, alert, rapidly learning children who will all too soon be the backbone of the adult group in the church and community.

In a Nonsmoke-filled Room

The scene now is in a hotel room of a large city—fortunately nonsmoke filled! Our college leaders are attending a national convention for educators. They have blocked out time to discuss our own educational problems and are now at lunch together. They are eager to train our youth in the best way possible. They are eager to be good stewards of the gifts of our constituency. They are thinking of three thousand students in their charge. They know what they hope the entire church will come to know — that resources used in Christian higher education are literally transformed into trained Christian leadership in the case of the majority of graduates of our colleges. Some general funds of our church each year go to the support of our colleges.

Kept From False "Isms"

Here the scene is in a small underprivileged village overseas. The church mission-relief workers have helped the people to a better way of life. The relief workers know they made a witness for the church. They also know that if they had not come, a Communist organizer would have been successful in winning the loyalty of these poverty-stricken people. Again, quite realistically, the resources of the Christian church helped save these people from some false "isms," and at the same time transformed them into people loyal to a better way of life than any worldly "ism" which may tend to attract them.

Dozens of similar pictures of transformed lives come to mind. Space does not permit their inclusion in this article. But suffice it to know that our interest, our devotion and our resources bring about a great transformation of lives when directed to the work of the Christian church.

Prayer in Action

Edna Phillips Sutton

Silberstein from Monkmeyer

ON MARCH 5 I awakened early. The morning was unusually clear. A thousand stars gleamed against the blue of heaven. The trees and flowers outside my window were visible and the outline of the mountains to the north were clearly outlined against the sky. My soul was saturated by the glory of those translucent moments of early dawn.

Then instantly a terrible flash of red light glowed behind the mountains and reached the full zenith of the sky. The light burned for twenty seconds, then quickly faded away. It was a bomb, one of a series of forty experiments being conducted in the Nevada desert two hundred and seventy miles away.

The daily paper described it. The flash was seen from Washington to Mexico. The force of it rattled windows three hundred and sixty miles away. The cloud of it drifted across the nation and over the Atlantic ocean. The power of it could blot out a city.

Were people frightened? Why should they be? This was evidence of the power which protects America against her potential enemies. If attacked we will instantly retaliate and drop our bombs on the cities of our enemies, destroying millions of helpless men, women and children. We will have to act quickly before they destroy our cities.

What is at stake in this swift and terrible conflict?

General MacArthur, the greatest military authority of modern times, said "The fate of the world will not be settled by force of arms. In an atomic war if you lose you are annihilated; if you win you lose. It contains the germs of double suicide. The hundreds of millions now spent for weapons could abolish poverty from the face of the earth."

What would happen to our enemies the Communists if poverty were abolished from the face of the earth?

If we have nothing to gain and everything to lose in war and everything to gain and nothing to lose by renouncing war why do we go on preparing for it? What has happened to the soul of America that we can accept the policy of such a war and what has happened to the intelligence of America that we believe it? Or do we?

Are there powerful forces intrenched in our government who are gaining wealth from the manufacture of weapons?

What about UMT.? Of what use could massed armies be in a nuclear war?

Recently I heard a retired officer of the infantry say, "Against our potential enemy we would be outnumbered in man power sixteen to one. Air power is the only power that could be effective. Trained armies do not make military sense. It would cost two billion dollars a year and would add nothing to our security. Naval power would not be any more effective than land power. Any retired soldier would tell you the same thing. The UMT program would only give jobs to officers who are not trained for anything else." Is the military force so powerful in our government that we must main-

QUIETNESS

NELLIE V. MERKEY

I sought for quietness.
I sought it everywhere:
But in this busy world with people rushing
In and out, and
To and fro
From morn till night,
I could not find the quietness I sought.

I threw myself completely into things that were to do.
I gave my time,
My strength,
My substance,
But I found new weariness possessing me and far from me had flown the quietness I sought.

And then one day I had to stop—
Stand still, and Wait.
Then frightened, hushed, I heard a voice—!
And lo, the quietness I sought so long and could not find,
Possessed my soul:
And hope and faith
and peace
and joy unspeakable
Were mine — because I learned that quietness is still God's gift.
We know it not unless it comes from him.

Now o'er and o'er he speaks to me again amid the restlessness
That lies around on every side.
And in his voice I find the quietness I need.
Now each new day a new, new road is mine
With comrades of the faith to share my joy.

I labor in his strength.
I spend myself for him, in loving ministry to those I meet.
O priceless joy!
O precious peace!
In quietness I find him by my side.

when my family joins hands in our family circle to sing: "Back of the loaf is the snowy flour." I have had a part in bringing this fuller realization of God to my family through this bread which we bless daily.

An aged sister visiting in our home remarked that one thing she would do differently if she had her life to live over again would be to spend more time with her children. One of the most effective ways we can do this is in shared work experiences. The little hands and the little eyes follow each step of the way. And by these living experiences we transmit unconsciously our Christian faith to our children.

The preparing and serving of food can be more than the mechanical process of fixing it. As we are mindful of the ingredients of a loaf of bread, so should we bear in mind the content and beauty of each food we serve. Is it nutritious and attractive? Will it help to develop strong bodies and clear minds? Will it bring all who eat into a fuller relationship with God? In the service of baking the communion bread at West Green Tree the ministers' and deacons' wives prepare their own lives in worship and consecration to God. This spirit permeates the afternoon's activity and has followed me to my home in the baking of bread in my kitchen. It is an important part of the blessing of the bread, the breaking and the giving.

Attitudes of worship and temperance find expression in many ways in the kitchen; in devotion of self to Christ, in avoidance of overwork, in effective household management and in the combinations and amounts of foods served to avoid waste. Some of the groaning tables of yesterday (or today?) would not have pleased our Master if he had dropped in unexpectedly as a guest. If Christ is the unseen Guest at each meal should we not then be conscious of the type of meal we set before him?

Every kitchen can be a workshop for the growing and unfolding of God's kingdom in our daily lives. Traditionally, the Brethren love feast and communion service have renewed and strengthened in a beautiful manner our relationship to God and his people. This service symbolizes a daily devotion in family and community living. Jesus was known in the blessing and breaking and giving of bread. He is still known in the family where the bread is baked and blessed, broken and shared daily in his name!

Reviews of Recent Books

Books are reviewed here as a service to the church. A review does not necessarily constitute an unqualified recommendation. Purchase can be made through the Brethren Publishing House, Elgin, Illinois. Titles recommended for church libraries are marked with an asterisk (*).—Editor.

Variety in Your Preaching. Lloyd M. Perry, Farris D. Whitesell. Revell, 1954. 220 pages. $2.50.

This book may be helpful to preachers who find themselves in a rut. Strongly urging continued mental and spiritual alertness, the book quotes from many noted preachers and opens windows to many fresh winds of the Spirit. It has a vast amount of variety in the approach to preaching and to preparation for preaching.

The authors are Baptist professors of preaching.—Edward K. Ziegler.

The Faiths Men Live By. Charles Francis Potter. Prentice Hall, 1954. 324 pages. $3.95.

The reader will find in this book a great deal of information concerning the living religions of the world. More than fifty religions—all the alphabetical way from Adventist and Animism to Volunteers of America and Zoroastrianism—are given specific treatment. Many interesting insights and sidelights are given. The author writes from an appreciative rather than critical viewpoint, for he is trying to point out the truth which each religion glimpses rather than the errors it embraces. The popular style of the book makes for easy and delightful reading. Many personal anecdotes and stories add to the charm of the volume. The book will answer many questions you have had and will enable you to avoid giving needless offense to your friends of other faiths. It tips you off that followers of Mohammed dislike having their religion called Mohammedanism after the name of their founder. They prefer Islam. Similarly, Lutherans cringe at Lutheranism. Read this book, act according to the insights it gives you, and followers of other religions will give you credit for being at least a lady or gentleman.—C. Ernest Davis.

The Pure in Heart. W. E. Sangster. Abingdon, 1954. 254 pages. $4.50.

Dr. Sangster has given us in this volume a very readable and extensive study of Christian saints and saintliness in the Catholic, Anglican and Protestant traditions. He shows the development of it, the meaning, limitations, and values. Then he helpfully discusses what saintliness is, using St. Paul's "fruits of the spirit" as a background or measure, and finally he discusses the how of achievement. It is an excellent book. —Charles E. Zunkel.

Interpreting the Bible to Youth. J. T. Carlyon. Abinglon, 1954. 155 pages. $1.00.

To say it is a "must" is pretty strong language, but it is not going too far to guarantee that any teacher or counselor in the youth department can make his work more effective by reading this book. For that matter, many workers with adults would also find it helpful. The fact that the price is only $1.00 should make this book very widely used.

Published by the Board of Christian Education of the Methodist Church, the book is addressed directly to church-school teachers of that denomination. Therefore, certain allowances must be made for references to non-Brethren polity and practice. But except for this very minor compensation, Brethren can eat up Dr. Carlyon's words confident that they are getting good nutrition.—Vernard Eller.

News and Comment From Around the World

Religious News Service

A citation and gifts from the German people were presented to the Brethren Service Commission for the work performed by the agency since the end of World War II. The presentation was made by K. Heinrich Knappstein, German consul general in Chicago (left). Accepting for the church were Norman J. Baugher, general secretary of the General Brotherhood Board (center), and W. Harold Row, executive secretary of the Brethren Service Commission. The citation was signed by President Theodore Heuss of West Germany. Gifts included ten paintings by contemporary German artists and a pair of candlesticks

Bible Society Chooses Theme for World-wide Reading Program

The American Bible Society has chosen Take-Read for the theme of its 12th annual World-wide Bible Reading Program. The theme has been taken from the St. Augustine conversion story. This program has become so popular that last year the Bible Society printed and distributed over 14,000,000 copies of the Scripture reading lists. This year, for the first time, the Society is making this program a Christmas time and Christmas period, extending the readings from Thanksgiving through December 31. Universal Bible Sunday will fall this year on Sunday, Dec. 11.

Southern Baptists Plan Enlarged Radio, TV Program

The Southern Baptist Convention is launching a multi-million dollar program to reach 65,000,000 unchurched Americans through radio and television. Their long-range program calls for immediate extension of the Baptist Hour radio program, the filming of a series of a half-hour color television programs, the distribution of pretested scripts to 30,000 Southern Baptist churches for use on local stations, and the construction of a $200,000 Radio-Television City at Fort Worth, Texas.

Mennonite Farmer Denied Citizenship

A Mennonite farmer has been denied citizenship in California because he said he would not raise crops to feed combat soldiers.

In an examination for naturalization several years ago John Thiesen testified that he could not grow food that would be purchased by the armed forces to enable front-line soldiers to repel an enemy if he knew the food would help the soldiers "kill someone else."

The superior court judge who denied him citizenship said if the citizenship were granted the farmer might in the future refuse to do "some types of work of national importance. . .under civilian direction." The judge insisted that "man's duty to the state and man's duty to God can be reconciled."

Adopt Christian Lawyer's Creed

Lawyers and jurists who attended the first national convention of the Laymen's Fellowship of the Congregational Christian Churches unanimously adopted a Christian Lawyer's Creed and pledged themselves to observe nine rules in their vocation. The rules include the following: (1) Begin the day with prayer and Bible reading; (2) devote time to speaking and service in the church; (3) practice law as if Jesus were at my side at all times; (4) assist those who are un-Christian in their practice to improve their motives; (5) make a Christian influence felt in the bar association; (6) from any church-related business to return such part or all of the fees that one should as a Christian lawyer; (7) never turn aside a request for assistance from a minister; (8) approach work with true humility; and (9) keep in mind one's stewardship to Christ.

Report 6,000 Protestant Welfare Agencies in U. S.

There are at least 6,000 church-related Protestant and Eastern Orthodox welfare agencies and institutions in the United States. This figure was announced by Leonard W. Mayo of New York, chairman of the National Council of Churches' Department of Social Welfare, on the basis of a survey. The first definitive report on such work will be presented at a National Conference on the Churches and Social Welfare to be held in Cleveland, Ohio, next Nov. 1-4. The theme of the conference will be The Churches Respond to the Nation's Needs. Some 2,000 official delegates, consultants and visitors are expected to attend the Cleveland gathering.

CROP Sends Hybrid Corn Seed to Greece

The Christian Rural Overseas Program has shipped on behalf of its many contributors in twenty-two states 420,000 pounds of four varieties of corn seed which will be used to plant around 60,000 acres in Greece. It is expected to yield almost 200,000,000 pounds of corn if growing conditions are favorable. It will yield three times as much as the native Greek variety and thereby substantially help the people of northern Greece.

News Briefs

Nearly 1,000 Southern Baptist foreign missionaries were in active service overseas at the end of 1954, and the Foreign Missions Board spent about $9,500,000 on its work abroad last year. These figures will be given in the annual report of the board to the Southern Baptist Convention annual meeting.

The Netherlands Reformed Church has started a newspaper advertising campaign, paid for by Dutch firms and industries, to propagate its principles among the public. The program will last several months and cost some $40,000. Advertisements, combining slogans and drawings, stress church principles like tolerance and harmony rather than the desire for converts.

West Germany has been experiencing a remarkable drop in divorces. In 1948 there were 19 divorces for every 10,000 inhabitants, whereas in 1953 there were only 10.

Fifteen Christians now hold seats in the new lower House of the Japanese Diet (Parliament), two more than in the previous House. Since there are 467 members the Christian representation is 3.2 per cent. Christians form 0.5 per cent of the total population.

Indian officials are still struggling with the problem of whether or not to allow ships carrying war materials to enter and depart from the country's ports. Two American ships were tied up temporarily towards the end of last year, but were finally permitted to depart. A law placed on the statute books in 1878 by the British authorities prohibits bringing or taking into or out of India any arms shipments.

European press comment on the recent West Coast speech by General Douglas MacArthur has played up prominently his strong remarks about the futility of war and the need of disarmament. Numerous editors criticize the American press for relegating the General's frank statements to a minor place in the news.

Efforts by Soviet Zone Communists to get East German youth to take part in atheist youth dedication ceremonies have proved a failure. Despite pressure by Communists only a small percentage of young people have so far registered for participation. The ceremonies are to be held when a youth reaches the age of fourteen to mark the beginning of adulthood.

In a message striking at "white supremacy" policies and aiming at a restoration of goodwill between the Australian and Asian peoples, the Australian Council for the World Council of Churches has urged that quotas of Asians be admitted as immigrants. The statement was issued from the council's annual meeting at Menangle. A motion was rejected which called for a British majority among immigrants.

A Philippines Christian Rural Life Conference was held in Manila in December 1954, at which about one hundred rural church leaders including a large number of agricultural and rural missionaries from all parts of the Philippines gathered to consider Christian resources for a more effective program among rural people.

Lutheran Refugee Service plans to resettle 15,000 European refugees in the United States within the next year. The agency in which the National Lutheran Council and also the Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod cooperate expects to be able to secure the necessary housing and job assurances for the 15,000 by April 1956.

The German branch of the Pax Christi movement, with headquarters in Aachen, Germany, called upon children in Germany to participate in a world-wide Children's Crusade of Prayer for Peace, an annual event during the Lenten season. The Pax Christi movement encourages Roman Catholics to work and pray for peace. It has some 1,500,000 members in 40 countries.

After the regular Good Friday evening church service, the Greensburg church was treated to an unusual surprise. Mrs. Ruth B. Statler of Somerset, Pa., has been compiling data on the life of Bro. M. J. Brougher, who for over forty years was pastor of the church. After two years' work and hundreds of miles of travel, Mrs. Statler finally completed her work and with several of the first copies from the press she came to Greensburg to deliver them personally to Mrs. Mary Brougher, who so ably served with Bro. Brougher in his charge here. Coming from Hanover, Pa., especially for the occasion, were the Brougher's daughter, Mrs. Gladys Rowland, and their granddaughter, Jacqueline Rowland. After the book presentation, Mrs. Rowland presented Mrs. Statler with a bunch of roses and placed an orchid on her mother, Mrs. Brougher. Like a Living Stone is the title of the biography, suggested from the scripture, 1 Peter 2:5, "Ye also, as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house." Truly Bro. Brougher built up a spiritual house in his long years of service here in Greensburg and this biography is exceptionally complete in many details. It includes many interviews with citizens, ministers, members of the congregation and many nationally known figures of the church, and copies of editorials

The May 1 issue of Parade magazine, distributed with many Sunday newspapers, carried a brief article by Helena Kruger of Annville, Pa. The title of the article was "I Try."

Dr. and Mrs. Curtis Bowman recently returned from a visit to Puerto Rico where they took many excellent films that will be available for showing to churches. The Bowmans will celebrate their thirty-fifth wedding anniversary on June 5.

Miss Doris Eikenberry from the Eaton church in Southern Ohio has been employed to serve as a secretary in the Christian Education offices of the General Brotherhood Board. She succeeds Shirley Stafford, who is planning to enter B.V.S.

Mrs. Otto A. Sanger of Trappe, Md., is the author of a meditation being used on Thursday, May 12, by an estimated ten million people around the world who are readers of The Upper Room, a devotional guide. Mrs. Sanger is a member of the Church of the Brethren in the Mardela District.

Miami church Fla., is interested in contacting all Brethren families living in Miami, Hollywood, West Palm Beach, Ft. Lauderdale and surrounding areas. If you know of any Brethren in those places, please send their names and addresses to Rev. Dorsey E. Rotruck, 585 N.W. 95th St., Miami 38, Fla.

Two Brethren pastors, Wilbur M. and Floyd E. Bantz, tell in recent magazine articles how their churches achieved spiritual and financial results through building fund canvasses. Those interested in reading their stories may secure a free copy of Wells Day magazine by writing to Wells Organization, 222 North Wells St., Chicago 6, Ill.

Sermon manuscripts about the Christian family are being solicited for a book to be published next year by Abingdon Press. Preachers are invited to enter sermons about marriage, parental responsibility, family religion, sex standards, etc. An honorarium of $25 will be paid for each one selected for publication by an editorial committee from the Joint Department of Family Life, National Council of Churches. Two typewritten copies of each manuscript should be submitted to the editor, Rev. J. C. Wynn, 1105 Witherspoon Building, Philadelphia 7, Pa., by the deadline of Aug 10.

The course, The Lands of the Bible, scheduled for the Bethany summer extension school at Juniata College, Aug. 1-6, will be illustrated. Bro. David Wieand will use kodochrome slides taken during his four-month study tour of Bible lands last summer.

All business mail to the Austrian Brethren Service unit should be sent to: Brethren Service Commission, Goethestrasse 63, Linz/Donau, Upper Austria. Personal mail should go to: Brethren Service Commission, Derfflingerstrasse 33, Linz/Donau, Upper Austria. This change of address is necessary because the APO address can no longer be used and any mail sent this way will be returned by postal officials to the sender.

Meadow Branch church, Md., will have a service for laying the memorial stone in the new addition to the church house on Sunday, June 12, at 11:30 a.m. In the stone will be seven articles named by William E. Roop, who gave $12,000 for the erection of a ladies' aid room, a library and a baptistry. Theodore R. McKeldin, governor of Maryland, will assist in the laying of the stone as well as in the morning worship. By adding $36,000 to the Roop bequest, the congregation is also providing improved Sunday-school classrooms and sanctuary and a fellowship hall.

Brotherhood Theme: Seek First His Kingdom

A number of old Brethren books by such authors as J. S. Mohler, D. L. Miller, James Quinter, D. B. Gibson and R. H. Miller, books published in the early nineteen hundreds, may be obtained by contacting Hazel Rothrock at Tonasket, Wash. Be sure to send postage when requesting a book.

Juniata College

Ministers and Students Day for the Middle and Western Pennsylvania and North Atlantic districts was held May 7 at Juniata College. Ministers brought with them high school seniors and Juniata College-minded juniors for a day of campus tours, visiting of classes, an intercollegiate sports event and a general assembly with Paul M. Robinson, speaker.

The editor of the campus weekly newspaper at the college, James D. Hunt of Johnstown, Pa., has been elected president of Student Senate in all-college voting. Other officers elected were: William Z. Smith, Jr., of Waynesboro, vice-president; Betty Ann Beatty of Philadelphia, secretary; and Barry Drexler of Pittsburgh, treasurer.

The Red Cross campaign for blood was held at Juniata on March 16 when a bloodmobile from Johnstown arrived on campus. Students and faculty went all-out for the drive, giving 144 pints of the precious liquid, thus topping the goal which was set for 125 pints for the day. Nurses said it was "one of the smoothest operations" they have witnessed in this area. Co-chairmen of the drive were Nancy Nevin of Alexandria, Va., and Joe Hinish of Curryville.

A gift of $3,000 has been presented to Juniata College by John C. Yenter of Tyrone, contractor, to establish a new scholarship fund in his name. The college now has 34 funds for scholarships. The Yenter scholarship will be awarded each year to a "needy student from Tyrone or Huntingdon" who is academically eligible.

A state-wide convention of the Future Teachers of America was held on the campus Friday and Saturday, March 25 and 26. Approximately 350 college and high school students attended. Kaydonna S. Bubeck, a senior elementary education major at Juniata, was president of the state organization until the meeting in March. She presided at the convention whose theme was All the World Is a Stage—the Teacher Plays His Role.

Rainy Belle Linn of Washington, a senior in home economics here, is one of three former 4-H Club members from Pennsylvania chosen for International Farm Youth Exchange goodwill missions abroad during 1955. She leaves for Luxembourg in June.

All-Class Nite was held at Juniata on April 2. This annual matching of skits by classes was won by the freshman class after a difficult decision by five judges. Each skit had to use a musical theme, 22 minutes and a $15 budget. The winning skit was a "Main Street" scene showing the various events on a big-city street in the passing of one day. The seniors presented a first-niter parody of Broadway, Love Is Sweeping the Country. The juniors did a minstrel and the sophomores gave a review of four years at Juniata called Passed, Present and Future.

The district contest of the Pennsylvania Forensic and Music League was held on the campus on March 29. Cambria County walked off with the highest percentage of winning contestants for the day. Approximately 200 students from 20 high schools in a 13-county area participated in the one-day event. Winners were certified to compete in the state finals at York, Pa.

"I Was in Prison . . ."

Sarah Miller, Norma Switzer, Virginia Holderread

A VISITOR would probably notice what is apparently a private girls school or college nestled in a valley in the Allegheny Mountains and secluded from the "outside." Here and there are seen attractive Georgian style cottages with girls in print dresses walking to and fro. This illusion is a bit shattered when we think of the guarded gate which we went through and the book that was signed.

This is Alderson, W. Va., the only federal reformatory for women in the United States. This is where three B.V.S.'ers are trying to show their Christian witness to nearly 600 women. There are about an equal number of Negro and white women here. About 400 are Protestant and 200 Catholic. Over one half of the girls (fifteen to sixty-five) are here for narcotics and forgery. Others are here for prostitution, bank robbery, kidnapping and murder. How can B.V.S.'ers help women with such varied backgrounds to know a different way of life?

When the B.V.S.'er arrives, she is assigned to a job seven hours a day. It may be in orientation where the girls spend their first three weeks, in the mailroom censoring letters or in the storehouse seeing that the food, clothing and supplies are delivered. In each of these jobs the B.V.S.'er comes in contact with the women.

In orientation a B.V.S.'er does many things. The mornings are usually spent checking work assignments that the girls have done, taking them to the clinic for shots and sick call or to the school building for tests which will reveal their I. Q. and their talents for certain jobs. The girls spend their afternoons altering and hemming the clothing that has been issued to them until it fits, and learn how to darn and patch. Since many of these girls have never sewn or darned before, they need an instructor who in this case is a B.V.S.'er. As soon as the girls find out that she isn't a "cop" they begin to ask questions and are always amazed to find "somebody who'd go to jail that did not have to." This is one of the finest chances for Christian witness a person can have.

Virginia Holderread, Brethren volunteer, at work in the storehouse filling a food requisition with some of the girls

In the storehouse she has an opportunity to work side by side with these women. She is on hand to aid a girl in carrying a heavy box or listen to problems. Everything that is used at the reformatory must be requisitioned from the storehouse. The B.V.S.'er sees that the food requisitions are filled and delivered to the kitchen cottages. She also helps fill clothing, cleaning supplies and kitchen orders. Some of the food is locked in cabinets to prevent the girls getting in trouble if found with it. During holidays, "hooch" is often discovered in some hidden spot for the day when it is ready to drink. Fifteen girls work here and each has a responsibility in carrying out the work.

The mailroom is a constant rustle of activity when mail comes in from all over the world. All the mail must be censored before it is delivered to the women. During the holidays there are always extra cards and during Christmas the girls can receive packages, which must be opened and inspected. This year they could receive four pounds of candy and nuts from home. Whether it is the weather report from Fairbanks, Alaska, or pictures of a diaper-clad baby from California the letters bring "home" a little closer for the girls. News from those they love is very important. It is like a thread of hope from the "outside."

Visitation comes when the working day is over and the girls are in their rooms. We are often encouraged by a girl's comment, "When are you going to see my knitting?" or "I have a picture of my baby that I want you to see." They love to show off their accomplishments which many thought they would never be able to do. Being a good listener and always ready with praise may seem like very little to do, but mean so much to a girl who is looking for self-confidence. Through visitation we get to know more about what living really meant to these girls on the "outside." The girls often tell us things they would never tell a police officer.

There are many opportunities for a B.V.S.'er on the "inside" to show Christ's way. The job is not all fun but a great challenge. "I was sick and ye visited me: I was in prison, and ye came unto me . . ."

Citizenship Training Institute

When: June 20-23, 1955
Where: Grand Rapids, Mich., following Annual Conference.
Sponsored: Jointly by the Brethren Service Commission and Christian Education Commission of the General Brotherhood Board and the Grand Rapids Church of the Brethren.

Does your church have a concern for community problems? Does your church have a concern for the welfare of youth in your conmmunity? A concern for creative citizenship? A concern for political responsibility? Does your church have a concern for temperance and moral welfare—for social welfare? If so, this institute is for you. It will help you and your church leaders to find new opportunities and ways to relate themselves and their church to their communities and its problems.

Who should attend? Youth counselors and sponsors, local and district; Youth Citizenship chairmen, local, district and regional; temperance and moral welfare workers, local and district (including women's work temperance director); women's work peace and citizenship directors, local and district; men's work representatives, local and district; and Brethren Service workers responsible for citizenship, social education and action, local and district.

James Renz, temperance director, will be the director of the institute, assisted by Robert Nelson, pastor of Grand Rapids Church of the Brethren. Resource leaders will be Ed Crill, youth department, and Ralph Smeltzer, social education director.

Cost will be $5.00 registration (including study materials); $4.00 per day for board and room; travel pool, $5.00.

Plan to attend personally or secure someone to represent your group. Deadline for registration is May 31. Send registration to James Renz, Citizenship Training Institute, General Brotherhood Board, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill.

More assurances are needed for refugee families.
Our "real obligation" is threefold:
—to our suffering fellow men to whom we can give this chance;
—to our Congress and the President who have complied with our request;
—most of all, to Christ, our Lord and Master, because these are his "little ones," our brothers and sisters.

STUDENT EXCHANGE

German students get together and share pictures of their life in the United States

ESPECIALLY, I am aware now of the important part the exchange program plays in approaching the goal of mutual national concern for one another. In case we have never seen a country or the people thereof, we mind very little what they are doing, as long as they don't bother us. But this is as bad as living absolutely isolated from one's neighbors next door, because peace and understanding does not only require leaving the other one alone, letting him mind his own business, but being concerned about him, helping him, talking to him and having him as a friend. However, we only can love him and respect him if we learn to know him. That is the same for the nations; if they do not know one another they cannot love and live in peace with one another. . ." Guenter Erbel, exchange student, 1953, wrote these significant words after his return to Germany.

The student exchange program is now seeking homes for students that will come in August to spend a year in the United States. These students will live with American families, attend high school, church and community activities. As Guenter stated above, nations cannot love and live in peace with one another if they do not know one another. And living together is the best way of learning to know one another. Through this exchange American communities will learn about another nation and each student will carry a picture of America to his home community.

If your family would like to have an extra brother or sister for a year from Europe or from Central or South America write: John Eberly, Student Exchange Program, Brethren Service Center, New Windsor, Md.

We hope that many families and churches who have not yet had a student will respond.

Aids for the Home and Family Life Program

Two sets of the play, Point of Beginning, a new Temperate Zone play, have been placed in the Brethren Loan Library. The Temperate Zone plays are all produced through the American Theatre Wing, which is a production organization set up by professional people in the play field to write plays for churches, welfare and educational organizations. This particular play was produced for the United Council of Church Women but it is completely suitable for any church to use at any time of the year. The play is intended to be either read or given from memory, and to be followed by an hour of discussion.

Churches wanting to purchase copies rather than borrowing them should write directly to the Publication and Distribution Department, National Council of Churches, 120 E. 23rd St., New York 10, N. Y. The price for a complete set is $5. Single copies of the script are $1.

Does your church library have a subscription for Public Affairs Pamphlets, 22 East 38th St., New York 22, N. Y.? Twenty-five booklets are currently listed for the special price of $3.95 (a saving of 35%)—all in the field of marriage and family life. A year's subscription to Public Affairs Pamphlets costs $2.50. This would be a worthwhile addition to any church library.

A copy of a sound filmstrip, Do You Know Your Adolescents? has just been approved for promotion and the copy has been added to the Audio-Visual Library of the General Brotherhood Board, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill. The rental is $2.50 and the purchase price is $10. It has two 78 rpm records and sixty-nine frames in black and white with a manual. It is a segmented sound filmstrip in four parts designed as a discussion filmstrip for parents' groups in the church.

A film, Head of the House, a 16 mm. sound film in black and white, approximately thirty-seven minutes in length, is available from the Mental Health Material Center, Inc. Room 713, 1790 Broadway, New York 19, N. Y. The rental charge is $6.

This is a really significant film on juvenile delinquency that roots back to parental mistakes — related particularly to the father's responsibility for child guidance in the home. It would be more effective if a psychologist or child guidance person or a parent expert could lead the discussion following.

Wandali and Its People

Robert A. Hess
Wandali, Nigeria

HOW far is twenty miles? To most Americans it is about a half-hour's drive not even far enough for Sunday afternoon's recreation. In Africa it depends on the season. In the dry season when the roads are good twenty miles is not quite an hour's drive. In the rainy season it may mean hours on a bicycle because the roads are impassable for an automobile. In either case it is a long distance because the price of gasoline is more than sixty-five cents a gallon and motor parts are expensive and hard to get. To the African twenty miles is a long journey, for he goes on foot.

Wandali is just twenty miles from Biu, which is the headquarters for this territory. Biu accepted the British when they came about 1900 and has co-operated in helping to administer the area. It has rapidly taken on features of Western culture.

Not so Wandali. The twenty miles have only in recent years (perhaps ten or fifteen) been accessible by motor from Biu and then only in dry season. During the rains the road becomes a series of ditches and gullies, and motor transport comes to a muddy halt until the next dry season when the gullies are filled in. This means that Wandali is in one of the more backward areas of Bura land.

The capital which flows from British government projects and from other Western contacts has not reached this section in quantity. Money is a scarce item and a penny goes a long way. Six pennies will buy one about two pounds of shelled peanuts and peanuts are the most profitable crop a farmer can plant.

Because of the scarcity of money the products of the West such as soap, kerosene and cloth found in abundance in most African markets are hard to get and expensive. The traders have not been drawn here to any great extent and those who have sell their few articles carried to our markets on their heads at very handsome profits. There are only three bicycles in Wandali village besides those owned by the one family of missionaries. One of these three is the property of the mission and is used by the village pastor. Another is owned privately by the mission dispenser. Only the third is owned by a person not connected with the mission. In Africa where the bicycle has become widely used as a means of travel this points out the scarcity of goods and the isolation of the area. In the eyes of the people the missionary is one with all other Europeans. They hold a very confused conception of the purpose of the mission. They are impressed with the knowledge and authority the white men gain because of scientific and educational advantages. They are likely to hold the childlike opinion that a white man can do anything if he wishes. And why not? Look at the unending array of gadgets and supplies he brings to the mission station. While a missionary lives on a reduced scale in contrast to those in his homeland, his possessions outnumber those of the people of the country so greatly as to be overwhelming. This is particularly true in a backward area such as Wandali. I have witnessed exclamations of surprise over the use of adhesive tape.

All this tends to cause the people to have a very dependent attitude toward the missionary. They come to look to him as the source of Western materialism. They expect him to provide employment and then act as a market where they may purchase supplies. The people of this area will come for miles asking the missionary to sell his soap and kerosene. And he is confused and disappointed when you refuse to sell and tell him that your purpose is not to run a market. He looks to the missionary as his master and that to him is reason enough to obligate you to supply his commercial needs.

Then, too, he often thinks of the missionary as a sort of professional hunter. He is surprised to find that your only purpose in coming to his village is to visit him. He looks for your gun, for he has an almost supernatural respect for the Westerner's rifle, and if he does not see one he asks where it is. When he realizes that you have come not for game but to visit with him he is impressed.

There are probably many other false concepts about the missionary, but the most discouraging one, both to the missionary and to the African, is that white men and black men seem two entirely different species. White men seem so much greater and more intelligent than black men that the black man can never hope to be able to know the things the white man knows. He listens to stories of American Negroes with unbelief and is sure that black men in America only dig ditches and own very few of the gadgets of America. He sees only one way to have the much desired things the white man possesses—that is to get them from the white man. It is, therefore, very important to be courteous and show much respect to the white man, but they show little enthusiasm to improve their own abilities.

Hence the response to the mission program is slow. Schools struggle along with hardly enough students to make the hiring of teachers worth while. The government is hesitant to subsidize schools with such low enrollment and is attempting to influence the people to attend school through the local rulers. Yet classes remain small and the future of government support for such schools remains dubious.

In this respect the Wandali area is in contrast to neighboring Bura areas. Marama, Shafa and Garkida can hardly find enough classroom space to meet the present enthusiastic drive for more education. Perhaps when the people of Wandali see more clearly the work of their missionary and the importance of education in the culture he represents we, too, will have a space problem in our schools.

It goes without saying that Christianity has difficulty taking root amidst the confusion which lies in the minds of the people of this area concerning the new culture in their midst and especially the missionary. Although our predecessors had a vigorous program of visiting the surrounding villages in the ten years the mission has been here, not one class of religious instruction and only one church of four members have been established in villages other than Wandali proper.

The Wandali church has grown through the years largely through the efforts of a trained local pastor. He has done an excellent job of interpreting the Christian faith to the people and has helped the people to understand better the strange white people who live among them.

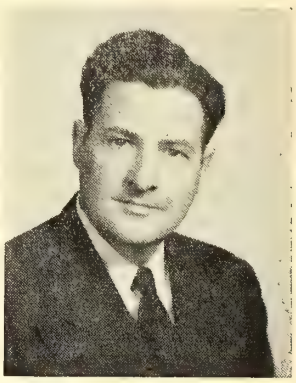
The Wandali area is a backward area at this time and somewhat isolated, but the road is being improved and contacts are being made with the outside with increasing frequency. The people are awakening to the possibilities before them. They are beginning to look more and more toward the mission dispensary and school. And as their thinking is broadened beyond the capacity of their old religious practices to serve their spiritual needs, they are looking to the Christian church. The times are ripening and we look toward a gratifying harvest for the years of effort spent here at Wandali.

Out of the Mailbag

Susan Shull of Dahanu and D. J. Bhonsale of Palghar participated in the Adult Literacy Conference, March 14-18. Plans for a mammoth literacy drive call for the training of teachers and lay leaders with the aim of strengthening the church in the Marathi-speaking area through improved literacy conditions.

On Feb. 6 and 7 the Vada congregation celebrated its first anniversary in their new church building. Bro. Prabhaker Ranadive was licensed to preach and two girls were baptized.

From Earl Zigler: "I have been tremendously busy recently on Elders' Meeting and Joint Council work. Just helped to ordain two new elders and to license two new ministers. Continually new challenging contacts are made with people whom we find vitally interested in Christianity. Remember us always in your prayers."



Ernest Shull writes: "These are difficult days, but we are not discouraged. The church in India is growing into an indigenous church."

Musa (Moses) Mbaya and his wife, Bata, were the first man and wife baptized together at Wandali

The Full Ministry of the Church

James H. Beahm
Pastor of First Church, Chicago

THE churches of Chicago are faced with an unusual opportunity and a great responsibility because it is a city of many races and a moving population. The sociologists studying these population movements predict that the area of First church will before many years be rather heavily populated with Negroes. I personally doubt if this will come about as soon as predicted and to the degree that has been expected. But our church has long been an interracial church in some sense of the word and any population changes should not make any difference in our policy and attitude.

For a long time we have provided a meeting place for the Chinese in their Sunday school and worship which are held each Sunday afternoon. We have hoped to bring about a little more integration into the whole life of the church and in some ways that is true. I have been glad to note that they consider the pastor of First Church their pastor although his contacts with them are somewhat fragmentary. My first baptism and my first wedding here were Chinese and quite a number through the years have been baptized into the Church of the Brethren and are loyal members here, although they meet with their segregated group on Sundays. More of the details about the Chinese work here have been written by one well qualified to tell of the history and work with the Chinese, Bro. Elgin Moyer, who has given faithful service for many years in this area of the church's program.

As far as ministering to the Negroes is concerned, we have not been too aggressive. We have had through the years one or two members but there has been no great attempt at drawing them in from distances in the city. It seems that our role should be to stand ready to welcome them into our services and into our fellowship if and when they become an actual part of this community. Some serious attempt has been made to welcome Negro boys into our Scouting program and we do have several boys now active. At least we want to be thought of as being friendly to them. Some time ago several families moved into the community and a group of our people, including the pastor, went to visit them and invited them to our church. However, none of them ever came and it was not long until these families moved elsewhere. We have discovered that they are just like people of any other color or race—we must go out to win them; they do not flock into the church automatically and take over everything as some people seem to expect them to do.

We have had a number of committees studying the goals and policies of the church and the reports of these committees, which were adopted by official action of the church, were very gratifying in the direction of being an interracial church in a more aggressive sense.

One of our most recent challenges has come to us because of the Puerto Rican families which have moved into our community. The Puerto Rican immigration to this city has been tremendous and many of them have come to the community of our church because they have had contacts with the Brethren at Castañer in the hospital unit there administered by the Brethren Service Commission. We felt that because of this fact we had not only a great opportunity but a tremendous responsibility. We made some attempts to minister to them by having a Spanish-speaking Sunday-school class and some other occasional activities. However, our contacts were not at all adequate and we began to see that we would have to reach out to them with a more active and positive program.

For several months now we have been working in a greatly expanded ministry; Ignacio Rivera, who is a minister from Castañer, is in Chicago with his family, completing his seminary work, having finished college and one year of graduate study in Puerto Rico. Through the combined support of the Brethren Service Commission, the Ministry and Home Missions Commission, and some interested individuals, Bro. Rivera is being supported in a ministry to the Puerto Ricans in our community. He is doing a great deal in the area of personal help in assisting them to make necessary adjustments to this community. He has classes in English, in Bible study, recreation and social activities. Through these contacts we hope to integrate many of these people into the life of the church. Bro. Rivera is listed as a pastoral assistant and is proving to be that in many ways. He makes reports through the pastor to the ministerial board and his name is listed on our regular Sunday bulletins. In these ways we hope to help to integrate the Puerto Ricans and also to help our people to be more willing to accept them as brothers in Christ. Through social activities together with them and our people we hope to develop a greater degree of friendly understanding.

And now we have opened our church in a co-operative program with the Chicago Board of Education in having classes in English for non-English-speaking people. These classes are held in our parish house twice a week and the teacher is supplied by the city school system. We hope this may help increase our outreach and provide a fuller ministry to the people of our community.

Anniversaries and Weddings

Anniversaries

Brother and Sister Andrew D. Jensma of Prairie City, Iowa, celebrated their golden wedding anniversary April 10, 1955, in the Prairie City church. A reading of a golden wedding ceremony by Pastor Edward Zook was followed by open house in the church social room. They have five children and five grandchildren.—Mrs. Merlin Brewer, Prairie City, Iowa.

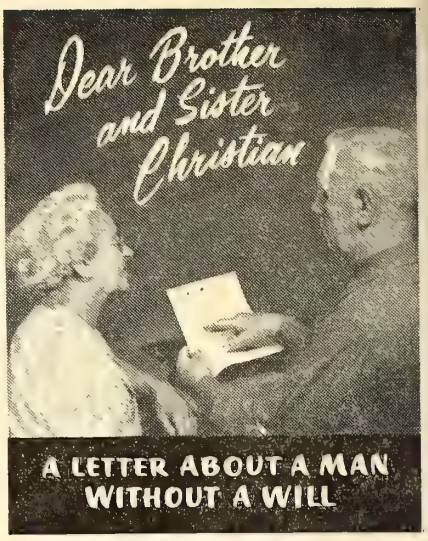
Roanoke—Our two B.V.S. workers, Jo Ann Newkirk and Jane Pheasant, began their work with us the first of February. On Sunday morning, Feb. 6, the McPherson College quartet and Bro. Glenn Swinger, director of public relations at McPherson College, were with us. Our regular quarterly council was held Sunday afternoon, March 6. The women met at the home of Mrs. Ruby Butson for their March 9 Bible study. On March 16 the ladies' aid met for an all-day sewing meeting in the home of Mrs. J. B. Firestone. Our spring love feast was held on the evening of Good Friday.—Mrs. Johnnie L. Morse, Iowa, La.

Northern Indiana



Pleasant Hill—As a result of the revival meetings five were received into the church by baptism and fifteen were reconsecrated into the life of the church. Two persons are waiting to be received into the church fellowship. Our sanctuary has been remodeled giving us four additional classrooms. Marjorie Pepple is serving a year in B.V.S. at Fresno, Calif. Two of our men went to Washington, D.C., opposing the U.M.T. Reserve Bill. We held a school of missions during the month of January. A birthday fellowship supper was held at the church on March 12. Our love feast was held April 9 followed by a breakfast on Easter morning.—Mrs. Mary L. Felger, Churubusco, Ind.

Rock Run—Roy Swihart, who was recently licensed to the ministry, spoke on Thanksgiving morning. Mrs. Nettie Weybright showed pictures and talked about her trip to several of our missions in the East. The young people have charge of the evening service the last Sunday of each month. One class in the Sunday school purchased folding doors for the church. The women knotted comforters and sewed garments for relief. Goldie Swartz spoke at one of their meetings. The men's work group is raising from twelve to fiften heifers for relief. On the afternoon of Feb. 27, a group from Manchester College gave a musical program. The Topeka public school choir presented the evening program on March 13. At Christmas time the children put their money in little stockings for a family whose father is unable to work after being stricken with polio.—Mrs. Chester A. Huber, Goshen, Ind.

Southern Indiana

Fairview—Our pastor, Bro. Dale Gibboney, and his wife attended the regional conference at North Manchester. We have a family night each month. Programs have included the films, Simon Peter and Reaching From Heaven, and a talk by Bro. Galen Lehman, regional secretary. In February some Negro people from the LaFayette Baptist church were with us for a service. Recently a dedication service was held for several babies. We have a 75% Messenger Club this year. The annual minister's conference was held at our church on Feb. 12 with Bro. Paul Robinson, president of Bethany Seminary, and Charles Zunkel of Elgin as guest speakers. The children's department has participated in the friendship packets, Christmas stocking and Navajo Indian projects. Several of our members attended the World Day of Prayer meeting at the Plymouth church. Some of our people also attended the convocation services at Manchester College.—Hattie Peter, La Fayette, Ind.

Nettle Creek, Brick—A committee of nine members met and made plans and decisions to assist in the reorganization of this congregation known as the Nettle Creek congregation for the past 135 years and having three houses of worship for more than 96 years. Each group was asked to meet in council, select a name for its new organization and begin functioning as a separate congregation, ready to be Beaverton—Our school of Christian living which was conducted each Sunday evening for two months closed on Sunday evening, March 13. Three age groups met each week with the adults studying, The Christian Home, the young people, Boy and Girl Friendships, and the children, Friends at Work. Two films have been shown recently, Barabbas the Robber and Journey Into Faith. Holy Week services were conducted with Bro. Paul Bowman of Manchester College as speaker. Our church participated in the union Good Friday services. The young people were in charge of the Easter sunrise service and breakfast. A vacation church school will be held again this summer. At our business meeting we adopted the organizational plan which was presented by the committee in the September meeting. Delegates chosen to represent our church at the Annual Conference are Anna Rupp and Elma Rau. District meeting delegates are Edward Schnepp, Irene Parker and Martha Maier. We are preparing to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of the dedication of our church on June 5, with an all-day meeting and a basket dinner at the noon hour. A special effort is being made to contact all former members and former pastors and to extend to all an invitation to attend. Bro. Ernest Jehnsen will be leaving our church as full-time pastor the first of September to become full-time district executive secretary.—Elma Rau, Beaverton, Mich.

Baltic—Christmas services were rendered by the children and young people's departments of both churches. Both the Baltic and Sugarcreek ladies' aids packed Christmas boxes for the shut-ins. A family night service was held at the Baltic house on Jan. 13 and at the Sugarcreek house on Jan 14. The film on stewardship, For Good or Evil, was shown. We have a 100% Messenger Club again this year. Our pastor, Bro. Guy S. Fern, was in charge of a period of meditation each Friday in January over the local radio station. Our regular council meeting was held March 1 with Elder Harlan C. Grubb presiding. We elected our pastor and his wife as delegates to Annual Conference at Grand Rapids. Our church at Sugarcreek co-operated with the community Lenten services. Bro. Harlan C. Grubb held a week of meetings in the Sugarcreek church April 25—May 1. Love feast services were held at the Baltic house on May 1.—Mrs. Guy S. Fern, Baltic, Ohio.

A Guide for Curriculum in Christian Education

This new book will replace the 1946 publication. It is completely revised and restyled "Curriculum Guide for the Local Church."

Others say, "After reviewing this book I am convinced those who prepared the manuscript have done a splendid piece of work. The Guide should be of practical help to both staff members of denominational boards and local church leaders. Teachers in church schools will understand the scope of their task better after reading this book."

Descriptions of actual situations are helpful. Every church library should place a copy on its shelf for the use of all interested in curriculum in Christian Education. 176 pages. Cloth. $2.50 members from our church attended the school in Christian living, a six-week session at the Euclid Avenue Baptist church, in which our pastor served as dean. Once a month we have had a series of Sunday family nights with guest speakers to include Representative Frances P. Bolton, Kermit Eby, Arthur Hess and W. D. Shoemaker, minister and contractor of the new Painesville church. During the week of Feb. 10 we had a National Christian Teaching mission directed by Galen Lehman, which included a self-study of our sixteen groups and a religious census of the neighborhood. The children's department has met monthly on Saturdays for a missionary study and activity program. At Thanksgiving they packed baskets and at Christmas time they gave baby garments for the Africa mission, where Dr. and Mrs. John Hamer are located. The adults also included a white gift offering for the Hamers' work. The ladies' circle has contributed towards the Inter-City Mission project and has made children's garments for World Community Day project. The circle is in close association with the Cleveland Council of Church Women. We received thirty-eight new members last year which brings our membership to a total of 248, a net increase of nearly 50% in the past 3

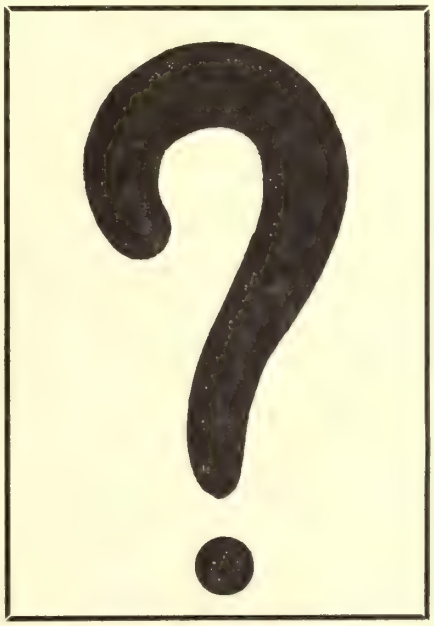
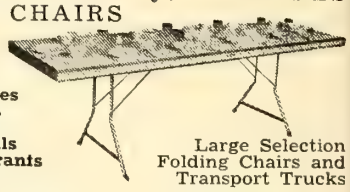
East Petersburg—City Life was the theme for our school of missions in January. One feature of the school was the contribution given by representatives from the Pilot House in Baltimore. Since our church has three workers on the Africa mission field we were keenly interested in the messages brought to us recently by Roy and Violet Pfaltzgraff, Clarence and Lucille Heckman and Emma Snyder. Frank Carper showed pictures and talked about his trip to the Holy Land. The women's work has sponsored the packing of the friendship packets for overseas relief and the stockings for local institutions. Boxes of food and useful articles were distributed to the guests at the Neffsville Brethren Home by the intermediates. They also took part in the regular midweek prayer services at the home. Layettes and comforters have been made and shipped to New Windsor for overseas relief. In Jaunary the women invited the women from the various churches in the town to meet for a regular meeting. At the March meeting a group of women from the Bareville church presented a program which centered about the thought of the suffering Christ. Our church was host for the community World Day of Prayer. Elder Milton G. Hershey of Manheim conducted our evangelistic services Feb. 27—March 13. Fourteen persons were received into our church by baptism. Our church and the East Fairview church exchanged pulpits for the pre-Easter service.—Edith A. Eichelberger, East Petersburg, Pa.



Elizabethtown—Matthew Meyer was ordained to the ministry. Dr. and Mrs. Paul Petcher, our missionary representatives to Africa, spoke and showed pictures. A reorganization of our choir produced a chapel choir composed of young people of junior and senior high ages. Our school of missions included Donald Shank, F. S. Carper, and Rev. Inayat Masih as guest speakers. Willard Hackman, Shirley Raffensperger and Betsy Wenger assisted in the worship service in observance of Youth Week. Several of our women are participating in the newly organized United Council of Church Women in Elizabethtown. During the Sunday evening services in February, Pastor Zuck conducted a prayer clinic using Bonnell's The Practice and Power of Prayer as a basis for discussion. In March Bro. Stewart Kauffman was guest speaker for our revival meetings. Following these meetings there were a number of applicants for baptism. Bro. Elmer Hoover was evangelist for the Swatara Hill church. Both the Swatara Hill and Stevens Hill churches are in the midst of building and alteration programs. Work on our new church continues with the completed building becoming more and more a reality.—Mildred B. McDannel, Elizabethtown, Pa.

Sugar Valley—Various programs have included the religious film, Shadows of Glory, slides of the work among the American Indians of Central America, a Bible institute with Bro. A. C. Baugher as leader, a week of union Bible school with the offerings being used for leper work and guest speaker, Emma Ziegler, missionary to India. Laura M. Boone attended the National Youth Conference at Anderson, Ind. Our evangelistic services were conducted by Linford Rotenberger of Quakertown. As a result of the meetings, twenty-one were baptized into our church. Our Christmas program offering was sent to the American Bible Society to be used in sending New Testaments to Russia. The ladies of our church are sewing cut garments from New Windsor for relief. Our church joined the Lutheran and E.U.B. churches of the community in holding Lenten services during Lent. Bro. Robert Byerly of Elizabethtown College was guest speaker for our Bible institute in April. Being isolated from other Brethren groups, our church co-operates with other denominations.—Hester Bartges, Loganton, Pa.



Western Pennsylvania

Mount Joy—Dr. E. Lloyd Cunningham gave a missionary message to our church. He and his family were on their way to the India mission field. Our achievement offering was received at this service. The contributions of fruit and vegetables that were displayed at the harvest home service were donated to the old folks' home at Windber. Bro. Carl Myers of the Roaring Spring church conducted a week of evangelistic meetings in our church. Nine were baptized following this meeting. Our church delegates to district meeting were Bro. John Geary, Mrs. Frank Sollenberger and Lois Horner, The exterior of the church and the basement were painted by the men of the church. Horst Lobe, a German B.V.S. worker, was guest speaker at a morning service in December. The morning Christmas service, On Judea's Hills, was presented by the children of the Sunday school and in the evening the young people presented a candlelight program, The Light of Men. The young people planted and harvested a crop of corn and also collected used nylon hose to be sent to Germany to be used in making of rugs. We were host church to seventh circuit young people's meeting in February The annual father and son banquet was held on March 4 at the church with Prof. Samuel Jones as guest speaker. The Somerset male chorus under the direction of Ernest Statler presented a program of music and verse on March 20.—Lois Horner, Mount Pleasant, Pa.

Scalp Level—A school of missions for all age groups was held Sunday evenings during January and February. A religious census was taken by the church of our community. The churches also joined in union Lenten services each Thursday evening during Lent and a Good Friday service. Our church council authorized a 100% Messenger Club as a home mission project financed by the mission fund. A dedication service was held for the house adjacent to the church which is now being used for Sunday-school classes. A letter writing campaign against UMT and legalized gambling in Pennsylvania was conducted recently. On Jan. 30 our young people had charge of the morning devotions and presented a program in the evening. They were also in charge of the Easter morning service and the choir presented a program in the evening. Jack Wilt has begun his B.V.S. service. Miss Leisel Grupe, a German exchange student who resides with Bro. Kissinger in Windber, was guest speaker at the Hopeful Band class meeting. We observed the One Great Hour of Sharing. Five young men recently elected as deacons were installed at this service. A study in the history and message of the Old Testament is being conducted by Bro. Boose on Sunday evenings. A six-week course in training for Christian service began March 21 with our assistant elder, Bro. I. C. Paul, as instructor. Individuals and groups have been providing memorial baskets of flowers for the altar. Our ladies' aid activities include quilting and supervision of relief goods. Work may begin on the new church this summer. Our love feast and communion service was held May 1.—Mrs. A. J. Casseday, Windber, Pa.

Florida and Georgia

Orlando, Highland Community — Bro. Perry Huffaker of West Milton, Ohio, was with our church for a singspiration and worship program. The women's fellowship group is making dish towels for the Puerto Rico hospital. One of our young men, Leroy Preston, was licensed to the ministry. Our attendance has been good this winter and we appreciate the interest of the tourists. For midweek meetings we have been studying the Doctrine of the Church by D. W. Kurtz. Bro. David Webster will begin his pastoral work with us the first of July. We had a farewell supper for Bro. Biddix and his family on the evening of March 23. Our love feast was held on Thursday evening prior to Easter Sunday.—Mrs. Viola Preston, Orlando, Fla.

Sebring—Sixteen new members have been received into our fellowship since our last report—six by baptism and ten by letter. Our united choirs presented a Christmas cantata, The Star in the Sky. The junior choir sang carols at the women's club. Bro. Perry Huffaker led us in a hymnsing. A few assisted in the work camp at Camp Ithiel. Some of our folks have visited the migrant camps and our own home mission churches at Lorida and Arcadia. Mr. Joseph H. Anderson, president of the Prison Missionary Association, told of the needy work of taking Christ to the prisoners. Brother and Sister Harper S. Will were in our midst for our annual Bible conference. The cost of our church building is paid; so on the Sunday which was our fifth anniversary of the dedication of our new building, we lifted an offering for the church in Puerto Rico. The women's work group sent our hospital in Puerto Rico twenty-four sheets. The women also sent money and clothing to Korea, New Windsor and elsewhere. Our CBYF sponsored a musical program under the supervision of their counselor, Bro. Quinter Liskey. Recent pictures shown have been A Boy and His Bible and The Neighbor Next Door. Our church has co-operated in the noonday Lenten services. Choice public plays sponsored by the women's work group were Christ the Answer, A Lamp Unto My Feet, and the Lost Sheep which was climaxed by Dr. Cottrell's missionary appeal. We welcomed the many tourists and winter guests who worshiped with us, but we missed all those who could not be with us this winter because of illness. —Mrs. M. Lucile Painter, Sebring, Fla.

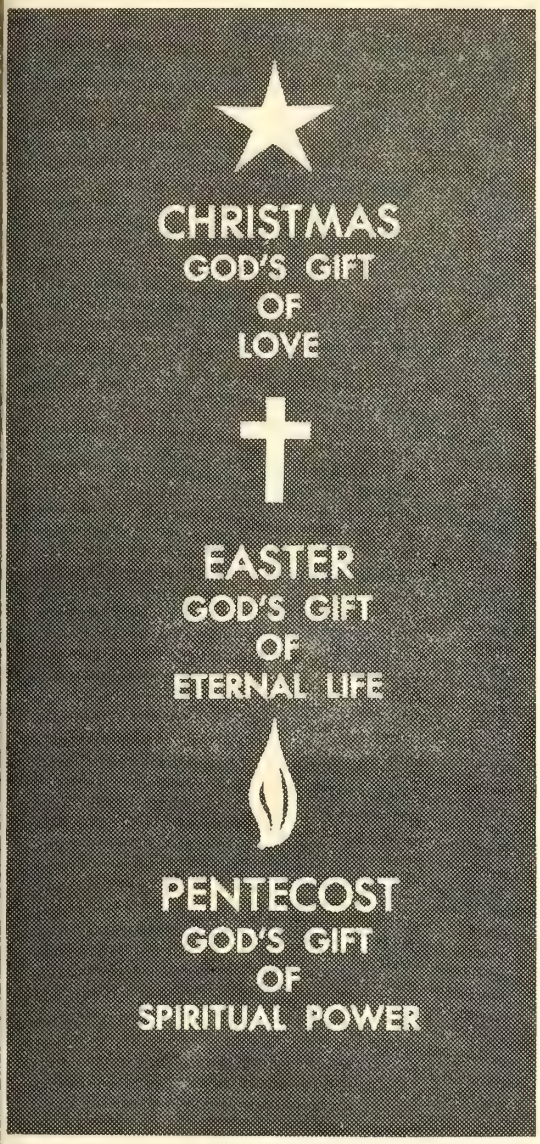
Eastern Maryland

Baltimore, First—In December the cantata, The Story of Christmas, was presented in our church by sixty members of the senior choir of the Milford Mill high school. Memorial chimes were presented to the church by the Silver Star class in memory of Bro. Homer Miller. The annual Christmas program, A Song in the Air, was given the Sunday evening before Christmas. The music guild sponsored a special concert by a group of the B. & O. men's glee club. At our first missions' family night of the year, Dr. and Mrs. Newton Long, Jr., were with us, having just returned from work with the Navajo Indians. On March 13 Brother an Sister Galen Wolfe, recently returned from service, took us on a visit to Ecuador. Open house was held at the new Pilot House on March 27.—Helen A. Vance, Baltimore, Md.

Piney Creek—Our church met in regular council on March 13. We are installing a water system in the church. The Petchers were with us in January sharing some of their experiences on the Africa mission field.—Mrs. Birnie Bowers, Littlestown, Pa.

Tennessee

French Broad—Dr. and Mrs. Paul Petcher and their two children visited in our church and with Bro. Petchers' parents Jan. 30—Feb. 6. He is a medical missionary and the son of our pastor, Glenn W. Petcher. On Jan. 30, Bro. Petcher showed slides of their work on the mission field. On Sunday evening, Feb. 6, Sister Petcher showed slides on home life in Africa. A council meeting was held Saturday night, Feb. 5. We discussed certain improvements to be made to the cemetery.—Shelby Jean Williford, Dandridge, Tenn.



Fruitdale—Bro. Walter Replogle conducted a week of evangelistic meetings in February. As a result two were baptized into our church fellowship. Our young people have reorganized and are holding regular meetings. We are having a community sing once a month with all three churches co-operating. These services are held in the various churches. The sing on Easter was held in our church with the choirs of the churches participating in the program. The men of the church are making bookracks for our new hymnals. The young people have finished the walls in two Sunday-school rooms and the ladies have been making prayer coverings along with their regular relief work. Brother and Sister Paul Petcher, missionaries on furlough from Africa, were with us March 13 and will be with us the second Sunday of each month. Our pastor, Bro. Rhett Petcher, has resigned, effective the latter part of August. Mrs. Rhett R. Petcher, Fruitdale, Ala.

An Appeal to Women and Girls

My name is Roma Jo Mickey and I am in Brethren Volunteer Service. My home is in Irwin, Pa. I am nineteen years old and would like to state my stand as a conscientious objector. This is an appeal to the women and girls of the church and to anyone else who might read this.

An American teenager, or anyone about to date, will go out with a government man sooner than she will with an ordinary college student or a laborer. Why? Because all her girl friends can see her when she walks down the street with a man in uniform. Crazy? Yes, but I believe it's true. A so-called government man has a label of distinction, his neat and outstanding uniform.

Did you know a CO has a uniform? A CO has a distinction all his own, and no one can take it from him. A CO has an invisible uniform but yet it's luminous, too. The CO's uniform can never be taken away like that of the soldier, sailor or marine. The military man has a material uniform; the CO has a uniform of the spirit of God. Even on the darkest of days the CO's uniform will shine because it is the armor of God.

It may be hard to listen to a loved one tell you that if and when he has the opportunity to lay down his life to show other people what he believes and why he believes as he does he will do so without any hesitancy. The women of the church can make their beliefs and convictions as strong as this. They can prove to the people all over the world that they believe war is wrong and that they don't intend to participate in such. Let's do it!—R. J. M.

Why UMT?

History records that business and tradesmen invariably follow their victorious armies and flags into conquered nations. In past ages, victorious armies simply took over defeated lands and peoples. This was known as naked colonialism.

But in present days a more subtle way of conquest has been devised to serve the conquering nations.

Foreign economic penetration is paying off handsome dollar profits of from 10% to 30% per year today, plus a tax incentive of only 37%, as against 52% on domestic corporations, and other benefits. Our foreign holdings now amount to some twenty billions of dollars and are growing at a very rapid rate.

Indeed, it is said that some ten huge American corporations now have the controlling interest in the west German and Japanese economies. We furnish the dollars, brains and know-how, while the conquered nations furnish the cheap brawn and low cost raw materials.

This is proving to be a very successful combination and if the American "protective tariff walls" can be torn down, it will be a gold mine. But it will drag American wages and standards of living down to that of foreign lands.

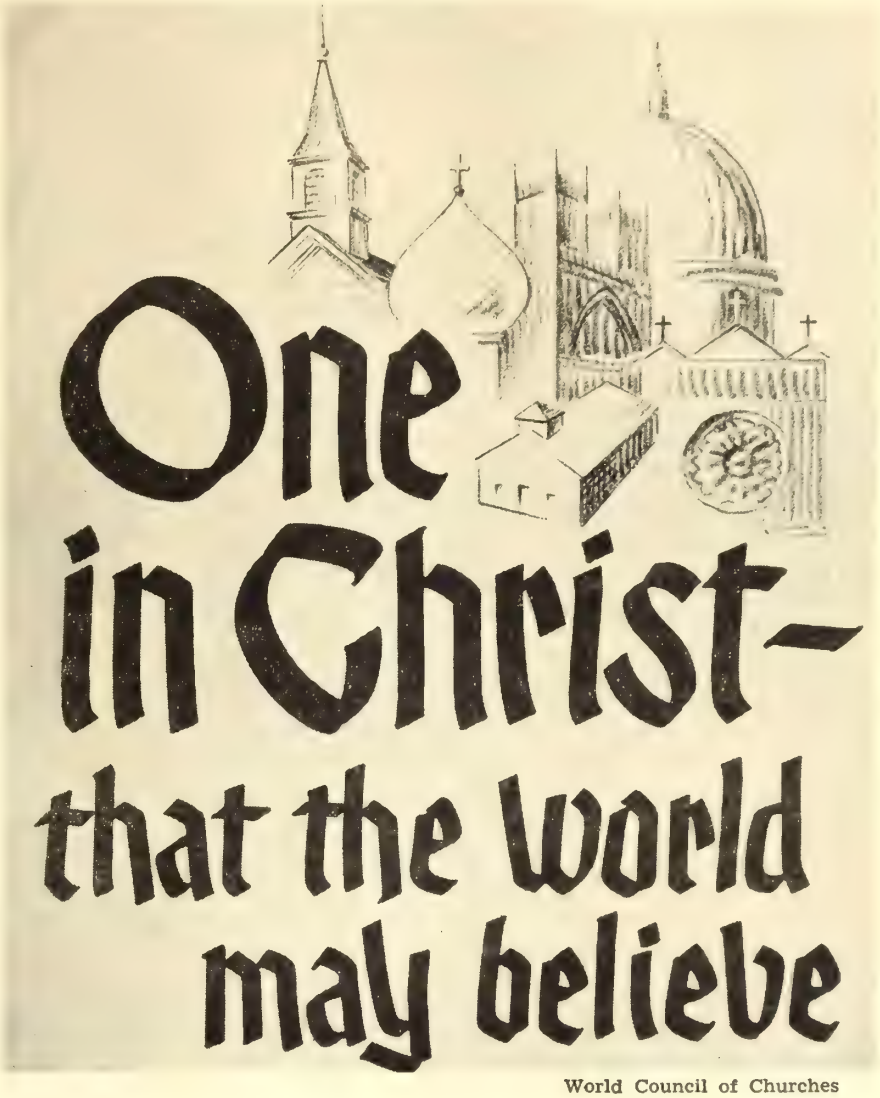
Competition between this combine and our so-called Western allies for Western markets has become so fierce that the British and French are now being forced to trade with the Russians for self-survival.

Meanwhile, colonial peoples are awakening under Communist leadership to the idea of confiscating our economic holdings in foreign lands as in Indo-China where we owned 75% of almost everything worth holding, while the French banking interests held the remainder. These conditions call for a huge military establishment, UMT and frequent wars, to protect our foreign holdings.

So it's obvious that if we are to reduce our military we common people must insist to our congressmen and President that our countrymen invest in foreign ventures at their own risk and peril.

Another contributing cause for UMT is our drift into a fascist form of government, namely the union of the military and big business to control via bipartisanism which is political monopoly and most certainly will kill pure democracy.

In Ezek. 3:33, God states that his people are watchmen and unless they warn the people of wars and the cause of same men will lose their lives.



How many young men's blood will be required at the hands of present-day Christians, because they failed to get into active politics as a part of a Christian's duty, to the end that Christian men might be sent to Washington, D. C., that we might have lawmakers who are not selected by selfish men from smoke-filled back rooms.

Christian politicians would use Christ's peace policies in human relations instead of power politics backed up by UMT and a huge military machine.—A Traveling Man.

PENTECOST--

a past glory and a present possibility

World Council of Churches

THE Pentecost described in Acts was a fresh realization in personal and corporate life of the presence, power and purpose of God as made human and triumphant in Jesus Christ. It was a quickened and joyful awareness of God intensely active in Jesus for the world's blessing and healing. The church became alive with the compellingness of Christ's victory and his living presence. How easy it is to look back and rejoice in that wonderful day. But, is Pentecost only history? A wonderful memory? A murmur of a greatness that once was and that never recurs? Can the experience become ours? It is a live possibility. The glow and glory of the Spirit-filled life can happen to us. God is ready to give them as soon as we are ready to receive them.

What sent the disciples to the feet of God? Prayerful penitence is the plowshare that breaks up the soil of the heart and makes it a fitting seedbed for the Spirit's work. That upper room fellowship was a broken, yearning, penitent community. They were individually and corporately burdened with the weight of their own cowardice, pride, blindness and selfishness which had contributed to the suffering of the Lord on the cross. Before God they wrestled with the realities of their own sin. They acknowledged their spiritual bankruptcy and hungered for righteousness. They groaned under the load of their age's sin and the impending doom which threatened the world.

All of this impelled them to penitent prayer. This meant the dying of an old order of life and the aspiration after that order of life which God so mightily demonstrated in Jesus. It became clear to them that the way of active, creative, suffering, redeeming love was God's way for all men—his way of meeting evil and of overcoming it. Out of penitence there came full surrender to all that God had said and done for them and for the world in the Lord. They were now ready to be God's agents in witnessing, working, sacrificing, serving, and suffering. Their readiness was matched by God's giving the Holy Spirit.

How long must God wait for us to realize that only a new vision of our sin can open the flood gate of the Spirit's invasion of our lives? A people bowed in prayerful penitence, in agonizing wrestling over their revolt against God and his way in Christ will be baptized with the Spirit in a new Pentecost. God is waiting for us to get ready.

Pastor of the Arlington church, Virginia

When we meet the conditions of mind and heart whereby God can work, life is recast, reborn, restructured and given unimagined power. In this lies our bitter need. A deeply sensitive soul once said to me, "I do not need to go to church to be told what to do. I know what God wants of me. I need the power to live and do what I know." So did the first disciples before Pentecost. But given the chance, God came into their lives like a tide of the sea, literally making them over inwardly and outwardly, and thereby starting a spiritual revolution which is still going on.

What were some of the marks of this inward change in them? They were cleansed and forgiven of their sins and the peace of God flooded their hearts. They grasped the meaning of the love of God. They caught sight of the infinite horizons of God's purpose. They felt the commanding presence of the risen Lord, who filled their hearts with unearthly joy. They underwent that greatest of all events—the fusion of the mind of man with the will and the love of God.

The fears that beset them dropped away like leaves whose time had come. And they stood up and were counted on God's side. Life for them throbbed with a fresh realization of the living Presence of Jesus. They understood now the meaning of his suffering servanthood and what God's purpose required of them. The universal outreach of divine love burst through the restricted channels of their Jewish hearts and they began loving all men with the aboundingness of God's compassion for all.

So that historic Pentecost was the marvel of the bursting of new life from life's hardened shell. I have seen this miracle of the Spirit descend to persons and push their lives forward into wholly new patterns of living approved of God. In the dead of winter I saw a woman tenderly push back a pile of dead leaves on the mountain side and there before our eyes was a live, growing flower. There is a world of divine life pushing its way through a world of death, even in our time. And when men and women are ready, God bestows the Spirit of power by which the kingdoms of this world are shaken and the kingdom that cannot be shaken rises. Pentecost can happen to you, to your church and to this sad, suffering, anxious world. When the living Lord takes form in the soul, life can go forward in joy, peace and victory.

O God, make it come to pass, this miracle of thy life in us that sends us forth to give thy Son to mankind. Release through the world-wide body of Christ the power of the Spirit in a redeeming ministry to the minds, bodies and souls of people everywhere. Make us to love everyone with the immeasurable love wherewith thou lovest us. Send us out of our sheltered, protected upper rooms into the fever-ridden spots of the world. To the end that the wonderful days of Jesus in Galilee and Judea may go on in Ohio, Virginia, California, Europe, Asia and the islands of the sea. So come, Lord, that men may see, feel and know that we have been with thee!

This is the coming again of the Lord for which men yearn and wait. But this appearing of the Lord awaits Pentecost in your heart and mine.

Once again the time is ripe for that inrush of divine power which taxed the capacities of language to describe—but which enabled the disciples to tell of God in a way that men everywhere understood. The emptiness of the human heart today is its lack of God. And to this emptiness the Spirit-filled church will address itself. We are far too busy about many secondary things. Our real commission is to be a community of the evangel—declaring to every heart the immeasurable love of God in Christ. We are too absorbed in what we can do for God. We need to rejoice in what God has done for us—is doing—and will do for the world using us.

A friend who has recently had a Pentecost in his life says, "Before, I was a church member,

The fear that had beset the disciples after the death of Jesus was dispelled on Pentecost and, moved by the power of the Spirit, they boldly proclaimed the living Christ and healed in his name

Reasons for Delinquency

RIGHT at the moment when there seem to be indications of a religious revival in America it is a little disturbing to hear from J. Edgar Hoover that the crime rate in the United States has been increasing four times faster than the growth of the population.

In releasing the FBI report on crime statistics for 1954, Mr. Hoover noted that there were 1,406 major crimes for each 100,000 persons last year. Rural crime is increasing twice as fast as that in cities. There can be no question about juvenile delinquency being a problem that all must face, for youths 17 and under comprise 57.6 per cent of all criminals arrested for car theft, 49 per cent of all arrested for burglary and 43.6 per cent of all arrested for larceny.

If these figures seem alarming, remember that some of the causes for this increase are fairly obvious. Any citizen can make his own casual investigation of the reading diet of many children and adults by looking through the "comics" for sale at most newsstands or drugstores. Although the comics industry set up a code and a czar to discipline itself the results, according to Dr. Werthman, a psychiatrist, are "still murder."

Another simple investigation that anyone can make requires only a television set and the hardihood to observe all the variations of violence that fill up the evening hours in many homes. Some of the worst offenders have special appeal for children.

Some clergymen asked Dr. George W. Crane, a psychologist, what is the underlying cause of vandalism and delinquency. He reminded them that we have had the threat of a draft over the heads of American boys for fourteen years. He writes, "The teen-ager begins to realize, even before he is well launched into high school that Uncle Sam's power transcends that of Dad and Mother. Thus the boy begins to disregard his parents' authority prematurely . . . . One of the quickest ways to lower vandalism and juvenile delinquency will be for our Congress to terminate the draft and get our military forces back on a voluntary enlistment basis."

These are not the only causes of juvenile crime and delinquency but they are major contributing factors and they indicate where definite action can be taken. The church can help parents in dealing with comics and in setting standards for television watching. The church must speak out more decidedly against a peacetime draft. But perhaps the best contribution the church can make —and one that is in keeping with her central mission—is to answer the appeal of a seventeen-year old girl who was writing about her teen-age generation. She said, "We need someone to believe in us."—K.M.

What Is a New Testament Church?

WHAT do we mean when we speak of a New Testament church? Obviously this is a designation that should challenge any present-day church to pattern its life and witness after the teachings of the New Testament. Yet even within our own Brotherhood there seem to be varied interpretations of what we mean by a New Testament church.

Some would call immediate attention to our church ordinances. These are New Testament practices taken over quite literally and quite appropriately from the scriptural records. They are designed to reproduce, so far as may be possible, the form of baptism, the setting and details of the Lord's Supper, the observance of the anointing service and other New Testament practices.

Others place their emphasis upon New Testament ideals. They point to the teachings of Jesus and Paul concerning peace, brotherhood, temperance, reconciliation, stewardship and personal integrity. These are New Testament standards and the attempt to realize such Christian ideals must characterize a New Testament church.

Still others claim the New Testament primarily as a basis for their doctrinal convictions. It is their creed and they need no other. Here in the life, the words, the ministry, the death and resurrection of Christ is the foundation for faith.

Surely all of these interpretations are true. The church looks to the New Testament for its ordinances, for its ideals, for its basic doctrines. Yet may we be bold to suggest still another way of looking at the New Testament church? It is the church whose beginnings are so vividly described in the Book of Acts, a church of quite human persons caught up in a passion for Christ, empowered by a Holy Spirit, set up in sharp contrast to the pagan world in which it lived. Yet this church, with all its limitations, grew spiritually so that in a short time it challenged its generation.

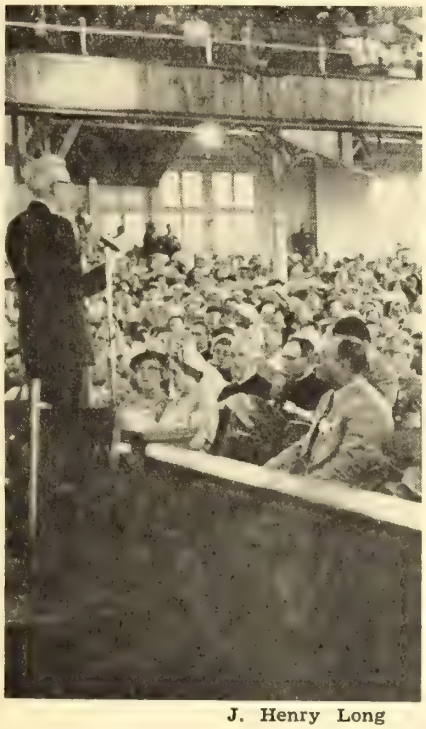
A New Testament church today—or one that seeks to become one—should reveal something of that same passion and spirit. It will not only have ordinances and ideals and doctrines. It will have a spiritually motivated program of witness and service. It will give evidence of the dynamic of the Holy Spirit, at work today as it once worked mightily in the pages of the New Testament.—K.M.

The gavel is a symbol of the authority and responsibility of the moderator of the deliberative and legislative assembly

Looking Toward Annual Conference

A. Stauffer Curry

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN introduced a resolution early in the constitutional convention which gives us inspiration as we look toward Annual Conference. Said Franklin: "The longer I live, the more convincing proofs I see of this truth, that God governs in the affairs of men . . . . And, if a sparrow cannot fall to the ground without his notice, is it probable that an empire can rise without his aid? We have been assured . . . that except the Lord build the house they labor in vain that build it . . . . without His concurring aid we shall succeed in this political building no better than the builders of Babel; we shall be divided by our own little, partial, local interests; our projects will be confounded and we ourselves shall become a reproach and a byword down to future ages . . . . And what is worse, mankind may hereafter, from this unfortunate instance, despair of establishing government by human wisdom and leave it to chance, war and conquest. I therefore beg leave to move, that henceforth prayers, imploring the assistance of Heaven, and its blessings on our deliberation, be held at this assembly every morning before we proceed to business; and that one or more of the clergy of this city be requested to officiate in that service."



To surmise the consequences of a religious deliberative assembly without the continuing presence of God, we might paraphrase a few of Franklin's statements: "And if a sparrow cannot fall to the ground without his notice, is it probable that a living church can rise without his aid? . . . Without his concurring aid, we shall succeed in this spiritual building no better than the builders of Babel; we shall be rendered incoherent by our local parish, district, regional or personal interests; our church program will be confused, and we ourselves shall be the butt of ridicule by worldly men who believe church leaders have no business or executive ability. And what is worse, the church may hereafter despair of church government by the democratic processes, and leave it to chance, to self-appointed demagogues and to those whose subconscious motivation places ego-satisfaction above genuine Christian statesmanship. I therefore beg to move that prayers, imploring the wisdom of Jesus Christ our Lord, be offered by each one, not only in the morning, but at each moment of decision throughout the day."

Another emphasis as one looks toward Annual Conference is the importance of practicing principles of Christian group relations. What good is a very coherent and profound set of minutes if even a small minority feels in an unco-operative mood as they pack their bags on Monday after Conference? Or what good is any decision if a forceful minority has overpersuaded a majority to vote for something with which they may still fundamentally differ? I hope and pray every person will be able to leave Conference with the full inner assurance that God's will has been done. And I hope at the same time true Christian progress will be achieved through Annual Conference.

There are several principles underlying the parlimentary procedure we are accustomed to follow. First, rules are for the protection of the minority. The minority must be given a chance to be heard on any issue. If this is done, the members of the minority will co-operate more fully with the majority decision. The assistant parlimentarian of the United States Senate told me that, even though a senator is not supposed to make a speech when he "reserves the right to object," to allow a short speech then prevents the senator from objecting later on. Expression of a minority or negative view often is in itself sufficient to bring acceptance of the majority decision.

J. Henry Long

Opportunity to express both supporting and opposing views of the business before Conference will result in a greater acceptance of the final decision of the body

Second, the use of parliamentary procedure is to give assurance that the will of the majority is enacted with reasonable speed and dispatch. Rules are to protect the will of the majority from being totally blocked or unduly delayed by the minority. Unfortunately, it is possible, if basic rules are not followed, for a "dictatorship of the minority" to develop and thus defeat the purpose of a deliberative assembly.

Another purpose for using parlimentary procedure is to protect the absentees. For this reason a quorum is necessary. Otherwise a small group could come together and enact something contrary to the will of the majority. It seems local churches might do well to enforce more fully the quorum rule. Why should thirty-five or fifty at council do business for a church of four hundred?

Fortunately at Conference we have the vast majority of delegates present. Usually there is 100% representation on Standing Committee. Our concern, therefore, should be for the absentees in the church as a whole. Perhaps ninety-five to ninety-seven per cent of all our members do not attend even our largest Annual Conferences. The task of delegates is to serve them. And we seek the prayers of all those not at Annual Conference as we attempt to serve the church through Annual Conference.

A final principle of parlimentary procedure is the protection of the assembly against itself. There are rules to protect an assembly against sudden action —and sudden reversals of decisions. Parlimentary rules recognized the dangers of mass psychology perhaps even long before this term became common.

To me, the summarizing point of these observations on parliamentary procedure can be stated thus: The more the spirit of Christ, with its basic respect of personality, prevails the less need there will be for rules. And at the same time, the more the Christlike spirit prevails, the more a group will automatically follow time-tested rules and procedures.

A final emphasis is to see the very special present need for seeking God's will in our annual deliberative assembly. Our world could well be at war in the Far East even before this is printed or Conference begins. In any event we will again meet in a world threatened with war. We need special grace. We also need to seek God's will because of human frailties which may show up in the thick of discussion. The tensions produced when one discovers himself directly opposed by another respected brother may temporarily make one a weak channel for the working of the Holy Spirit. Again, we need to seek God's guidance to prevent us from attaching more significance to plans, programs, decisions and resolutions than we should. These are all extremely important and may never be underestimated. But they may not replace a genuine faith in God that he will direct men's destinies if we trust in him. We will plant and water at Annual Conference, but only God can give the increase.

It sickens me to hear America brag about its atom bomb. What security is there in that? It is a wicked instrument, and it can mean the end of all of us. We are wicked when we put faith in it. We need to turn back from the atom to the Almighty.

Pentecost and the Layman

William S. Mitchell, Jr.

In his daily work the Christian layman finds opportunity of bearing witness for God through his own workmanship and of showing a grateful, considerate and sensitive feeling to the troubles of others

Gendreau

DURING the Pentecostal season, following the observance of the glorious resurrection of Jesus Christ, the Holy Spirit speaks again to each Christian as a member of his church, enabling us to approach the dynamic religious experience of the little band of first century Christians who went forth from the first Christian Pentecost to win the pagan world for Christ.

The nature of the Holy Spirit often lies beyond the limits of our knowledge and understanding, but the glorious fact of his Presence in our minds and hearts is the central certainty of our Christian experience.

The gifts of the Holy Spirit are given to us with the primary purpose of bearing true witness for Christ. We cannot expect the gift while ignoring the purpose of the gift. The gifts of the Holy Spirit issue in loving service and inspired duty to the believers in Christ's divine mission. God is present where the spirit of God is manifested through tokens of vitality, personality, fellowship and service.

The Christian church was born of the will of God on that historic Pentecost almost two thousand years ago. The fellowship of the universal church which was founded then transcends all barriers of language, creed, nation and race.

Today, the World Council of Churches, in ecumenical fashion, takes a step toward Christian unity through its world-wide organization. Functioning as a service to the churches of the world, it assists in the common task of manifesting the true nature of the church: to demonstrate the universal brotherhood of man, especially in these troubled times of increasing strain between East and West. It seeks to offset the selfish ambitions of totalitarianism, aiding in the elimination of race prejudice and conflict. The World Council of Churches strives constantly to reassert the presence of God in this dreadful era of the atom and hydrogen bomb, by attempting to satisfy the desperate need of millions of displaced and poverty-stricken people for food, clothing and shelter. It represents a fellowship of understanding where people learn from one another and try to grow together and stay together through common prayer for Christian unity.

Ecumenicity begins with a sense of identity and oneness among all Christians, with its best beginning in the local community, with faith in Jesus Christ as the life of the world. Thus a new community arises, bound together by his Spirit and commissioned to make him known throughout the world.

The Christian layman, as do the members of the clergy, believes that we, as Christians, must live and act in faith and that hope lies in the spirit of Jesus Christ. He is concerned with society, a society where faith is present, where witness is given and a Christian life lived. Such a society in Christ includes the religious, political, governmental, industrial, labor, commercial, financial, agricultural, artistic . . . in fact, all phases of our daily human life. Through his daily existence the layman tries to express the meaning of citizenship in God's kingdom through the duties, responsibilities and opportunities which are entrusted to him as a citizen in his particular society. Modern society, with its modern technical and mechanized economy, requires a renewed fellowship of the brotherhood of man.

In his idea of Christian vocation the Christian layman includes every honorable job, however mechanical or trivial. Christian vocation has to do with one's relationship with others. It means showing true witness and a grateful, considerate and sensitive feeling to the needs and troubles of others. It requires a greater interest in the general welfare than in the fulfillment of one's own desires.

Thus, in his vocation, the layman is concerned first with ministry to others and his vocation becomes the sphere of his daily work. Ministry for God is not a function of the clergy alone, for both clergy and laity belong together and work together. They need each other to perform their mission in the world. It is the privilege of the whole church to share in Christ's ministry, for, being baptized as Christians, we must all minister according to the particular gift of the Spirit that we have received and act as messengers of the hope revealed in Christ.

It is for the layman to bridge the gulf between the church and the world. His task is to manifest in word and action the Lordship of Jesus Christ over the world. The true meaning of Christian vocation is God's call to each member of his church to a life of faith, obedience, service and worship. The layman seeks to answer God's call in his vocation; thus he may share in the gifts of the Holy Spirit and may abound in hope through the power of the Holy Spirit as did the disciples on the first Christian Pentecost. The Christian layman knows that work is not the whole of life. If work became an idol it would prevent him from coming into the right relationship with God and his fellowmen. However, in his daily work lies the opportunity of bearing witness for God through his own workmanship.

Oftentimes serious conflicts arise as Christians seek to relate divine vocation to daily work: conflicts between duties to dependents, fellow workers and society. Therefore a true understanding of work is needed in the ordering of one's daily life for the fulfillment of human needs. Work should be a source of profound satisfaction, not drudgery leading to futility and despair. Labor is not in vain in the Lord. Honest work is a service to God. Man's spontaneous joy in the creative element in work is a sign of freedom and dominion achieved in Christ.

The layman in his vocation demonstrates the power of the Holy Spirit by keeping in mind these thoughts which went with the disciples from the first Christian Pentecost. He is always conscious that "God is in my head and in my understanding; God is in my eyes and in my looking; God is in my mouth and in my speaking; and God is in my heart and in my thinking."

God's Ambassadors

THE purpose of the New Testament church is to continue the ministry of Jesus Christ, to carry on the work which he had not completed. It is the body of Christ and its members are the hands and feet and voice of the living Lord. He remains in direct contact and provides guidance and power and joy. Therefore, the church must be without spot or blemish that it may worthily represent the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Our membership in the church is a grave responsibility. It is our privilege so to live that men may see that we have been with Jesus. Our lives are to shine that they may give God glory. Among a perverse and unregenerate people, we are God's ambassadors. Little wonder that we are overwhelmed with a sense of unworthiness and inadequacy and know that we are not fit for such a task. And then there sweeps over us the realization that all the divine resources upon which Jesus relied are at our disposal. Not in our own strength but in God's might we are to represent him. Our task is to provide God with opportunity to enlighten and guide and use us in the doing of his work. This we do through dominant desire to know and do his holy will, for prayer is the sincere desire uttered or unexpressed. More things are wrought by prayer than this world dreams of the poet reminds us. The unfinished work of Christ is to bring every character and every relationship into reconciliation with God's purpose and procedure. Not conformity to this world but transformation until we have that mind which is in Christ Jesus our Lord is the requirement. In an age of secularism, industrialism, nationalism and totalitarianism, grave indeed is the responsibility resting upon members of the holy church. So we must provide God with opportunity, and God never misses an opportunity.

Brethren in the "Water Wonderland"

Ernest R. Jehnson

THE State of Michigan is one of America's great vacation lands. Its shoreline, longer than any other state, is 2,242 miles, equaling the Atlantic coastline from Maine to Florida. Michigan is unique among the states in that it consists of two large peninsulas, the Upper and Lower. Ferry boats furnish transportation between the two. A bridge, one of the world's longest, is now under construction and will connect the two peninsulas in the near future.

Hundreds of lakes and streams attract vacationists. Large and small game bring many thousands of sportsmen to the fields and forests. The scenic beauty of Northern Michigan is equal to the nation's finest. In recent years winter sports take over where summer sports leave off. Large winter sports areas attract skaters. Ski jumps and toboggan slides assure a year-round tourist season in many parts of Michigan.

Northern Michigan was discovered very early by the white man. The first Christian church was planted by the young Jesuit priest, Pere Marquette, in 1637. The oldest settlements of the state are Sault Saint Marie and Michilemackinac. The first Protestant society was organized in 1818. It was an interfaith group. Later this society became a Presbyterian Church and still exists. Protestant mission work was begun in 1804 by Presbyterian missionaries.

Before the Civil War, Michigan was mostly an untrampled wilderness. Following 1865 the great pine forests began to be exploited. Homestead laws and land grants to soldiers, new emigrants in search of homes all helped transform the wilderness to a settled frontier area.

In a few short years the great pine had been slashed down and floated down the rivers to the sawmills. The farmer plowed where the forests had stood. His plow crossed and recrossed the Indian trails and turned up relics of a culture older than history.

The iron and copper mines, the salt deposits and the oil and gas as well as other resources helped produce many industries. Automobile factories of Detroit, Flint, Lansing and other cities put America on wheels as horsepower replaced horses. Forest products made possible the furniture factories of Grand Rapids. The mineral well provided innumerable products and from this sprang the great Dow Chemical Company of Midland. Perhaps a greater variety of products comes from Michigan than any other state.

The Brethren began to migrate into this state at an early date. Some lived at North Star in 1856. In 1863 the Gospel Visitor tells of a missionary journey by Elder John Wise of Pennsylvania into Michigan. He describes a group of Brethren in Clinton County as "unhealthy in spirit" because of lack of spiritual food. The majority of the Brethren settled in Eaton, Barry and Ionia counties. The Thornapple congregation was organized in 1867; the Woodland church, in 1873. Other congregations followed at Rodney, Elsie, New Haven and Little Traverse.

The earliest Michigan churches were part of the Northern Indiana District. The Michigan District was organized on May 1 1874, at the Thornapple church. Later churches in the southern tier of counties were returned to the districts of Northern Indiana and North-western Ohio.

The work of the early Brethren was devoted to the building of churches and the locating of mission points. They had a zeal unmatched in our lifetime. They established over forty churches or strong mission points. We hope this passion for establishing churches is being reborn in the district today.

Some of the churches established served a need and served well but later had to be closed. Today only a little over half of these early efforts exist as organized congregations. One factor that led to the closing of some churches was lack of leadership. Bro. J. Edison Ulery, beloved leader who has spent his ministry among the churches of Michigan, recently said, "When ministers moved away the people were left helpless." In other communities the people moved away. Brethren, usually uncanny in their selection of good land, were not always so in Michigan. Economic factors led Brethren to larger centers.

Today ecumenical surveys reveal, however, a vast unchurched population in many of the same areas. The Michigan Council of Churches is seriously concerning itself with this fact.

Many opportunities await the Brethren in Michigan. There is still much of the pioneer spirit left. With a rebirth of evangelism this should become one of the fastest growing districts of the Brotherhood in a short time.

Most of the churches of the district have secured parsonages or church farms in recent years. The majority of the churches have or are undergoing building programs or are doing large-scale remodeling.

New buildings exist at Lansing, Hope, Battle Creek, Trinity and Detroit First. All of these are relocated to serve more effectively. Midland has land for relocating and the same thing is under discussion in Grand Rapids.

Trinity is a new congregation organized about four years ago. The district meeting of 1954 voted to underwrite a $35,000 church extension project. This has resulted in the Bethany church; this newest congregation was organized in February of 1955 and is holding its formal opening in its new church home on May 1. This congregation is located in Madison Heights, north of Detroit.

Virgil Rose

Brother and Sister J. E. Ulery (left) were pioneer leaders in the Brooklyn mission, located in Manistee County, Michigan, about 1901. Led by Bro. Ulery the resident ministers guided the growing Brethren colony and established the Lakeview, Harlan, Marilla, Onekama, Long Lake and Homestead congregations. The Ulerys settled at Onekama, where for forty years Bro. Ulery was resident minister. He also served as trustee of Manchester College and conducted evangelistic meetings and Bible institutes in the churches of the Central Region and Florida. Brother and Sister I. C. Snavely (right) came to Michigan in 1905, settling near the Blackwater church. He teamed up with Bro. Ulery in holding evangelistic meetings, Bible institutes and music classes. Together they aided the new churches in the rapidly growing Michigan area

It is the district plan to start a new church every five years. At a special district meeting on December 11, 1954, the delegates approved a budget for a full-time executive secretary and the district boards have purchased, in Mt. Pleasant, a parsonage for that purpose.

One of the most encouraging things about the district is a strong corps of pastors who are giving such excellent leadership to the churches and to the district. Strong lay leaders are also rising to work in an expanding program.

a hero worshiper of Jesus, but now he is the Lord of my heart before whom I bow." Always before Pentecost, Jesus is the ideal but after he is far more—he is Lord and Master.

The Spirit has his seasons which we can neither chart nor change. But always when life reaches a point of fitness the presence and power of the Spirit pours in and through human life.

Our duty is to meet and establish the conditions for the Holy Spirit's coming and mightier work. Pentecost is not a once-for-all incident. There have been many upsurgings of the Spirit in history. There is one now in Christendom, and there will be many more—as many as men are willing to undergo. God is the living God and today, where life is alive with love, compassion, creative brotherliness, blood-red sacrifice and penitent humility, there the Holy Spirit dwells; there the Spirit is incarnate in life, breaking through and pushing back the curtain of night in our sorely beset world. Pentecost as personal and corporate experience is the one and only redeeming possibility under which we live.

A Decision for the Ages

V. P. Mock

THE sun was nearing the western horizon. Off in the southern distance lay the land of Zoar, Sodom and Gomorrah. In the north lay the hills of Moab, a backstage for the mists arising from the Dead Sea. A tired man with staff in hand wound his way up the east steps to the mountain heights. He seated himself upon a boulder and removed the sandles from his tired feet. Shading his eyes with his hand he looked out over the panoramic view unfolding before him.

His thoughts were not of that vista, but rather concerned with a question, the decision of which would determine the greatest crisis of all times, a decision which was to affect all mankind; its terrific message would ring down through the ages. Was he to become a temporal king? He had the power. He knew he could sway multitudes, could topple the Caesars from the Roman throne. Should he set up a Jewish kingdom with himself on the throne? As the enormous import of the question enveloped his consciousness he began to perspire and to pray fervently. What a prayer! Too bad that history has never recorded the unceasing prayer that must have ensued during those terrible forty days of fasting and temptation.

This was no ordinary man. His very physique and magnetic personality were regal. He was not too large a man. His muscles were not bulging and he probably was of moderate height. But his well-proportioned body gave him a look of slenderness, some said frail and pale. Yet, the finely knit muscles that rippled beneath his robe were not the muscles of a weakling. The arm that shoved a plane and wielded an ax back in the Nazareth carpenter shop was a strong arm. The arm that later drove the money-changers from the temple with a whip did not belong to a tenderfoot. But above all the greatest single outstanding characteristic of this personality were his face and eyes, eyes that were like liquid pools, perhaps a light brown that seemed to encompass all the sorrow and suffering of a lost world. It is a tragedy that no artist of that day could have been privileged to paint on canvas the face of this man, a face finely chiseled to infinite perfection. The man was a Jew.

The man arose. His decision was made and he began his descent from the mountain, turning his steps toward the Jordan River. Well did he know that his decision would lead to the building of a kingdom not of this world and also would lead to a cross on Calvary.

A Message for Pentecost

GRACE be unto you and peace from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.

As presidents of the World Council of Churches we greet our brethren of the churches participating in the World Council.

A year ago at this time we were called to pray for God's blessing upon the coming General Assembly of the Council. Now in retrospect we can join in thanksgiving to God for the many blessings granted to us as a result of the Evanston Assembly. With frank and sincere facing of many differences there was revealed a deep underlying unity of Christian love and mutual understanding. Despite the barriers of race, of nationality, of varying ecclesiastical traditions and of theological emphasis we remain brothers in Christ. In this fact may be found a source of spiritual strength for the present and of high promise for the future.

There are stern realities in our world which must be met courageously. There is strife between men and nations. In many places men do not have that freedom which is their deep desire. Millions of the children of God are without the barest necessities of life. We dare not forget the plight of those who through no fault of their own are helpless refugees. Christendom is divided and therefore its witness is weakened.

But these difficulties are accompanied by equally real opportunities. Countless men, women, boys and girls everywhere stand in need of the unsearchable riches of the gospel and of the peace of God which passes all understanding. In the light of the tragedy of our times there is urgent need for groups of men and women everywhere working more closely together in Christian love in the service of Christ.

We may well ask ourselves: "Who is sufficient for these things?" The answer comes from our blessed Savior Jesus Christ: "Ask and ye shall receive, knock and it shall be opened unto you."

So at this season of Pentecost let us pray that the Holy Spirit may make our hearts burn within us so that we may better understand the mind of Christ and more deeply realize our need of one another. Let us pray especially that all men may be granted the opportunity to worship the Almighty in full freedom. And let our prayer be accompanied by this solemn rededication of our lives to the gracious purpose of God.

We urge the offering of this age-old prayer to God through Jesus Christ:

"Come Holy Ghost, our souls inspire, and lighten with celestial fire."

"Communicate" and "Communication"

Luther A. Weigle

THE King James Version of the Bible uses the verb Communicate six times and the noun communication seven times; but in each case the Revised Standard Version has chosen another word as a more accurate translation. To say that Paul "communicated" to the heads of the church in Jerusalem the gospel which he was preaching among the Gentiles (Gal. 2:2), fails to describe the situation, for the Greek says that he "laid it before them" with a view to coming to an agreement concerning the most far-reaching question of principle and policy that the church ever faced. In all other cases where it is used in the King James Version, the verb communicate has the sense of "share." It refers, not to words, but to fellowship and generous action.

"To do good and to communicate forget not" (Heb. 13:16) means, "Do not neglect to do good and to share what you have." Paul's injunction to the Galatians (6:6), "Let him that is taught in the word communicate unto him that teacheth in all good things," means, "Let him who is taught the word share all good things with him who teaches." When Paul wrote to the Philippians (4:14), "Ye have well done, that ye did communicate with my affliction," he did not refer to letters of sympathy, but to gifts of material aid, as the succeeding verses make perfectly clear. This verse is now translated, "It was kind of you to share my trouble."

In one case the use of the word communication is misleading. It is the often quoted text in 1 Cor. 15:33, "Evil communications corrupt good manners." That was a copybook maxim in my public-school days which I am sure that I copied a thousand times, and I thought that "evil communications" meant profane or obscene language. But the Greek word used here is more comprehensive; it refers to the whole body of social influences, the companionships and associations, in which oral conversations and written communications play only a part. And what is at stake is more than good manners; it is moral character. The Greek word is the one from which the English word "ethics" is derived. The present translation is, "Bad company ruins good morals."

 Interpreting Paul's Gospel. Archibald M. Hunter. Westminster, 1955. 144 pages. $2.50.

Here is a book of penetrating insight into the message of the great apostle. Many who feel that Paul is hard to understand will find illumination and direction in this clear exposition. If brevity is its shortcoming, a sparkling simplicity is its virtue. Part One consists of a brilliant synopsis of the Gospel of Paul packed into fifty-four pages. Part Two, consisting of seventy-four pages, applies his gospel to today.

Here is a trustworthy guide to the thought of Paul and its relevance to men of the twentieth century. Ministers and laymen cannot afford to overlook this book.—David J. Wieand, Lombard, Ill.

Fun with Skits, Stunts and Stories. Helen and Larry Eisenberg. Association, 1955. 256 pages. $2.95.

The Eisenbergs need no introduction to those who have done any reading in the field of recreation. Not only do they present top-notch material, but they have a distinctly religious orientation, Mr. Eisenberg being a Methodist minister. This volume is similar to an earlier one, The Handbook of Skits and Stunts, though it does not duplicate any of that material. Here is a veritable gold mine of entertainment suggestions for banquets, camps and conferences. Social Relations in the Urban Parish. Joseph H. Fichter, S. J. University of Chicago Press, 263 pages. $5.50.

Mr. Fichter has become the most widely known authority on the sociology of urban Roman Catholic religious life. His first book, Southern Parish, and his most recent, Social Relations in the Urban Parish, demonstrate his mastery of the tools of social research and the latter especially reveals his insight into the very nature of religious and social experience.

His main hypothesis is that solidarity among Roman Catholics is much more a matter of natural group identification than of religious belief as such. He sees the urban parish not only as a "group united by the will to believe and practice religion, but also as a complex group of human relationships influenced by the impact of modern society."

Most of the material is based on his most extensive analysis of several Roman Catholic parishes in New Orleans. This makes it a bit difficult to make generalizations to a wider universe, but his analysis of social process will be helpful to workers in all urban churches and not a few rural church workers. For these reviewers this is the most significant work in sociology of the urban church that has yet been published.—Merlin L. Clark, Chicago, Ill., and Ralph Smeltzer.

The Great Tradition of the American Churches. Winthrop S. Hudson. Harpers, 1953. 284 pages. $3.75.

This volume reminds the reader of the theological basis for the American doctrine of separation of church and state. It places the blame for the present unsteadiness of our equilibrium upon the churches because they have forsaken their distinctive role in the partnership and have succumbed to pressures of a secular character. The movements in American church life are illustrated by "thumbnail" biographies of the representative leaders. There is a ringing call for the churches to return to a vital concern for the things of God and the spirit. This book should be required reading for all ministers, members of local and district boards and members of the General Brotherhood Board. — C. Ernest Davis.

News and Comment From Around the World

Protestants to Sponsor 12,000 Refugees in 1955

Protestant and Orthodox churches in the United States expect to sponsor the resettlement in this country of at least 12,000 European refugees this year. Dr. Norris Wilson, executive director of Church World Service, said that the Refugee Relief Act of 1953 has the strong support of the National Council but "the slowness of the program since it was enacted into law has discouraged not only sponsors in the churches of this country but also many applicants overseas who need and wish to come to the United States." He said the appointment of a new special assistant for migration and refugee problems has resulted in an immediate speed up of the processing of the program.

Yale Divinity Dean Criticizes Religious Broadcasts

Dr. Liston Pope, dean of Yale Divinity School, has criticized many so-called religious broadcasts as being "neither intelligible nor intelligent from a Christian point of view." He said that most of them falsify or ignore the gospel in one way or another, and he added that a number of the broadcasts "have outdone the soap operas in stickiness." The theologian's appraisal of religious broadcasting included sermons, plays, skits and the peace of mind cult that offers "solutions to personal or social problems under the guise of religion." Dr. Pope asked, "When shall we have some programs that will take the focus off man and his petty neuroses and tell us again the message that once had the power to remake the whole world? When shall we be led again by the Christian religion to Gethsemane rather than to a phychiatrist's couch?" He said that the principal fault of religious broadcasting has been to focus attention on the audience rather than on the gospel.

Healing in Prayer Discussed in Norway

A number of leading personalities within the Church of Norway have issued an open letter to "All Christians in Norway" concerning the question of healing by prayer. The letter warns against any misplaced sensation and propaganda. It affirms, however, belief in the reality of healing by prayer. In another letter the signers protest against any law that may hinder or restrict preaching or practice which is in accordance with the teaching of the Bible on this point.

Attendants for the shipment of cattle to Germany which left New York on April 14 receive final advice from Robert S. Zigler, eastern representative of Heifer Project, Inc. Left to right: Zigler and "seagoing cowboys," Myron Metzger of Claypool, Ind.; Prof. S. M. Dell of McPherson, Kansas; Raymond West of Jefferson City, Mo.; and Moyne Landis of West Milton, Ohio. Also on board was "Miss Charity," the two thousandth heifer sent to Western Germany by the Heifer Project

Institute of Scientific Studies for the Prevention of Alcoholism

The sixth session of the Institute of Scientific Studies for the Prevention of Alcoholism will be conducted at Loma Linda, Calif., July 11-12. Lectures will be devoted to a scientific presentation of the physiological, neurological, psychiatric, social, economic, moral, legal and educational aspects of the alcohol problem. The institute is conducted under the auspices of the National Committee for the Prevention of Alcoholism.

Congress Urged to Continue U.S. Share of UN Technical Assistance

The Church Peace Union has taken a strong stand in favor of the United States continuing to pay its share of the United Nations Technical Assistance Program. The Union is urging that Congress appropriate eight million dollars for the United Nations program for the period of January to June this year. They point out this amount was pledged to the United Nations and was authorized by the Congress in 1954 but has not yet been appropriated.

The Union also suggested that an appropriation of twenty-five million for technical assistance be appropriated this spring to cover an eighteen-month period from June to December of 1956.

State Department Rejects China Food Relief Plan

Some religious groups that urged the sending of surplus food to flood victims in China have been advised that the State Department has turned down such proposals. Thruston Morton, Assistant Secretary of State, has stated that the matter of donating food for relief was considered at the time of the disastrous floods, but was turned down because the Chinese Communist government twice refused offers of aid made by the Red Cross. Offers by the Chinese Nationalists also were rejected.

Mr. Morton said, "Under the present Chinese Communist system for the allocation of food and other supplies on the basis of political and economic considerations rather than human need, there was little, if any, chance that food for relief would reach the flood sufferers." The proposal to donate surplus foods to China for the relief of victims of the Yangtze River floods was given strong support by the Fellowship of Reconciliation. An editorial in Life Magazine several months ago favored it. It was also supported editorially in the Gospel Messenger.

Church Council Asks Grocers Not to Sell Beer

The Denver Council of Churches launched a campaign to persuade grocery stores not to sell beer. Committees met with several large chains and got assurances they would not stock beer. To independent grocers, the board of directors sent a letter informing them of the action by the chains and urging them to do likewise. A long list of immediate responses from independent grocers indicated the drive would be successful.

North Carolina Ministerial Groups Becoming Interracial

Ministerial associations in North Carolina are quietly opening their membership to qualified clergymen of all races. A recent survey of twenty communities showed that only in one of them was the local association satisfied with the present arrangement of separate Negro and white clergy groups.

Three communities already have interracial ministerial bodies, one plans to merge its two associations this fall, and four others are holding discussions looking toward integrated groups in the near future.

Whole Bible Printed in Six New Languages in 1954

Some part of the Bible has been published in 1,084 languages and dialects as of the end of 1954. Six languages last year received the whole Bible for the first time. They are Ndonga, Ngala, Ruanda, Maltese, Sindhi and Cambodian. There are eighty additional languages in which short passages or collections of passages have been published, but in which no complete book of the Bible has appeared.

Home Missions Division Gets Grant for Migrant Education

The Home Missions Division of the National Council of Churches has received a grant of nearly $15,000 from the Fund for the Advancement of Education to aid in work among children of Negro migrant farm workers. The grant will be used in an educational project to relate the learning and experience of parents and their children, and to encourage parents to have their children go to school rather than work in the fields.

Seminar groups, both youth and adults, visit congressmen and sessions of Congress

Seminar Vacation

Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Hershberger

OUR WINTER vacation was all we expected and more. We attended the adult seminar in Washington and New York. We had been in Washington on vacation before, but it was not like this one. The prearranged program of the seminar provided so many advantages that would not have been available to just the two of us. And, of course, since a friendly group of Brethren were there to fellowship with, there could be none of the "aloneness" that is usual when vacationing in a strange city. It was like taking a vacation in new and interesting surroundings and yet having your friends along.

The first session was less than an hour old before the discussion waxed warm and interesting. This we found was the pattern of the following sessions and believe it was an indication of the general interest in the program and the timeliness of the topics.

The afternoon of the first day included an interview in the State Department, visits to various embassies, a visit to the office of The National Service Board for Religious Objectors, then supper and back to the church for a meeting with Mr. Glen Everett, a reporter for Religious News Service. Succeeding days were just as full and just as interesting. Visits were made to committee hearings, Senate, House, and Supreme Court when in session and to individual congressmen and senators in their offices.

With the background of information gained in the sessions of the seminar, the visits with senators and congressmen were much more significant than just dropping in to say, "Hello."

The seminar sessions included as speakers representatives from the Department of Agriculture, the Farmers Union, U. S. Chamber of Commerce, Community Relations Department of the C. I. O., American Council on Human Rights, Mennonite Central Committee, Brethren Service, Friends Committee on Legislation, Women's International League for Peace and Freedom and several others. This all in three days, then a pleasant trip to New York and an inspiring evening and day there.

As I try to decide what made the entire program so interesting, I came to the conclusion that each of our speakers was voicing a concern about one or more of the current problems of our society and world. Obviously, it is impossible to report here on all the speakers, but I will try to give some of the high lights.

One of the men who talked to us at the State Department was Harry Seaman, liason between the State Department and church groups. His statement that "in a democracy the government policies are of necessity formed from public opinion since the government can neither go far ahead nor lag far behind what its people are thinking," raises an important question. Are we as Christians making sure that our opinions are being counted to help guide our government toward a more Christian program?

Mr. Carraud of the French embassy said, "Communism in France has regressed in ratio to the improvement in the living standard of the working people, and heavy spending on a military program would be inconsistent with our attempt to convince the people that communism is not the best method."

Mr. Everett, reporter, said, "We are spending more for liquor than for all education. Christian citizens failing to take an interest in their government should have a guilty conscience."

Mrs. Stewart, Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, said, "We are spending 72% of our tax dollar for present and future wars and 8% for past wars, yet only one tenth of one per cent for all the functions of the United Nations and world aid programs."

Bro. John Eberly, Brethren Service, said, "If the church does not improve the community it is missing the mark."

Mr. Elmer Henderson, American Council on Human Rights, made the statement that "segregation in the churches is morally indefensible."

These quotations are at random, but as you read them I am sure that you can sense the concern of the speakers. I am also quite sure that many of you who read this will say to yourselves, "Those are also our concerns. What can we do about them?" This question was asked several times during the discussion periods and the answer was always the same. "Keep up the search for information as you are doing here this week and make sure your elected representatives know how you feel about the issues involved."

In New York the visit to the UN was most inspiring. We came away feeling that all Christians in America should urge their congressmen and senators to increase our financial support to the UN world aid programs.

Each time I reread my notes the thrill of the wonderful fellowship and the challenging program is renewed.

Seldom if ever has a week's vacation been so enjoyable and so inexpensive. Food and lodging were very reasonable in Washington and New York. We did not keep an exact account of expenses, but returned home with many more dollars left than is usual at the end of a vacation.

Besides what we learned in the seminar we also found what happens when folks do not pay their fare on streetcars, how taxi drivers get through the New York traffic and what happens when people drive too fast or park in the wrong place. Several Brethren co-operated in getting this information so that it was not too hard on anyone.

We would like to say special thanks to Bro. Stauffer Curry and Bro. Karl Yount for the time and effort spent in arranging the program. We had a wonderful time and wish that many other Brethren could have taken advantage of this opportunity.

Austria News

FIFTEEN returned Austrian exchange students joined six Brethren Service Workers in a conference at the Brethren House in Linz from April 3-6. Guest speakers were M. R. Zigler, director of Brethren Service in Europe; Dr. Wilhelm Dantine, Lutheran Church, Vienna; and Dwight Horner, former Brethren Service worker and now with U. S. Information Service, Graz.

The socio-economic study of a typical refugee camp in Upper Austria prepared by Don Miller in 1954 was the topic of a recent meeting of the council of voluntary agencies in Vienna. Don Durnbaugh presented the survey which was received with enthusiasm as a long needed factual investigation of the refugee camp problems.

During the month of March, 244 medical treatments were given in Brethren Service clinics in Wels and Linz, 346 TB food packages were distributed and 40 layettes to expectant mothers. Mothers' classes, special medicines and prothesis complete activities for the month with the health program.

Brethren Tour

Mr. and Mrs. A. R. Grober of McFarland, Calif., board ship as they start on the current Brethren tour to Europe under the direction of L. W. Shultz. Other members of the tour are Bro. Ivan Fetterman of the Green Tree church near Philadelphia, Pa., Nora Rhodes of Dallas Center, Iowa, and Mrs. Grace Murphy of Peru, Ind. In Cairo the group will be joined by a missionary who will travel through Palestine with the tour.

Two busloads of people came from the Green Tree congregation to see Bro. Fetterman off. Bro. Shultz reports, "The Protestant church service on board ship was almost a Brethren service. Ivan Fetterman was asked by the purser to plan and conduct the service. He used as his theme "A Kingdom That Cannot be Shaken."...After church the Harry McConnell family of the Trotwood church came up and we learned to know them. So there were at least twelve Brethren in the audience."

Monday, April 4, Bro. Shultz writes, "Today we go from Friesland to Bremen, Germany. We had some difficulty in making it across the border for the Germans had just passed a regulation taxing tourist buses entering Germany...We arrived in Bremen and visited the institution Friedehorst, where some 1,100 unfortunate people are cared for—old people, orphans, cripples, etc. The cripples are given a vocational course to fit them for jobs. They are doing a good work in weaving, shoemaking, basketry, furniture and clothing production."

On April 5: "Today we traveled to Uelzen. This is one of the three reception centers for escapees from the East Zone of Germany. The capacity is 1,000 and there are now 700 here with daily intake of about 150 persons. The other two centers are at Geissen and Berlin West. We were taken on a tour through this camp. We heard many people tell us where they had come from in the last few days. It is a very sad experience to go through these barracks and see these unfortunates. Our party shared some sweets with the kindergarten age children. The evening we spent in Hannover and had a delightful entertainment of music and fellowship in the Halatsch home with Brigitte and her family. Brigitte was an exchange student and lived in a Brethren home in the States for a year.

Wednesday, April 6: "This afternoon we went to the village of Niederkaufungen to let Pastor Standau share some of his experiences with us from the standpoint of a pastor of a country community of 300 persons. The Kassel staff had briefed us on the work here including material aid, work camps, heifers, student exchange, refugee resettlement, etc. In the evening each of us went to a German home for the night."

The Brethren tour sailed on March 24 and will return to the U. S. on May 23. The purpose of the tour is to acquaint the group with life and conditions in other lands; to visit places of interest in Bible lands; and to visit the birthplace of our church at Schwarzenau and observe the work of our relief centers.

WHAT EVERY PERSON SHOULD KNOW ABOUT ORGANS

Helene B. Crill
Elgin, Illinois

EVERYONE, musical or not, can understand some of the basic principles involved in organ playing. Churches are making decisions today. You are one of many if you are going to buy an organ, or have bought one and need an organist. You may be on the music committee or you may be a farmer interested in an investment you are helping to pay for. Here are some things you should know in order to make intelligent decisions.

There are many and varied types of organs and organ attachments on the market today. It is not the purpose of this article to tell you which is the instrument for your church. But if you would hear the great organ music of the church, you must have an organ with at least two keyboards and a full thirty-two-note pedal board. A lesser organ can play hymns and certain familiar pieces, but the greatest religious instrumental music has been written for full organ. You will always enjoy hearing music you know, but you owe it to yourself and your church to become acquainted with the truly inspired music written to glorify Him. A too small organ with less than two manuals and a full footboard is not an economy. It would be like limiting yourself to the Gospel of Matthew when, with a little more effort, you could have the harmony and inspiration of all four gospels.

With your organ comes the need to understand the instrument and the need to select an organist. You will naturally look to your pianists. Can any pianist play the organ? There are five basic differences between the piano and organ in which the piano player has had no experience.

1. The most noticeable difference is the multiple keyboards. The organist has from two to four keyboards, each built for a specific purpose.

2. The foot keyboard always fascinates the layman. The organist must be able to play the bass line of all hymns with his feet. Pedals are played by touch, and it takes about as long to develop good accurate footwork as it does to become a fast, accurate typist.

3. Just above the pedalboard are the expression pedals. At the piano you control the expression with finger and body weight. On the organ it must be done by expression pedals.

4. Selecting, blending and contrasting tone quality is another field in which most pianists have had no previous experience. The organ is built like an orchestra with strings, reeds, brasses and bass, with a choice of three or four octaves in which to play them. The artistry with which these are used often determines whether you like the "sound" of your organ.

5. Organ touch is different. On the piano the pedal connects your notes for you and the fingers generally work independently with a "hammer touch. On the organ the fingers must learn to sustain the music and change fingering while holding down notes.

The organist must also perfect other skills to be a master of the organ. A knowledge of harmony is a must. At the organ he must be able to transpose (raise or lower a piece of music), modulate (go from one key to another), and accompany all vocal music the soloists and choir director hand to him.

If you have a $3,000 to $10,000 instrument, you should take an interest to see that your organist gets adequate training to use that instrument as nearly to its capacity as possible. Your organist should have at least several years of study with the best teacher available. The teacher should have Christian attitudes and an understanding of Protestant church music. If you have a well-trained organist, he must still have an appreciation of religious values if he is to lead you in worship.

Your church college is the ideal place to acquire organ training. By the time they are ready for college many pianists have developed their skill sufficiently to begin organ. At college, he has skilled, consecrated teachers, handy practice rooms, basic music courses to further his knowledge, and the religious values which must accompany the rest.

When the organist has mastered his instrument and harmonic skills, his training and study place him on a par with your director of education. For every hour he plays in church, he will want to put in two hours of practice if he knows his music. Much of the organ repertoire is very difficult and he may spend months practicing on one piece he feels will enrich the worship service. He attends the choir rehearsal each week and is "on call" for funerals, weddings, extra rehearsals and special services. Most organists love their instrument and will give their time if necessary. But you should know that their services would be worth $500 to $2,000 a year to many congregations.

Another question you may face is, "Who should take lessons?" For several years to come, the pupil will not be as adequate on the organ as he is right now on the piano. A poor pianist will not make a good organist. As in other fields, desire and ability are not always equal. In fact, they cannot always be bridged. If music has always been easy for a person and he has built a good piano foundation, the chances are good that he can succeed here. (It should be mentioned that there is a high mortality rate in first-year organ, even among gifted pianists.) Most pianists who begin organ and like it will not go back to piano. If an older person with some piano wants organ for his own enjoyment, that's one thing. But if he is serious about being of service, he should advance his piano and music theory.

The organ is one of the most rewarding and difficult of instruments to play. At your fingertips is a whole orchestra. Let us lift it to God with skill and devotion.

Camping and Christian Growth

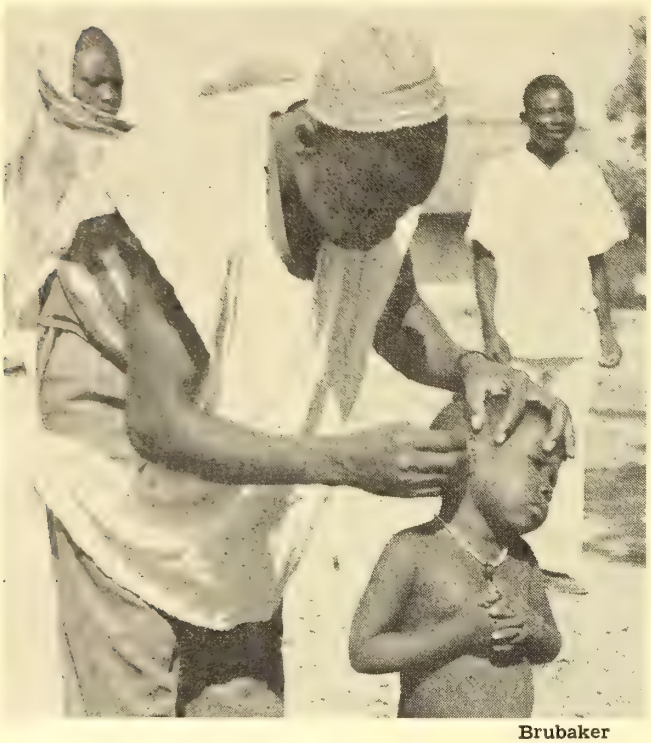
ONE of the most significant advances in Christian education in the last fifty years has been through the avenue of camping. Each year the number of boys and girls and youth served by our church camps is increasing and each year more intensive study is being made of our program and procedures. Objectives are re-examined and clarified before each new season begins to determine just what results we are striving for—what the end product of our efforts should be.

This examination and re-examination of objectives and procedures has brought about some basic changes in our camp program over the years. Whereas at one time we emphasized numbers in camp, we now believe that more effective growth of campers can be brought about in smaller groups. Our camps of former years emphasized an intensive, vigorous round of activity that was strenuous and exhaustive. We now plan a relaxed camp program in which boys and girls live, work and play in a leisurely fashion that does not bring about mental, physical and spiritual exhaustion by the end of the week. In former years, we sought to teach by the classroom method in a formal classroom atmosphere many things that could have been taught better within the walls of the Sunday school or church. Today we really attempt to use the out-of-doors as our classroom and the natural environment about us as the basis of our teaching.

We no longer believe that a camp justifies its existence only as a place to have a good time. We believe it can be and should be one of the instruments, if not the most effective one, of Christian education the church has at its disposal. We believe that basic attitudes and patterns of conduct can be modified and changed in a week's time of living in an intimate Christian environment. The camp, therefore, affords a unique laboratory of Christian living and experience where leader and camper are learners together, living and experiencing a Christian community.

Small Group Camping

To better achieve this end today, our children's camps are organized in small "discovery groups" of ten or twelve campers with two leaders. The leaders live with and share experiences with the small groups throughout the week. They use the out-of-doors, the natural environment as an avenue of approach to the development of an awareness and appreciation and acquaintance with God, the Creator. The leader does not make the appreciation of God's physical universe the end of his teaching. It is but the beginning of the quest in understanding God's plan for his universe—for unless the camper can be made aware of the fact that he and his fellow campers are also God's creation—his highest —for whom he cares infinitely, the real objective of Christian education has been missed. The small groups make possible this experience.



At the junior high level, the small group pattern of camping is modified somewhat to fit the emerging interests of teen-age boys and girls. Although the small intimate group is maintained in cabin groups, many more activities are planned for full camp participation. Small discussion groups or "buzz sessions" in junior high camps often serve the purpose of the discovery groups in the younger children's camps. Although interests differ at the various age levels, the value of some small group activity at every age level is readily apparent.

Trail Hikes

The one-, two- or three-day "trail hikes" are excellent small group activities for the junior high or older teen-age campers. Under competent leaders and with a minimum of equipment for living on the trail, an exciting and never to be forgotten experience can be afforded. Adequate, but simple cooking gear with simple, but well-planned menus suited to the out-of-doors can be provided by any group who might be eager for the experience. The trail environment, alive and rich in variety of plant, animal and bird life, becomes the laboratory for creative living. The small group around the campfire at the close of a day of rich experience on the trail can be led to further adventures of mind and spirit by wise leaders. These explorations into the realm of thought and worship for the junior high camper can be the mountaintop of the whole experience. Such an experience as this can be made possible wherever the camp is located. It need not only be in scenic mountain terrain, but wherever there are woods, stream or lake, and leadership imagination.

Camp Leadership

The success of any camping program depends upon the quality and adequacy of the leadership. There is no limit to the possibilities of Christian growth where skilled leadership can be obtained. Our camping program has succeeded when wise, consecrated and able leadership has been available and has failed when that leadership was lacking. One is amazed at the spiritual capacity shown by our boys and girls when challenged by resourceful and capable leaders. There is no more strategic and fruitful area of service to the church than that afforded by the camping program. In the relaxed and unhurried mode of camp living, children, teenagers and young people respond readily to suggested motivations given by their leaders for Christian service and consecration of their lives. Numerous life-time dedications to full-time Christian service can be attributed to the "seeds" sown during camping experiences. Leaders find it not the easiest job they have ever done, but certainly one of the most challenging and rewarding they have ever engaged in.—R. F. Helstern, Brookville, Ohio.

Life on a One-Family Station

Robert and Beatrice Bischof
Gulak, Nigeria

Supervision of the dispensary and treating the patients who come is the first duty on Mrs. Bischof's daily schedule

BEFORE Bea and I came to Africa, we heard a great deal about the various stations on the field; among the stations mentioned were the ones which are called one-family stations. These are the stations where only one family lives. There are three such stations in our mission: one is Wandali, over in the west not too far from Waka Training Center; another, Shafa, is on the main road between Garkida, Marama and Waka; a third is Gulak, here in the east.

Both Wandali and Gulak stations are cut off from the rest of the mission during the rainy season; that is, motor travel cannot reach them, and thus there are only three methods of getting out of or into them—by bicycle or horse or on foot. If a bicycle is taken, one ends up by walking a good part of the distance and pushing his bicycle.

Life on a one-family station is quite similar to life on a larger station. One thing any couple who are thinking of coming to the mission field should remember is that both man and wife are expected to work. Each one has his own duties to perform.

Let me, first of all, just take you through Bea's schedule for an ordinary day on a one-family station. The bell rings at 6 a.m. Bea hurriedly gets up, collects her tray of various medicines and trots off to the dispensary. There she will be seeing patients as a doctor would at home. A woman has just brought in her baby; its body is hot; it has malaria. "John," says Bea to her dispenser, "give this baby some atabrine." Over there sits a man that was in a fight. There is a stab wound in his back, a cut on his head, and his hand is badly cut. His wounds must be washed out and bandaged, and then he is given a shot of tetanus vaccine. Over there a little farther is a mother who has just brought in her little baby.

During these cold, windy nights this woman had a small fire in her compound to keep warm, and while they were sleeping the baby rolled into the fire, burning itself badly. It will probably not live, but while there is life there is still hope. The baby is given a shot of tetanus vaccine. The burns are cleaned; boric powder is spread on and the burns bandaged. Such goes the work at the dispensary from 6 a.m. to 10 a.m. (and often a little later) and from 3 p.m. to 6 p.m.

Between dispensary hours, Bea teaches one class of English. Thus she will prepare her lesson notes, grade papers and such. She is also attending a class in the Hausa language at the school; so she will spend some time studying for it. Her evenings are spent in reading, writing letters, sewing, preparing things for the next day or studying language. Quite a full day for a wife. Bea has other duties as well. Saturday she has meetings of the women or, as you call it, the women's missionary society. Sunday she will teach the Sunday-school class of women or else sit in on it.

Now for a little of my schedule. It is quite a lot more flexible than Bea's. This is because part of my work is to visit the outvillages. I get up and ring the bell at 6 a.m., wait around till the laborers come and then tell them the things which must be taken care of for the day. This morning the young boys were put to carrying bricks as we are building a house for one of the teachers. Some men are mixing mud; others are putting up a temporary mat shelter for patients at the dispensary. All the huts are full and some people need a place to sleep.

Somewhere between 7:30-8:00 Bea and I will eat breakfast. After breakfast there are several things which I may do. This past Tuesday, together with our blind evangelist and several other Christians, I went northeast of Gulak to the village of Midlu. There we held a service and talked to the people about God and his love shown to us through his Son, Jesus Christ.

Our main purpose in going there was to talk to them about putting a class of religious instruction in their village. The chief and elders were quite enthusiastic about it, and I believe before the rains come arrangements will be completed to place an evangelist in their village. Or I might, as I try to do at least once a week during the dry season, go over to Brishishiwa to see the junior-primary school and give the teachers some help.

I teach English to class IV, eight periods a week; so lesson plans, grading of papers and such take some of my time. Also English is taught to the practice teachers at least two hours a week. Then there is the work of observing the teaching, advising the teachers and keeping all the school records in order.

I am pastor of the local church. Meetings are held with the church committee, a Bible study is conducted, and I take my regular turn in preaching. Often counsel is given to the Christians who from time to time stop at the house and ask for some spiritual help. In the church work, all the duties of a pastor at home are carried on.

In all, Bea and I have quite a full schedule. But that is how it should be and we would not in any way feel happy if we were not busy. Perhaps you are wondering whether we do not often get lonely without some other missionaries near by to talk to and to fellowship with. Yes, now and then we do, but we try to keep busy and not let our minds dwell too much on the loneliness. We love the African people very much. But their cultural background and way of life are so much different from ours that it is hard to feel as close a fellowship with them as one might with people of his own cultural background.

For health reasons we do not feel free to visit in their compounds for the purpose of eating with them. Now and then we do have the teachers in for an evening with us where we sing and play some games; but even here, what Bea and I might enjoy, they do not seem to have an interest in.

We attempt to keep ourselves busy in the evenings, the time when we could get lonely, by reading, writing letters and playing some games with each other. Neither one of us as yet has come across a hobby which we have felt interested in and which can be carried on with the minimum of equipment. But in this area we are open to any suggestions which anyone might have, as a hobby would be good for us; in fact it is good for any missionary.

I hope that this gives you just a little picture of life on a one-family station. We enjoy it and find plenty to do.

The Bischofs are first-term missionaries supported by the Brethren Church to serve in the Nigerian mission of the Church of the Brethren. This co-operation with our sister denomination makes possible an expanded mission program.

Out of the Mailbag

Delegates from twenty churches and mission bodies attended the Maharashtrian Regional Christian Conference March 8-10. Chalmer Shull was a guest speaker. Lay leadership, national leadership, church union and religious education were stressed in the conference. Special attention was given to plans for the distribution of materials from Church World Service to help poor village Christians through a program of cottage industries, handcrafts and canneries.

Ernest Shull directed a successful youth camp near Ahwa, Feb. 24-28. Approximately 100 campers and leaders attended.

Meeting with the women of the church is an important part of the work of the missionary wife

Andrew Holderreed was elected moderator at the Marathi district meeting held at Ahwa, Feb. 18-21. The delegates were challenged to meet the opportunities of the day. The district laid plans for a stewardship drive with emphasis on proportionate giving and the tithe.

The highlight of recent weeks at Dahanu has been a splendid observance of Christian Home Week. Special women's meetings were held five afternoons during the week. Prayer services in various homes were held each night. Saturday, Nov. 27, the annual thanksgiving service was observed and this was followed by an auction outside the church of the articles received in the thank offering. That same evening Dr. Shively conducted the preparatory service for the love feast and Mrs. Shively spoke on a timely subject in connection with the Christian home. During the Sunday morning service there was a dedication of children, including Kenneth and Reid Blickenstaff. At the close of the morning service two young men and two young women were baptized. In the evening we had our love feast.

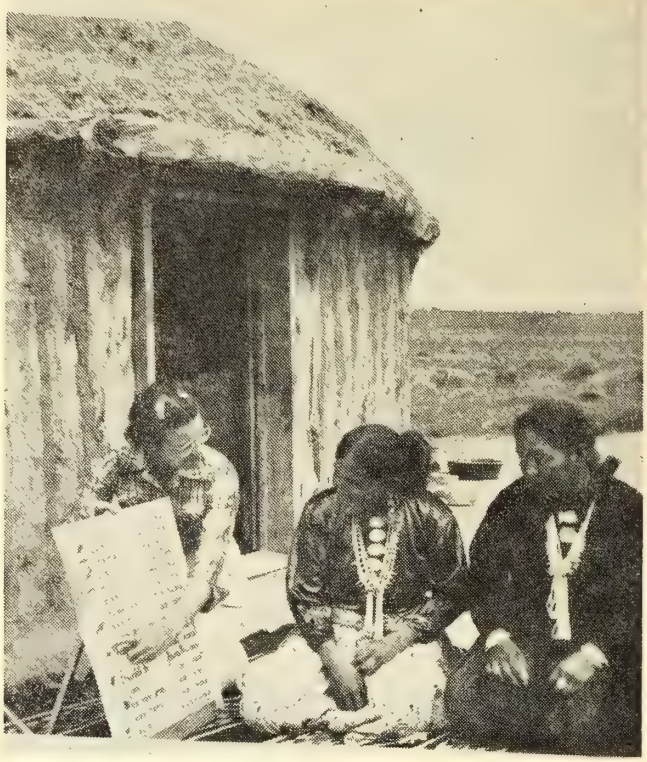
Report From Ecuador



Church. A recent event of interest in the young church was the formal organization of the national congregation. This was effected with the election of lay elders and deacons. One of the lay elders was also named moderator of the local church. The newly formed congregation has begun to set aside a fund for construction of its own place of worship. It has also made application for entrance in the national association of churches now in process of formation in Ecuador.

School. The school is moving toward a greater vocational emphasis with the inauguration this year of a fully equipped woodworking shop, also of classes in mechanics and barbering. The school is now the owner of one universal hand loom and has money, given by an interested businessman, for purchase of another. The school's first course in weaving is under the direction of Point IV technical personnel. The first six regular graduates will complete their primary education this year.

In the Interest of the Indian

A Legislative Program Submitted to the 84th Congress by the Association on American Indian Affairs, Inc.

1. An amendment to H. Con. Res. 108, 83rd Congress, which stated the policy of Congress to terminate the special relationship of the Federal Government to Indian tribes and individual Indians "as rapidly as possible." The proposed amendment should either (a) specifically define criteria for termination or (b) direct the establishment of such criteria, with provision for the addition from time to time of new tests geared to the situation of the Indians immediately involved and as knowledge is gained from experience. The amendatory resolution should provide that it is the intent of Congress, not to enact further withdrawal legislation unless and until the established criteria are met, and further that the administrative officers of the government shall conform their actions to these same criteria in any steps they may lawfully take with a view to termination.

2. A bill to amend Sections 6 and 7 of Public Law 280, 83rd Congress, to provide for Indian consent to the assumption of state civil and criminal jurisdiction over Indian reservations.

3. A bill to amend the Indian Claims Commission Act of 1946, to provide an extension of time during which pending claims may be determined. Present law requires the commission to complete its work by April 1957. The commission cannot possibly meet that dead-line.

4. A bill to facilitate the readjustment of Indian land holdings, with special reference to lands in heirship status, that is lands held by the United States in trust for the benefit of two or more heirs. The bill should give Indians and Indian tribes a first preference in the purchase of such lands, and should further provide funds through which purchases could be financed on a long-term repayment plan either (1) by the establishment of a special loan fund or (2) by express authorization and direction for the use of existing Federal loan funds.

5. A bill to authorize long-term leases for the development of Indian land holdings for public, religious, recreational, educational, commercial and other worthy purposes.

6. A series of special bills to confirm Indian tribal title to certain lands, including minerals. Such bills would include the transfer of title to submarginal lands purchased for Indians and now used by them; the repeal of the 1934 provision which leaves the Papago reservation open to mineral entry under the Federal mining laws, the clarification of title to the diminished reservation at Colville; and similar corrective measures. Included in this group should be a bill to correct the Eastern Cherokee tribal roll, not strictly a land bill, but a bill which would in effect limit the rights to tribal lands and other property to those Indians recognized by the band as members.

7. Three bills to eliminate or modify the department authority in certain administrative matters: (1) to eliminate or modify the supervisory powers of the Secretary of the Interior over attorney contracts with Indian tribes; (2) to give the tribes control over their current income, with strong provisions for penalties for mishandling or misappropriating such funds; (3) to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Interior to use appropriated gratuity funds for the expenses of tribal delegations which would not otherwise be able to testify before the Congress on bills affecting their property and their future, particularly termination bills, and also to forbid the use of tribal funds except when authorized by the tribal owners.

8. A bill or bills, like the Navajo-Hopi Rehabilitation Act, to provide for the economic rehabilitation of certain depressed Indian groups, such as the Papago, Sioux and Minnesota Chippewa. The Upper Colorado River legislation should include adequate language directing construction of the Navajo (Shiprock) irrigation project.

9. A bill to provide for the equitable settlement of native land claims in Alaska.

10. A bill to amend the Johnson-O'Malley Act to require the transfer of Indian Bureau extension services to appropriate state and local agencies, if and when the Indians concerned so request.

Adopted by the Board of Directors, December 1954; submitted to the 84th Congress, January 1955

Southern Iowa

Ottumwa—Bro. John O. Wagner from our congregation has accepted the call to be pastor of the church at Garrison, Iowa. Miss Joyce Berry represented our church and young people at the regional youth conference at McPherson. Since the beginning of the new church year two dedication services for parents and new babies have been held by our pastor. The choir presented their first cantata on Easter evening, The Thorn-crowned King. Bro. Leland Grove of Libertyville, Iowa, is serving as our elder. Bro. Russell Pepple from Bethany Biblical Seminary accepted the call to be pastor of our church. The Pepples moved to Ottumwa the first of April. Bro. Pepple began his pastoral duties before Christmas in our church. During his absence guest speakers included Ray Zook, David Wieand and Robert Boyer. David Wieand showed colored slides of his recent trip to Palestine and the Holy Land the evening of March 6. Some repair work and redecorating has been done in the church parsonage. The children's Sunday-school department received as a gift two small baskets from our missionaries in Africa, Charles and Rozella Lunkley. The baskets were made by the children in Africa and are being used for our offering.—June E. Ware, Ottumwa, Iowa.

Oklahoma, Panhandle of Texas and New Mexico

Antelope Valley—A group from our church provided special music for the World Day of Prayer service at the Methodist church in Garber. We have three fellowship cell groups which meet each week in the various homes. A fellowship dinner was held following the services on April 3. The men had a work day at the church on April 13. They meet every two weeks for an evening meeting. Our women's work group meets the first and third Tuesdays of each month. We held pre-Easter meetings and on Thursday evening Rev. Allen Keller from the Garber Christian church was guest speaker. On Easter morning a sunrise service and breakfast were held at the church. Two persons were baptized into our church fellowship. The women's work group sent relief clothing to the Brethren Service Center at New Windsor.—Mrs. Maggie Cook, Garber, Okla.

Northern Illinois and Wisconsin

Polo—Our attendance was maintained during our building program. Bro. R. H. Miller from Manchester College spoke at a morning worship hour and again at our school of missions. The program, From Daylight to Dark, was given under the direction of Mrs. Dan Fierheller at the all-church family night. So far this year we have sent clothing, bandages, garden seeds and soap grease to the relief center. Proceeds from the surplus and benefit sale were used for the building fund. The union Lenten service was held at our church on Sunday evening with Dr. K. E. Irvin as speaker. On April 17 we had the dedication for the new addition to our building and observed the fiftieth anniversary of our church. Open house was held on April 24.—Mrs. Maynard Wisner, Polo, Ill.

Southern Illinois

Romine—Our church council was held on Friday night, March 25, with Elder Simmons of Oakley in charge. Bro. Glenn Prosise was licensed to the ministry. Our church had a sunrise service on Easter morning followed by breakfast in the church basement. Our love feast was held in the evening of the same day. Our fall evangelistic meetings will be held in October with Bro. Clarence Brubaker as evangelist. We have installed new pews and a pulpit. Middle Indiana

Logansport—On Jan. 30 our young people's and intermediate classes had a program preceding the morning services. In the evening the young people sponsored a carry-in supper followed by pictures on missions. One Sunday a deputation team from Manchester College presented a program. The women's organization is busy making hospital kits. Several of these kits were taken to the district rally at the Salamonie church on March 24. In the exchange of pulpit program, Bro. Richard Knarr of the Sugar Creek church was with us. Bro. Walter Stinebaugh assisted our pastor, Elder Grant Weaver, with council meeting on March 23. Palm Sunday was highlighted with special music by the adult choir and the primary children. In the evening of the same day, we held our communion with Bro. Samuel A. Harley in charge. During the afternoon of this day, baptismal services were held. Bro. Charles Oberlin of the Peru church brought our pre-Easter messages.—Faye Martin, Logansport, Ind.

Peru—We had a school of missions each Sunday evening during the month of Jaunary. India was the subject used for all the classes. Three films were used during the worship hour; Bro. Samuel Harley, district secretary, was with us one evening; and Bro. Holly Garner, missionary on furlough, was with us for both the morning and evening services on the closing Sunday. On Feb 13 we united with the union race relations services which were held in the First Brethren church with Chinese Nationalist, David Luo, as speaker. Kenneth Morse, editor of the Gospel Messenger, was with us on Feb. 27 for both the morning and evening services. On the folowing week end Prof. Paul Halladay was with us in a four-session music conference. The Manchester College a capella choir was with us on the evening of March 13. About fifteen of our women attended the women's spring rally in the Salomonie church. We have a 100% Messenger Club again this year. Our ladies' aid has been meeting every two weeks during the winter months to mend clothing for relief. A fifteen-minute religious program, sponsored by the Bethany class, is being broadcast each Sunday morning over the local radio station.—Mrs. Lamoin Lawson, Peru, Ind.

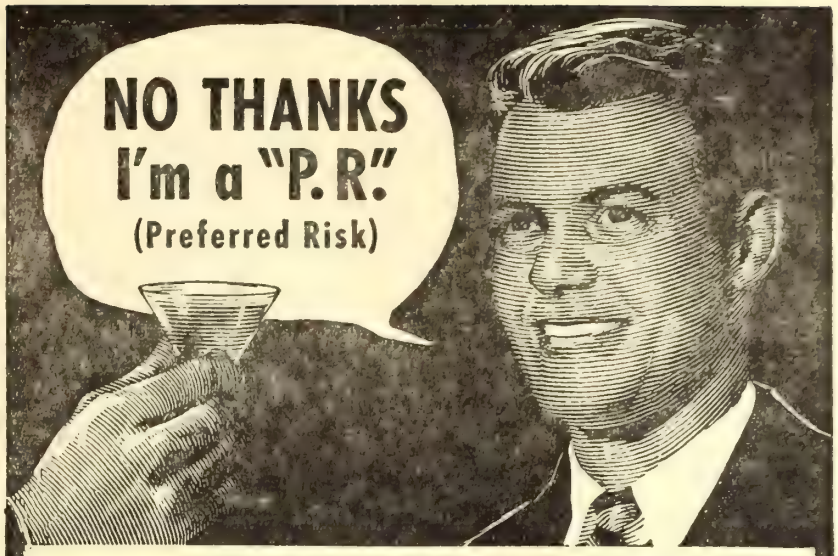
Portland—We met in council with our elder, Bro. Edward Kintner, presiding. A building committee and a cheer committee were appointed at this time. Bro. John D. Mishler conducted a one-week revival meeting. As a result eight have been added to the church by baptism. In preparation for our revival services, we canvassed the neighborhood in teams of two. A group from our church was in attendance at the skill shop at the Salamonie church. Bro. Harl Russell gave a talk on stewardship at our church. Three from our church attended the district women's rally at the Salamonie church. Our district project was the making of hospital kits for Austria. Our love feast was observed on April 24. We are making plans for our daily vacation Bible school.—Eva Dalrymple, Portland, Ind.



Northern Indiana

South Bend, Second—During the month of January when missions were especially emphasized, guest speakers were Miss Anna Warstler, who is now home on furlough from India, and Rev. Tobe Schmucker, director of the Hope Gospel mission in our city. Bro. Harl Russell conducted a stewardship workshop for section one in our church. Two of our young people attended the youth seminar in Washington, D C., and brought back interesting reports. The young people have enjoyed several week-end retreats at Camp Mack during the past several months. Sixteen members were added to the church by baptism upon completion of the membership training class which was conducted by our pastor. Easter sunrise services were followed by our annual breakfast, and the day was closed with an evening musical program.—Mrs. Herman Suter, South Bend, Ind.

Norma Jean Drake and Eloise Overholser attended the youth seminar in Washington, D. C. Abe Mizrahi of Jerusalem, Israel, a senior at Manchester College, gave a talk concerning his home country. Sister Anna Warstler helped to prepare an Indian supper following our mission study on India. Vernon L. Cripe, sheriff of Elkhart County, was guest speaker on juvenile delinquency. Miss Mary Ann Caspar of Hanover, Germany, an exchange student, was also a guest speaker. Sisters Alva Huber and Lula Herr, mothers from our church, and Brethren Glenn Anglemyer and Dean Ramer, young men of draft age, went to Washington, D. C., to talk with officials regarding peacetime conscription. Our church has decided to sponsor a refugee family.—Mrs. Ivan Nunemaker, Wakarusa, Ind.

Northwestern Ohio

Sugar Creek—Since our last report, six new members have been added to our church by baptism. Our CBYF was host to the district Thanksgiving conference. Our church was in charge of services at the Brethren Home in Fostoria in February. Our pastor, Bro. C. O. Brubaker, exchanged pulpits with four other local

I Bought MY AUTO INSURANCE at 25% Off from America's Oldest Total Abstainers Auto Insurance Co.

I proved that I was a total abstainer with a good driving record — and Preferred Risk proved that they could protect me with standard form automobile insurance at a cost 25% below what I had been paying . . . That was five years ago!

But this was only the beginning . . . I found the initial 25% savings was followed by progressive rate reductions based on my own safe driving record. Since I had no accidents my rate went down even lower . . . Today my saving on auto insurance is 44%!

I was surprised that I could save so much, — but I shouldn't have been. I know that drinking drivers are responsible for thousands of costly accidents and cause other insurance companies to pay out millions of dollars in claims . . . Preferred Risk pays out on none of these "drinking" losses because it has none. It has none because it insures non-drinkers* only.

No wonder Preferred Risk has over 100,000 policyholders and over $3,500,000 in assets—and issues America's only non-assessable total abstainers policy. No wonder I smile when I say "No thanks, I'm a P. R."

Non-drinker means TOTAL abstainer. The occasional "social" drinker is NOT eligible. If you qualify, return this coupon for an immediate quotation.

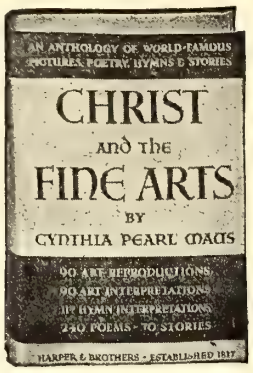
Brethren ministers during Holy Week. Our men's work group served breakfast following the Easte sunrise service. At the evening service the young people presented the play, Easter Dawns. The junior choir wore the new robes for the Easter services. New doors, a bulletin board and church signs have recently been installed. A planning committee has been selected for our remodeling project which is to get under way soon. Our women's work group has been sewing on relief material and materials for Bethany Hospital. The Sunny Future class recently purchased a projector.—Isabelle Houston, Lima, Ohio.



Southern Ohio

Greenville—During the months of January and February we held our mission study on the theme of home missions. Special speakers were Murray Wagner of Troy, Ohio, Raymond Peters of Dayton, Ohio, and our local probate judge. We also used the picture, Dedicated Men. We co-operated with eleven other Darke County churches in a preaching mission which was held at the Oakland church near Gettysburg, Ohio. Bro. Olden Mitchell was guest speaker for the week. Our choir furnished the music for the Sunday evening service. For eight Sunday nights our pastor, Bro. Philip Lauver, was in charge of our Bible study group. Our pastor was in charge of our pre-Easter services. On April 24 ten were baptized.—Mrs. Marion Rife, Greenville, Ohio.

Pleasant Hill—Our church participated in a community Thanksgiving service. India, Ceylon and Pakistan were the countries studied during our school of missions. Our church sponsored a basketball team. Stamped and addressed envelopes were given to all members interested in writing letters to various representatives at Washington, D. C. concerning the universal military training program. On Youth Sunday the young people took a special part in the service. Dedication services were held for seven babies and their parents. In January the film, Examination for Cancer, was shown at our church with a local doctor in attendance. A class on church membership was conducted in February by our pastor. As a result six were baptized into our church on Palm Sunday. A Quaker artist, Francis Clark Brown, gave a chalk talk and the Sons of Harmony of Arcanum were the highlight features for our father and son banquet. The men's work, with the women's work group in charge of the lunch stand, sponsored a church benefit sale with the proceeds being used for the remodeling of our church basement. Our preaching mission with Bro. Moyne Landis as speaker closed on Palm Sunday evening with all churches of our town in attendance. We participated in the Holy Week services in the various churches in our town. Our communion service was held on April 7. Union Good Friday services were also held and a community sunrise service was held at Camp Sugar Grove. We are sponsoring the Marko family of eleven members who will be arriving soon.—Mrs. Lois P. Schleinitz, Ludlow Falls, Ohio.

North Atlantic

Brooklyn, Calvary—One of our own members, Louis Carbone, served as interim pastor during the past two years when our church was without a pastor. Twelve young people were baptized into our church fellowship. In June 1954 Bro. James D'Amico began his pastoral duties in our church. Installation services were held for our pastor at which time a deacon was licensed to the ministry and another deacon was ordained for life. A large number of people from the district helped us celebrate the installing of our pastor. The women of the church served an Italian dinner. After the installation service, there was a time of fellowship and refreshments in the church basement. The young people presented the play, Carol Finds Christmas. Twenty-three from our church attended the district men's fellowship dinner. Our church celebrated home-coming on Washington's birthday, Elder Waltz from the Germantown church, Philadelphia, was guest speaker. In February a group of our people were guests of the Bethany church, Philadelphia. On April 3 ten persons were baptized and received into our church fellowship.—Laura Moyer, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The women of the church are supporting a native child in Africa and also are contributing towards the furnishing of a nurse's room at Bethany hospital.—Mrs. Anna Graybill, Manheim, Pa.

Hatfield—Our newly organized church choir combined with the choir of the Indian Creek church in presenting a concert at our church. Our first school of missions was held for five Sunday evenings. The book, Under Three Flags, was used for the adults. Our assembly periods featured India exhibits, the film, Valley of the Sun, and addresses by Rev. and Mrs. George Paulus, returned Brethren in Christ missionaries to India. Sister Emma Ziegler, who resided in our locality during her furlough, gave us help in these projects and a farewell service was given for her one Sunday evening. On March 5 the Elizabethtown College choir gave an evening concert. An all-musical program was sponsored by the young adults on March 13. The CBYF group was host to four neighboring youth groups in a worship service at our church followed by a social hour on March 26. At our spring council meeting the church decided to sponsor a refugee family. We also decided to elect two deacons at our next quarterly meeting. The older folks Sunday-school class gave a program one Sunday evening on the Bible, with the offering going to the American Bible society. Our pastor, Bro. Ralph Jones, was elected delegate to Annual Conference.—Mrs. William G. Nyce, Lansdale, Pa.

Middle Pennsylvania

Bellwood—On March 27 the spring rally of circuit one was held in our church on the theme, Seek First the Kingdom. Afternoon speakers were Judy Glasgow and Robert Benner of Bellwood and Dorothy Fowler and Wilbur Fether of Altoona. Bro. Lawrence Thomas was the speaker for the evening service. Our CBYF has regular meetings each Sunday evening and a social activity once a month. The CBYF group painted the walls and ceiling in the church basement. For our midweek prayer meeting we just finished the study of Genesis and have begun 1 Corinthians. We have just completed our subscription to the 75% Messenger Club. The women's work group is making cancer bandages, quilting, and collecting used clothing. The women's group purchased venetian blinds for the parsonage. —Mrs. Cloyd Estep, Bellwood, Pa.

Huntingdon—The school of missions was held during January with India as the study subject. These meetings were preceded by suppers in the church basement. In February spiritual emphasis week was conducted by Bro. Frederick Hollingshead of Harrisburg. Work is progressing rapidly on our Christian education building and already an encouraging increase in Sunday-school attendance has been noted. Our church joined with the other churches in the area in union Lenten, Good Friday and Easter sunrise services. —Mrs. C. Raymond Hetrick, Huntingdon, Pa.

Leamersville—Since our last report one member has been received into our fellowship by letter. Our church joined with two other churches in a bake sale for the benefit of crippled children in our county. The women's work group meets once a week to quilt for relief and do other types of work for the church. On Sunday, April 3, Bro. Harshberger from Martinsburg showed pictures of the Holy Land. —Mrs. Rachel Claar, East Freedom, Pa.

Several of our women attended the children's work conference at Nokesville. At our recent quarterly council meeting our pastor, Harold Kettering, was released for a summer's work in Europe. His place will be filled by a supply pastor. The Evergreen church observed the World Day of Prayer with the Mt. Vernon Methodist church and the Congregational Christian church. Five persons from the Evergreen church spent a day working at New Windsor. The women sent used clothing and a comforter to New Windsor for relief.—Nelie Wampler, Geer, Va.

Newport News—The Clericus Chorus from Bridgewater College presented a program of music on Feb. 5. Our young people gave a play entitled, The Fruit of the Vine. This was a part of the World Day of Prayer program. Four Park View churches were represented at our union services on the World Day of Prayer. The Zion Baptist church provided special music for this occasion. On March 11 we held our church council. By action of council we voted to become a self-supporting church. Six of our members attended the district children's workers' conference at the Nokesville church. A large delegation from our church also attended the youth rally at the Manassas church on March 19-20. Our pastor preached a series of sermons over the local radio station in co-operation with the ministerial association. Our church participated in the One Great Hour of Sharing.—Mrs. H. H. Roberts, Newport News, Va.

Nokesville—Bro. Carl Zigler began his pastorate of the Nokesville and Valley View congregations the first of September, succeeding Bro. D. D. Fleishman. Bro. Zigler held a week of evangelistic services. Home-coming day was observed with Bro. Zigler conducting the morning service and Bro. Warren Bowman delivering the evening address. A family Christmas party was held in the church basement at which time the children from the Sunday school were in charge. The women's work has contributed clothing, grease for soap, canning jars, sewing articles and other items for Brethren Service work. The men's and women's Bible classes are continuing their missionary project of supporting a native African evangelist. The young adult class is supporting Mark Schechter, young son of a medical missionary to India. The Faithful Climbers class has purchased some secretarial equipment for the church. All church groups have co-operated towards paying the church debt which was liquidated by the first of January.—Anna Hooker, Nokesville, Va.

First Virginia

Green Hill—Our school of missions was conducted through the month of January on India, Pakistan and Ceylon. The filmstrip, They Went Forth Two by Two, was used by the men's work organization. A new women's circle was organized for the ladies who work and could not attend the regular ladies' aid meeting during the day. The name chosen for this circle is the Mamie Kinzie circle in honor of our first pastor's wife. Our young people gave a program on the Sunday morning of National Youth Week. A Valentine banquet was given at the parsonage for the young people. Our love feast and communion was held April 8.—Charlotte Coon, Salem, Va.

Poages Mill—At our council meeting Bro. H. Allen Hoover was elected elder for the new year. We are still without a pastor, but have worship services twice each Sunday with Brethren O. D. Eller, C. P. Stump, John S. Showalter, Paul B. Sanger and our elder in charge of the services on Sunday mornings. The young people of the church sponsor the Sunday evening worship services with different speakers. The attendance at both services and for Sunday school have increased. Bro. A. H. Showalter of Masons Cove conducted a series of services in our church. Twenty-three have been reconsecrated, eleven baptized and four received by letter into our fellowship. The Sunday school presented the Christmas program, Holy Night. The women's work group together with the adult Sunday-school class provided cheer for the sick and shut-ins at Christmas time. Our men's work group has worked on cleaning and beautifying the church lawn. Our pre-Easter services closed with our spring love feast on April 9.—Mrs. John Grubb, Roanoke, Va.

Roanoke, Ninth Street—The proceeds from the children's fair has been used for equipment for the educational building. All of the Sunday-school classes took part in our candlelighting service on Christmas Eve. During the month of January a school of missions was held on Sunday evenings climaxed with a fellowship supper. We observed Brotherhood Week in February by having Rabbi Tobias Rothenberg of the Jewish synagogue as guest speaker. The Addison Negro high school choir presented a concert on Feb. 20. Our men continue to give at least one night a week helping with the work around the church. The district leadership training school was held in our church in February. Our programs for Sunday evening services during March was on our church and the world situation. Guest speakers for these special services included Harry Gardner from the Troutville church, Henry Eller, Ora Delauter and Guy Wampler. We are looking forward to our day camps again this summer for the primaries, juniors and junior highs. Our pastor, Bro. Lawrence Rice, participated in a week of TV discussions with Rev. Clifford McCoy and Rev. Howard Leming. Other programs of this nature are being planned for the near future.—Mrs. H. H. Neathawk, Jr., Roanoke, Va.

Roanoke, Williamson Road—Our revival was held with Bro. Lawrence Rice of Roanoke conducting the meetings. Seven were baptized and nine received by letter into our church fellowship. Plans are in the process for the building of a church auditorium. The children gave a Christmas program at the church. The first of January our pastor, Bro. Carson M. Key, accepted the call to the Antioch church. Bro. E. F. Sherfy is now serving as our interim pastor. Bro. Edward Ziegler of Elgin, Ill., has accepted the call as our pastor and will be with us the first of September. During February a school of missions on India was conducted on Sunday evenings with classes for children, young people and adults. Our love feast was held April 3. Bro. Sherfy was in charge of our pre-Easter services.—Mrs. H. W. Brubaker, Roanoke, Va.

Trinity—Bro. David L. Rogers was with us for a revival meeting on March 9-20. Two new members have been baptized and one has been received by letter. Our church met in council on April 4, with Elder H. B. Layman presiding. We are considering building a new addition to our church house. Our women's group recently bought a vacuum cleaner for the church and had the classrooms in the children's department painted.—Mrs. H. B. Layman, Troutville, Va.

Northern Virginia

Mill Creek, Mt. Pleasant—Our church continues to grow in attendance. The women's organization served dinner two days for the men while they were painting the church and roof. Our men's organization has been helping to improve our church grounds and church basement. The women met at the church one day to make comforters. Our CBYF purchased Bibles for two members of the church who are in the armed services. On Sunday night, March 20, our spring council meeting was held at the church. Our Easter program was presented at the church on Easter evening with the CBYF in charge. Revival meetings were held April 11-17, with Bro. Russell Showalter as the evangelist. These meetings closed with our communion service. Our home-coming will be held on May 29. Our church accepted the group insurance plan for our pastor which was explained to us by Mrs. Mark Roller. Our Bible school will be held in the evenings again this year beginning June 27 to July 3. There will be classes for all ages.—Miss Audrey Wisman, Harrisonburg, Va.

Moorefield—Our general council was held at the Walnut Grove church April 3 with Bro. Joe Mason, elder, acting as moderator. A pre-Easter service was conducted by Emmett Dettra of Midland, Va. The youth group meets each Tuesday night of the week at the Walnut Grove church and every Wednesday evening the Evergreen youth fellowship group meet. The entire interior of the sanctuary and two new Sunday-school rooms have been covered with plaster board and will be painted in the near future. The church ground has been leveled which adds much to the appearance of the church building. We are looking forward to the rededication of our church in June. The women's work group has increased in members over that of last year.—Wilmetta Clayton, Moorefield, W. Va.

Second Virginia

Barren Ridge—As a result of the revival meetings conducted in our church by Bro. A. R. Showalter, eight persons were baptized into our fellowship. The youth fellowship presented the play, The Blue Angle, at a number of churches. Our school of missions was held during the month of January ending with a fellowship supper and the film, The City Story. A number of our people attended the spiritual life institute at Bridgewater. The women's work group has made layettes and comforters for relief and has carpeted the church. We invited a neighboring church in for our study of the mission book on India. Bro. Frank Garber was our guest speaker. Our church met in quarterly council in February with Bro. Homer J. Miller presiding in the absence of our elder. The youth presented the church with forty folding chairs. Brother Homer J. Miller has resigned as pastor of our church as of the first of September. The men have been remodeling our church—enlarging our basement and finishing our Sunday-school rooms. A number of our people attended the leadership training school in Staunton.—Flossie V. Gibson, Staunton, Va.

Beaver Creek, Montezuma—Our revival was held with Bro. Floyd Mitchell of Martinsburg, W. Va., as the evangelist. As a direct result of these messages, ten new members were added to the church by baptism and nine by letter. Dedication services were held for the new parsonage just recently completed with Bro. William Smith of Bridgewater College delivering the dedicatory address. Open house was held during the afternoon and evening. Communion services at the Beaver Creek church were well attended by our members. Council meeting was held at our church on Dec. 5. The children's department presented the Christmas program with a social hour following for all the parents and children. The young people sponsored a Christmas caroling party. The temperance director sponsored the presentation of the play, What Shall It Profit? During the month of February our mission study group meet each Sunday evening with Bro. Willoughby of Bridgewater College as instructor on missions in cities and faraway India. We concluded with a fellowship supper on the last Sunday night serving foods used in India. The aid society sent pillowcases, bed sheets, washcloths for an Austrian hospital and apron material, scissors, needles, thread and thimbles for women in concentration camps to New Windsor. We also sent packages of seeds for relief.—Mrs. Arlie S. Glick, Dayton, Va.

Moscow—Our evangelistic meeting was held by Bro. M. R. Wolf from Bridgewater College. The World Day of Prayer service was held in our church with five denominations taking part in the program. A school of missions on India was held on Sunday nights during the month of March with Miss Mary Buck as teacher. The men's organization recently had a covered dish supper with Bro. James Eshleman as guest speaker. The group has a heifer ready for shipment overseas. We have a 100% Messenger Club again this year. The aid society had two all-day meetings and completed ten comforters. The women also sent sheets and towels to the district project. Layettes and used clothing were also given to relief work. Seven packets of goodwill seeds were sent from our church. Our love feast was held April 8. Recently Carolyn Ikenberry gave a talk about and showed pictures of her year as an exchange student in Germany. Our CBYF has been having one Sunday night program a month. We observed One Great Hour of Sharing in March. On April 19 there was a temperance program held at our church with Rev. Womer as guest speaker. This program was sponsored by the Elk Run, Lebanon and Moscow congrega-

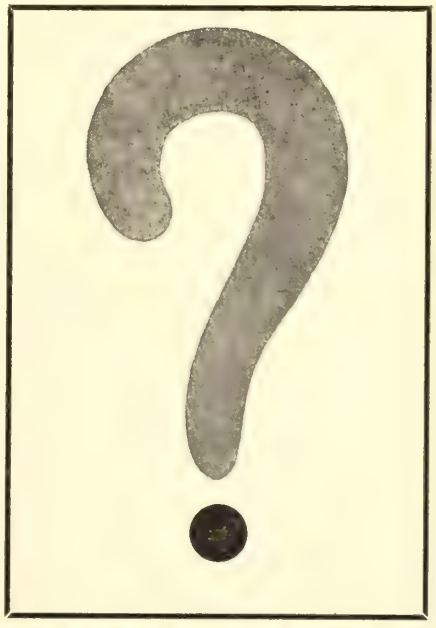
*SMOKING and CANCER



(A DOCTOR'S REPORT)

by ALTON OCHSNER, M. D.

Much is being said and written about the effects of smoking on the functioning of our respiratory systems. Now after years of painstaking research by many scientists this book has been produced in which the conclusions they reached are presented for the enlightenment of all. Before change must come knowledge and understanding. To that end this book has been written. Youth who read this report will certainly think seriously on the possible effects before starting a lifetime habit that will subtract years from their lives. Habitual smokers should study this report. If they are entirely honest with themselves they may well take the proposed method for conquering the habit. 96 pages. $2.00

Pleasant Hill—Our church council was held Feb. 18 at the church. The idea of landscaping the ground around the church was discussed and the board of trustees was appointed to study this project and report back to the church. Our revival was held in May by Bro. Eugene H. Kahle of Danville, Va. Our love feast service will be observed on May 28. Our minister, Bro. J. Willard Bowman, will be leaving us the last of August. The pastoral board was asked to secure another pastor.—Beatrice Rankin, Crimora, Va.

Staunton—Our yearly mission educational program on home missions was held for six nights, beginning on Jan. 2. At the same time a class on church membership for juniors and junior high young people was held by our pastor. Our church participated in the city-wide church attendance crusade. We have had a very good attendance as a result of this crusade with the church school reaching two hundred and sixty-four, the highest point in its history. The leadership training school for the Staunton-Waynesboro-Barren Ridge communities was held in our church. James Renz of Elgin, national director of temperance work, was with us for our morning service on Feb. 27. Speakers for our Holy Week services were Russell Beahm, Ervin Block and Charles Whitacre.—Mrs. Cline Rodeffer, Staunton, Va.

Waynesboro—In the fall of 1954 our church had the Wells' Fund Raising Organization with us to help in a campaign to raise money for a new church building. This program is progressing and we broke ground for the new church in April. Pre-Easter services were held April 3-8, with Bro. Donald Clague of Bridgewater as guest minister. Our school of missions was held during the month of January on the theme, The Church in the City. Our church is affiliated with the Council of Church Women. Our women's work group is active in national, regional and district projects. The women set a goal to make twenty-five comforters for local and foreign relief this year. They have made contributions to the American Bible Society and to the migrant work. They also made a donation towards a television set for the district home.—Mrs. John E. Campbell, Waynesboro, Va.

Southern Virginia

Fraternity—Our pastor and his wife and five young people with their adviser attended the youth seminar in Washington, D. C., and New York. On March 6 a dedication service was held for yard goods, buttons, thread, needles and comforters for relief. A home-coming service is being planned in celebration of our fifty-fifth anniversary on May 29. Our pastor, Paul R. White, will conduct a series of meetings beginning on Sept. 11. Two new members have been added to our church. At council meeting early in March it was decided to purchase a new piano for the church sanctuary. A number from our junior high department attended the district rally in Christianburg, Va. Several young people attended the district youth banquet at the Bassett church on March 26. On March 27 following the monthly Sunday evening fellowship meal, we spent an hour with Fanny J. Crosby in a hymn sing. Several members of the men's and women's work groups attended the annual spring meeting of these two groups in the Stonewall church. Pre-Easter services were held by our pastor, closing with our love feast and communion service on April 7. Mrs. H. D. Robertson, Winston-Salem, N. C.

Germantown, Brick—Our young people were host to the district youth cabinet. The following evening Bro. M. R. Zigler spoke to our people on Brethren Service in Europe. An offering was received at that time for Brethren Service. Some of the men from our church attended the district men's banquet at the Bassett church. We recently honored our elder and his wife, Brother and Sister J. B. Peters, on their golden wedding anniversary. The young people presented the play, A Stranger in Bethlehem. They also went caroling on Christmas Eve and the children went caroling on Christmas morning to the shut-ins. Four of our CBYF members attended the hilltop at the Danville church. The CBYF hold regular monthly discussions followed by a social in the various homes. In the absence of our pastor Bro. Charles Flora was guest speaker. Brethren Elwood Wray, Maurice Barnhart, Joseph Ferguson and Jay Plunkett were recently installed into the office of deacon. Our women's work group has donated additional equipment to the church kitchen. We have a 100% Messenger Club again this year.—Mrs. Levi T. Angle, Rocky Mount, Va.

First West Virginia

Old Furnace—At our January council meeting, four Brethren were called to the office of deacon. They, with their wives, were installed into office the same evening. Seven members have been received by letter since our last report. Several of our men attended the district men's work banquet at the Keyser church. A family life institute was held at our church with Brother and Sister Willoughly of Bridgewater, Va., as instructors. On Dec. 19 we presented the Christmas cantata, The Miracle at the Inn. The following Sunday the children gave a Christmas program. The young people went caroling. The women's work prepared and delivered baskets at Christmas time to the aged and shut-ins. The women have also knotted comforters, quilted one quilt, collected clothing and toilet soap, made friendship packets and contributed to the seeds-of-hope project. World Day of Prayer services were held in the Wiley Ford church with three other churches of the community participating. The CBYF is meeting once every two weeks in the various homes. Several of the young people attended the district round-table in Keyser. During the month of March our church conducted a school of peace each Sunday evening. Our pastor, Bro. H. W. Peters, taught a class of adults using as a textbook, Seventy Times Seven.—Miss Wanda Bohrer, Keyser, W. Va.

ASSEMBLING FOR ACTION

FOR the second time an Annual Conference will meet in the large and adequate Civic Auditorium in Grand Rapids, Michigan. Here is an aerial view of the business section of the city where several hundred delegates will assemble to carry on the business of the church. Though the river that cuts through the picture is "Grand" and though its "rapids" were once rough enough to command attention, the setting is placid enough in this picture. Perhaps the Conference can be a calm and deliberate one also, unruffled by disturbing questions that so often put an end to smooth sailing. We hope so. But we hope also that the Conference does not achieve harmony at the price of ignoring issues either within or outside the church or by delayng action on them until some more convenient time. Sometimes there must be a troubling of the waters before healing comes. We expect dedicated action for Christ and the church to be the order of the day at Grand Rapids.

READERS WRITE . . . to the editor

The Gospel Messenger welcomes letters commenting on editorials, articles and news. Letters should be brief and brotherly.

Old Hymnals

On reading Bro. Eberly's treatise on "The Hymnbooks of Henry Kurtz," I remembered seeing two little books, like the ones described, in an old chest which I inherited from my grandfather.

On delving into the chest I came up with the two books: one, a first edition of Die Kleine Leider Sammlung, of 1826. The other has the same title and is dated 1835.

As my knowledge of the German language is very limited I am not able to read the books but we showed them in the primary Sunday school and compared the size of them to the size of our new hymnal. Then we sang the hymn, Savior of My Soul, which was translated and published in the new book.—Mrs. J. C. Harless, Burnettsville, Ind.

The Better Way

First, a word of appreciation for the high-grade literature the Church of the Brethren puts out. Three of the best Sunday--school papers. Another best: Brethren Bible Study Monthly and another best is the Gospel Messenger. Through the years it has grown in size, in expressive pictures, in doctrine, in sound teaching and in deep spirituality. Thanks to all our editors. Each issue is loaded with good articles and interesting reading.

I enjoyed reading David B. Pitler's "I Quit the Liquor Business" in the April 2 paper. After he pictures conditions in the alcoholic's home he emphasizes this thought that the liquor traffic is not content with its present business and profits but is determined to expand continually to make more profits out of human misery. And here is a clipping out of the White Ribbon that illustrates that thought. "A cereal beverage with an alcoholic content of one-half of one per cent is being sold as a beer for children that they may sip it as they watch television while mother and father drink strong beer." There is a new drink advertised as "Orange Tommy—juice with a kick." The liquor traffic is a giant evil in our midst. A great responsibility rests upon the Christian church to protest against bad bills, to vote dry, to practice and teach total abstinence and pray.

And what about universal military training? We remember what Mohandas Gandhi said—"If you prepare to kill others, others will prepare to kill you." Our President, Mr. Eisenhower, says he hates war, for it settles nothing. We all know that it multiplies problems and hatreds. Then we should find a better way to prepare for peace and goodwill. Not the peacetime conscription of the beautiful youth of our fair land.

Again, our vote and our prayers will help to decide. May we hear the voice of the Spirit and do the better way.—Martha H. Keller, Worthington, Minn.

Water Baptism

I was hurt a bit, when reading April 2 issue of G. M., that a brother said, "He (Jesus) was coming into his own as a lay teacher, and discarded the old water system for one more in tune with the will of God." I thought Christ in tune always. We dare not belittle God and Christ's way. We can and may discard many things if we are looking for the easy way to heaven. But God's or Christ's water system has been installed. All we need do is to abide by it. After baptism the Holy Spirit. And we too need both, but we need not expect the latter, unless we have complied with the former. It is a born again process, a burial, a washing process and, much more, an "answering of a clear conscience." But little or much water cannot save us, we may go into the water a dry sinner and come up a wet one.

Jesus was a good example for Christian baptism. It lay upon him "to fulfill all righteousness." Water baptism alone cannot save us, yet we cannot be saved without it. Jesus set the example at the beginning of his ministry. "For if any man will take away from the words of the book, of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life and out of the Holy City" (Rev. 22:19). Let us beware.—Orpha Nusbaum, Middlebury, Ind.

In the Messenger

I enjoy reading the Messenger, because we hear from the lands around the world. We learn what missionaries are doing in other lands, and we hear of people in other lands who love the Christ Jesus who first loved them and worship the same God who watches over all the world. And they want to help carry the gospel to their people. May God bless the gospel of the Lord Jesus where it goes.—Oran Younce, Greenville, Ohio.

"See, I have set before you this day life and good, death and evil . . . I have set before you life and death, blessing and curse;

"THEREFORE CHOOSE LIFE"

John C. Middlekauff

H. Armstrong Roberts

This is God's world which he has created, which he sustains and for which he has plans; if we want good and not evil we submit ourselves to his authority

FOR forty years, Moses had led the children of Israel in their exodus from Egypt —forty years of wanderings in the barren wilderness of the Sinai Peninsula. Encamped in Moab, not too far from where the Jordan River empties its waters into the Dead Sea, Moses gathered all the people to hear a farewell address—for he was soon to die on lonely Mt. Nebo and Joshua was to assume leadership.

After recounting the providential care of God during their wanderings and reminding them again of the nature of God's covenant with them, he offers them the most momentous choice that a man or a nation can face—the choice of life and good, death and evil. "See, I have set before you this day life and good, death and evil," and again, "I have set before you life and death, blessing and curse; therefore chose life."

Dr. Arnold Toynbee, the noted British historian whose recently completed ten-volume work, A Study of History, has created unusual interest in academic circles, says that the same choice of life and death which was laid before the Israelites is being set before our generation. In an article published several weeks ago, Dr. Toynbee says that 1955 may be the turning point in man's destiny. He argues that for the past 250 years, Western man has substituted "natural science" and "the practical applications of it in technology" for spiritual ideals. He goes on to say that if we are to live, to have good instead of evil, we must substitute a new spiritual vision for the secular and materialistic ideals which have guided us since about the year 1700.

Our belief in science has led us to the very brink of catastrophe, for science, in our day, has placed in the hands of men the power to destroy life on the earth. It is not that our wickedness today is any greater than it was 100 or 500 years ago but that our progress in material power has made the practical consequences of man's conduct infinitely more serious than they have been any time in the past.

Pastor of the Stone church, Huntingdon, Pennsylvania

A man killed by a blow on the head with a stone hatchet is just as dead as the man who is killed by the explosion of the H-bomb. But a dozen men in one bomber can drop one H-bomb on a crowded American city and in an instant wipe out four or five million men, women and children. And the fall-out would kill or seriously injure millions more who might be 100 to 200 miles from the point of the explosion.

Added to man's terrifying powers of destruction is the emergence of communism which Toynbee describes as a revival of the old religion of collective human power. It is important that we understand, as Toynbee points out, that communism is a religion and that its central faith is this: the individual human being has no rights against the community but he exists for the sake of the community. He is a cog in a machine, a bee in a hive, an ant in a colony. This eminent historian argues that we cannot meet the challenge of communism on secular ground. If we are to win over communism, it must be on religious grounds and primarily upon the religious faith that each individual soul has been created in God's image and has supreme value in his eyes. In short, says Toynbee, it will be "a vision of God's nature and man's destiny that can inspire us, with the help of God, to lead a new life."

If our generation is to forsake secularism and return to the spiritual foundations which our fathers forsook 250 years ago, what will be some of the characteristics of our religious faith? If we are to choose life and good instead of death and evil, what kind of a religion will our generation have to adopt, for it ought to be obvious to everyone that just anything tagged "religion" will not do.

Recognize the Sovereignty of God

A religion that will be effective at this potential turning point in man's destiny will have to be a religion that recognizes the sovereignty of God. The religion of the Jews was imperfect and unsatisfactory in many respects—and Jesus criticized it at a number of points. But there was one grand characteristic of Judaism that Jesus commended and that was its recognition of the centrality and the sovereignty of God. At its best, Judaism held as the foremost of the commandments "You shall have no other gods before me" (Ex. 20:3). Running like a scarlet cord throughout the whole Old Testament is this conception of the absolute authority and kingship of God over men. The psalmist declared: "The Lord is a great God, and a great King above all gods" (95:3). And when our Lord was asked, "Which is the great commandment in the law?" his reply was, "You shall love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soul, and with all your mind" (Matt 22:36-37).

According to the teachings of Jesus, life is not a democracy wherein each man votes what is right and what is wrong. Rather, we live in a kingdom—the kingdom of God—and we must submit to the authority of God or we will find defeat, disaster and death. This is God's world. He created it; he sustains it; he has a plan for it. And if we want life and good, we must submit to his authority. He gives us freedom of choice but not the freedom to choose the consequences of our choices!

For far too long, our world has proceeded on the assumption that man was on the throne and that it was up to God to conform to our plans and our purposes. If our civilization is to escape total destruction, we must return to the idea that God is the sovereign ruler of the universe and we must conform to his will or perish!

Recognize the Primacy of Character

A religion that will give men life instead of death must be a

The Holy Spirit Works Unofficially Too

IT IS A healthy sign when government bureaucrats can laugh at themselves. One day recently some high officials had some fun by imagining what would happen to Lincoln's Gettysburg Address if it had to be cleared by present government bureaus. They noted the questions that might be raised by the Budget Bureau, the State Department and by other agencies. By the time the speech had made the rounds of departments it had undergone so many editorial changes that it was finally recommitted to a "working group for further study." If Lincoln's address had received such official treatment, it would have lost all of its classic simplicity, its eloquent phrasing, its moving spirit—all that now makes it immortal.

It is easy to laugh at government bureaucrats, but consider also what might happen if the great love passage in 1 Corinthians were to be submitted, without the sanction of Scripture, as a statement for adoption by our Annual Conference. Undoubtedly various commissions on the General Brotherhood Board would have changes to propose. Standing Committee could hardly let it go by without raising some questions as to whether such pointed references as Paul makes might not create some controversy. And of course when the statement came to the floor of Conference delegates would have other changes to suggest, other doubts to express, other amendments to propose.

Fortunately for Paul, he had no editorial committee to satisfy and no conference to please. Yet he did have to write for some rather special situations in the Corinthian church and his lovely song concerning divine love was prompted by a rather unlovely problem. Indeed, we can be thankful that the Holy Spirit is able to work through some highly individualistic minds as well as through duly constituted councils and committees.

If Amos had submitted his Bethel sermon in a contest for aspiring preachers, he would never have been chosen "seminarian-of-the-year." Jeremiah once ran into a king who thought he could dispose of the prophet's writing by using his pocketknife and feeding the fireplace. But Jeremiah promptly started over and did a more thorough job on the failures of the king.

Certainly we need official statements, properly cleared and duly adopted, and maybe we need some safeguards against self-appointed prophets who won't play by the rules. But we ought to see how deadly our requirements can sometimes be. We ought to give the Holy Spirit a better opportunity to break through and across official channels, if need be, in order to give us the rebuke or the encouragement we need. Let all our business be carried on decently and in order (even by Robert's Rules of Order), but if God should raise up an Amos of Tekoa or a Paul of Tarsus or an Abraham Lincoln among us, by all means let him speak lest we miss hearing a word from the Lord.—K.M.

The Kingdom Is at Hand

FROM the very beginning of his public ministry Jesus asserted that the kingdom of God was at hand. As he preached this gospel of the kingdom, as he taught and trained his disciples, as he healed many of their diseases, he proclaimed a new order, a new rule of God in the lives of men, a new kingdom.

Certainly he meant to say that the kingdom is here. It was not some distant Shangri-La, some remote paradise from which no visitor returned, but a present reality. The kingdom was there, in Galilean villages, in the midst of fishermen and farmers, along Judean roads, in Samaria as well as Jerusalem. Wherever the king was received, there was the kingdom.

And certainly he meant to say that the kingdom is now. Whatever its future consumation may be, the kingdom came with the king. But it did not die when the king hung on a cross. His kingdom is for ever and ever. It is a kingdom without end. And it is a present reality we can lay hold of now, not some future reward for which we wait.

To say that the kingdom is at hand should mean not only that it is here, but also that it is something to take hold of. There are handles of faith to which one can lay one's own hand. There are handles for action—works, if you please, that accompany faith—and they are available for immediate application. To ignore the practical outlines of the kingdom as Jesus set them forth or to relegate them to some later dispensation, some future millennium, is to miss the kingdom that is "at hand" here and now.

Of course the kingdom is also a future kingdom. But the promise that servants should "inherit the kingdom" was given to those who ministered—here and now—to any who needed food, clothing, kindliness and love. If the king identified himself with the hungry, the naked, the lonely, the suffering and the lost, can the church that proclaims his kingdom do any less? In seeking first that kingdom we ought never to overlook the opportunities for service that are at hand.—K.M.

William Carey

The father of modern missions

"If God gives us work to do, and fits us for it, and strengthens us in it, that is enough"
—Carey

Elgin S. Moyer

IN THE late years of the eighteenth century the Christian faith had reached a low ebb in Europe and America. The Wesleyan revival in England, the Pietistic movement in Germany, and the "Great Awakening" in the United States, had helped prepare the way for revival in the church and for a forward movement in the Christian world. At this time a young man was living in England who in the Providence of God was destined to bring a new challenge to the whole Christian church. This man was William Carey.

Carey was born in a small village in Northampton, England, in 1761. He was the son of Edmund Carey, a hand-loom weaver, who also became his only schoolmaster. At the age of twelve, William was a field laborer and at the age of fourteen was apprenticed to a shoemaker. The boy early developed studious habits and took an interest in reading the Bible. He said, "From my infancy I was accustomed to reading the Scriptures." He had a great fondness for plant and animal life, a passion that remained with him throughout life. As a lad he filled his room with insects, little animals and plants. As a missionary in India he had his farm and botanical garden. He was adept in the study of languages and early learned Latin, Greek, Hebrew, French and Dutch. This ability to learn languages was a great asset to him in his missionary life.

A simple piety pervaded the Carey home, but the family was in humble circumstances. His school privileges in early life were, therefore, greatly limited. His becoming a shoemaker's apprentice, however, did not end his thirst for knowledge, his interest in nature or his study of the languages. When in this employ he came into a vital religious experience. At the age of twenty-two he joined the Baptist Church, and soon became a Baptist preacher.

He married before he was twenty and earned a living for himself and family by teaching school, making and mending shoes and preaching. Being an indefatigable student, he continued his study of languages, read with avidity the Voyages of Captain James Cook and followed with keen interest the missionary work of John Eliot and David Brainerd among the American Indians. On the wall of his shoeshop he hung a large map of the world, on which he indicated the latest religious and political statistics and facts of the different countries as he was able to learn them.

At a Baptist ministers' meeting in Northampton in 1792, in a sermon he said, "Expect great things from God. Attempt great things for God." At the close of this meeting he seized Andrew Fuller by the arm and asked, "And are you, after all, going again to do nothing?" This sermon and this question were not without effect. Later the same year the first Baptist Missionary Society was organized and Carey was chosen as one of the pioneer missionaries to be sent out by the society.

Carey's original plan had been to go to the island of Tahiti, but through the influence of John Thomas, an eccentric and enthusiastic Christian physician who had earlier been in India, the mission was directed to India. In 1793 Mr. Carey and Dr. Thomas were ready to start for the field. But the East India Company, hostile to any missionary endeavor, discovering the purpose and plan of these missionaries who had already embarked on one of their vessels, forced them to leave before the ship sailed.

By the time they had found passage on a friendly Danish vessel, Mrs. Carey, who up to this moment had refused to go to India, consented to accompany her husband if she were permitted to take her sister with her. Permission was granted; and Mr. and Mrs. Carey and their four children, Mrs. Carey's sister, and Dr. and Mrs. Thomas and their one child were soon en route to India.

Carey's early years in India were beset with tremendous difficulties and discouragements. Dr. Thomas proved to be a man of unsound business judgement and of financial irresponsibility.

Librarian, Moody Bible Institute, Chicago

Within a few weeks Thomas had spent the sum that was designed to maintain the mission for a year. Some of Carey's family became ill and his wife, overburdened by the hardships and difficulties of adjustment to the strange environment, developed a serious mental illness that burdened them until her death in 1807.

Soon after arriving in India Carey became superintendent of an indigo factory in Calcutta, which provided maintenance for him and his family for several years. When this factory closed in 1799, he purchased a small indigo plantation and started a mission. But since the East India Company refused to allow missionaries to reside or work in territories which they controlled, Carey was forced to plan otherwise. In 1800 he moved to Serampore, a short distance from Calcutta. There the Danish governor gave the missionaries sanctuary. Henceforth, Carey and his associates were to labor under the tolerant Danish flag, rather than under the flag of their homeland. In 1799 William Ward, a printer, and Joshua Marshman, a schoolteacher, joined Carey. These three, the translator, the printer, and the teacher, became known as the Serampore Trio.

At Serampore a printing press was set up; preaching to non-Christians was undertaken; and a school was opened for the children of Europeans. In the year 1800, after about seven years, Carey baptized his first convert from Hinduism and his own son, Felix. About this same time he was appointed professor of Oriental languages in the newly founded Fort William College, a position he was to hold for thirty years. By 1832 portions or all of the Christian Scriptures in forty-four languages and dialects had been issued from the Serampore press. This press under Carey's direction thus rendered the Bible accessible to more than three hundred million people.

While the translation of the Scriptures constituted the great achievement of Carey and his colleagues, he did much else. He taught Mahrati and Sanscrit as well as Bengali. Carey and Marshman translated Indian classics into English. They prepared dictionaries and grammars in various languages. Mission stations were opened in a score or more places, including Burma and the East Indies. Schools were established, out of which came Serampore College, an institution designed to train Indian Christians to work among their own people. Carey wrote articles on natural history and botany for the Asiatic Society, of which, in 1805, he was elected a fellow. He did much for India in the field of agriculture and horticulture. Partly for his own interest and recreation and partly as a means of scientific study, he developed a garden in which he collected plants from various parts of the East. He organized what he called an agri-horticultural society for India, hoping thereby to find means of improving the soil and the food supply for his adopted land. He had fruit trees introduced from England and also directed experiments in the culture of coffee, cotton, sugar cane and cereals. Few missionaries of the Christian church have undertaken to bring the Christian message to bear upon so large a proportion of the earth's surface and by such wide, far-reaching and diversified methods.

William Carey and his colaborers, through their own labors and activities on the field, earned hundreds of thousands of dollars to support in large measure their mission for nearly forty years. George Smith says, "Two principles regulated the conception, the foundation and the whole course of the mission: (1) A missionary must be one of the companions and equals of the people to whom he is sent; (2) a missionary must as soon as possible become indigenous, self-supporting, self-propagating, alike by the labors of the mission and by the converts."

The great missionary went to be with His Lord in 1834, when he was almost seventy-three years of age. His dying words to the young Scottish missionary to India, Alexander Duff, were: "Do not speak of Dr. Carey. Speak of Dr. Carey's Savior." It is most fitting to close this brief biography of William Carey with the words of a contemporary missionary of Bombay: "Dr. Carey, the first of living missionaries, the most honored and the most successful since the time of the apostles, has closed his long and influential career. Indeed his spirit, his life and his labors were truly apostolic. The Spirit of God

I WONDER

HAROLD ROWLEY

I call myself a Christian
And read God's Word each day.
But what do others call me
Who chance to pass my way?

I'm always in a hurry
And prone to be too curt,
Forgetful that I can't take back
The things I've said that hurt.

It seems to me a Christian
Should be the kind who tries
To see another's point of view,
To stop and sympathize.

I'd like to be the fellow
Who takes off time to chat
With those whose lives are empty;
I'd like to be like that.

But now I'm fighting evil;
As every Christian should.
Yes, now I'm fighting evil;
Some day I shall do good.

And so I often wonder,
Would other people know
That I'm a Bible reader
Without my saying so?

which was in him led him forward from strength to strength, supported him under privation, enabled him to overcome in a fight that seemed without hope. He outlived his trials to enjoy a peaceful and honored old age, to know that his Master's cause was prospering and that his own name was named with reverence and blessing in every country where a Christian dwelt. Perhaps no man ever exerted a greater influence for good on a great cause."

religion that recognizes the primacy of character. It is not enough to have faith in and to trust a God who is sovereign. We must have a faith that enables a man to obey the will of God and that produces a godly character.

Through the years, men have had a tendency to think of religion in terms of rites and ceremonies. It was the insistence of Jesus that religion must go beyond the outward and the mechanical to the very core of life and there transform character so that the whole of life gives evidence of being God-centered. The harshest word Jesus ever used against men was hypocrites and he accused the religious leaders of his day of hypocrisy, because "they preach, but do not practice" (Matt. 23:3). He said that the infallible mark of true religion was not to be found in the observance of religious acts and rites but in the fruitage of a man's life—"you will know them by their fruits" (Matt. 7:16).

To illustrate how our generation has twisted Christ's concept of true religion, I would like to call your attention to a dramatic scene in the play, The Plow and the Stars. When the tension grows intense among the Irish patriots for independence, the Covey speaks out scornfully about patriotism and mocks the enthusiasm of those who in torchlight parades "renew their political baptismal vows to be faithful." Fluther replies: "There's no reason to bring religion into it. . . . We ought to have as great a regard for religion as we can, so as to keep it out of as many things as possible."

Fluther would isolate religion, set it apart, keep it uncontaminated by life; Jesus would bring religion into every area of life and have religion control every thought, word, deed and attitude. I believe it was Phillips Brooks, who once told the story of some savages who, having received the gift of a sundial, set it up and built a roof over it that this sacred and valued gift might be protected from the elements. Of course, in so doing, they rendered worthless the gift that had been given them. In their desire to preserve the sacredness of the gift, they failed to realize that it had lost all its value. And some people treat religion the same way. They are willing to do everything with religion except use it. They will defend religion; praise it and give it respect. They think that it is something confined to the four walls of a building called a "church." But the religion that will transform our world is a religion that first transforms a man's character and then sends a transformed man out to live religiously twenty-four hours of every day.

Disciplines Relationships

I will mention just one more characteristic of the religion that will turn the destiny of man into the channel of life and good—it must be a religion that disciplines a man's relationships with his fellows.

God is interested in this matter of human relationships. The first four of the Ten Commandments have to do with a man's relationships with his God but the second six have to do with a man's relationships with his fellows. And when Jesus was asked which of the commandments was the greatest, he replied that it was to give God priority and to love him completely and supremely. But then he went on to say that the "second is like it, you shall love your neighbor as yourself. On these two commandments depend all the law and the prophets" (Matt. 22:29-40).

Whenever and wherever Christ is taken seriously, right human relationships are established. At the beginning of World War II, some of our young soldiers landed in Hawaii and went to church. It was a cosmopolitan church, carrying out the spirit of Christ regarding brotherhood and one of the ministers officiating at that communion service was an American of Japanese ancestry. A soldier was heard to murmur, "We go half way around the world to fight the Japs and we kneel here to be served communion by one of them. It sure does beat hell!"

It sure does! And it is only this spirit of Christ that will keep our world from becoming a blazing hell in our day. Neighborliness and friendship must lie at the heart of our religion if we are to redeem our society from destruction. Here is the solution of the tensions between the races, between capital and labor, between East and West. And if our religion does not redeem our human relationships and make us good friends and neighbors, then our civilization is doomed and the better day for which we pray will not come in our generation.

Science is not enough; technical skills will not save the world; education is inadequate. Only religion—the power of God in the lives of men—can save us. This religion must be one that recognizes the sovereignty of God; that recognizes the primacy of character; that disciplines a man's relationships with his fellows.

I Believe in God

H. P. Garner

WHOEVER would draw near to God must believe that he exists and that he rewards those who seek after him" (Heb. 11:16). The reward is that we always find him.

God is the central figure in the entire Bible. The first book opens with his creation, and the last book closes with the triumph of all who believe in him and are faithful unto death. The Bible is unique in the fact that there are no definite arguments as to the existence or nonexistence of God. It just takes it for granted that God is, that he exists.

The Bible portrays a universe with a God in it which the believer appreciates. It is in him that both our needs and our aspirations are met. We are satisfied. Millions of saints have given their testimony to their belief in God, and many have sealed their conviction with their life's blood.

There are men who feel that they are intelligent enough to get on without God, but he who tries to get rid of God gets into as much trouble as he who tries to make God, as we saw so many times in India. The religious instinct is universal and essential to human nature. Man was made by God, for God and in God's image. God breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and he became a living soul.

I believe in God as an eternal being. He was, he is, and he will be forever. I believe in a God who creates. I heard Wm. Jennings Bryan say one time, "When I begin where God began I have no trouble, but if I begin where some men begin I have no end of trouble."

I believe in an invisible God, and I believe in a God who reveals himself. I believe in God as revealed in Christ. I believe in God as Lord and King, and I also believe in God as a God of love and mercy. I believe in a God who condemns sin, but I also believe in a God who forgives the repentant sinner. I believe in a God who demands justice and I also believe in a God who extends to his believing children grace and peace. I believe in a God who cares for me, wills my good, wants my friendship, meets my needs, throws light on my path when it becomes dark, gives added strength when burdens are heavy, gives wisdom when choices are to be made, comforts me when sorrow comes, and has promised me an eternal home.

I believe in a God as good as Jesus was, and as good as Jesus said his Father God was. "For he that has seen me has seen the Father also." The writer of the Forty-second Psalm was not just dreaming when he wrote: "As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after thee, O God. My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God." I believe in one God, maker and ruler of all, the Father of all men, the source of all fullness, the embodiment of all love, the exponent of all beauty, full of holiness, truth and life.

You ask why I believe in him. First, because I was taught to believe in him. Second, it is my own personal experience that he has been with me. I feel that I am made for friendship with a higher being whom I call God as well as with men like myself. In that belief I have discovered his will and purpose for my life. Third, my soul needs such a companionship. Fourth, there is an intelligent being directing all life and order which I believe to be God.

The fool says in his heart, "There is no God" (Psa. 14:1), but Jesus said, "This is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent" (John 17:3). If God believes in me, and if he did not he would not have made me, why should I not believe in him?

PRAISE God from whom all
Blessings flow, praise him
All creatures here below.
Thank him for the sheer joy
Of being alive, for a mind
With which to think his Thoughts, a voice to speak
His word, a heart to have Compassion on his people.
Pour forth gratitude for Power to exult in the Presence of beauty, at the Sounds of music, at the Smell of sweet violets.
Praise him for rain and
Sunshine, drifting clouds
And gorgeous sunsets, for Fertile soil and plentiful
Yield. Be appreciative
For sustenance and shelter,
For work to do and loads
To be lifted. Give voice
In thanks for mirth and Laughter, for pleasure
Brought by dogs and Cats and ponies and
All simple satisfactions.

Praise God from whom all
Blessings flow, praise him
All creatures here below.
Thank him for the Bible,
For the teaching and example
Of our Lord, for his courage
And fidelity to the will of God, for his resurrection
And living presence. Speak
Words of gratitude for the Church, the school, the Home, and for all the high
Ideals and noble aspirations
Of our nation. Be thankful
For the enrichment of our Lives by men and women of
Many races and distant
Places, for blessings
Coming from the living and
From those long departed.
Praise God in your heart.
Count your blessings, name
Them over, one by one, and See what God has done.

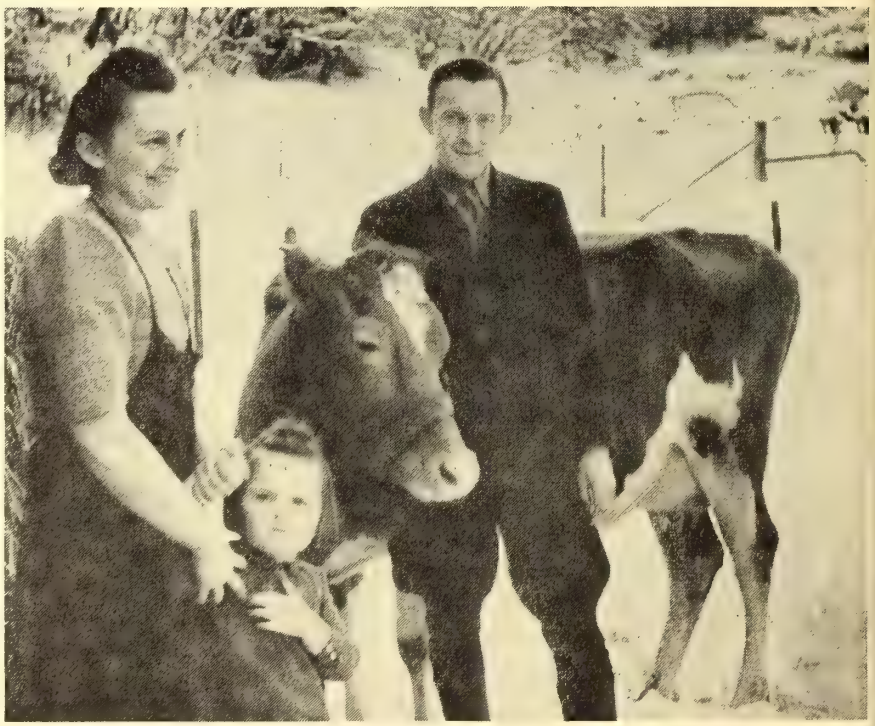
WHO IS MY NEIGHBOR?

KURT PETERS is my name. I would like briefly to tell you the history of the past twenty-five years of my life. Perhaps it has something to do with brotherhood. Someone I never knew before was a brother to me.



It started in 1929 when I first went to America to the agricultural college in Lansing, Michigan. I studied there for four years working in the summers between college semesters and having part-time jobs during school. In the total of five years that I was there, I was able to get my agricultural degree and had acquired numerous possessions. In 1934 I had a team of horses, a tractor, part interest in a car, rented land, shoes, clothing and plenty to eat. At that time I had all those things, but at the same time I thought of my parents and family back in Pomorania, Germany. They had written to me that perhaps I could make as good a life with them as I had done in the States. You remember, of course, that those were the years of depression. Mainly because of homesickness I decided to return to my home.

Soon I was manager of one of the larger farms in our country. Again, I was doing quite well and life was good to me. In fact, life was treating me so well that by 1938, when I was about to be married, my future wife and I were able to pay for a farm of 200 Morgens. I believe that would be about 120 acres. So it went on through the war years. During those times I had not only my own farm but was an agriculturalist and had responsibilities for different farms in the region.

Then the war was over; my status was low. I became only the farmer and cultivator of my own land. That was still good. The Communist occupation of Pomorania was proposed to be friendly to the people. Every farmer was placed back on his own land and was given freedom to do what he wanted to do. According to their theory, dictators and capitalist controllers were destroyed. All this was to change.

In 1949 the land was redivided. Anyone having more than twelve acres of his own land was labeled capitalist and therefore his land was seized and all his possessions were taken from him. Only the poorest of small farmers remained. As with others who had larger farms or domains, everything I had was taken from me. I was then installed as the manager of the same 120 acres that I had formerly farmed. Under this new collective farm system we had quotas which we were ordered to meet. You have probably heard of quotas and therefore I will not illustrate it past one example. The reason I give this particular example is because I was unable to meet it and therefore it played an important role in one of the greatest decisions in my life.

We had been ordered to have all of our sugar beets, which were to be so many tons per acre, dug and hauled to the factory by October 9, 1952. We had had rain beginning the end of September and continuing through the first three weeks of October, making it impossible for us to dig the beets. About one week after the quota's expiration date, I was warned by a friend that because of my noncompliance to regulations I would be brought before the court within a few days. Such cases coming before the court meant certain imprisonment. Since my wife and I by this time had four children, it was a frightening fact to face. We then decided to go by train to Berlin and henceforth into

A refugee receives a heifer and with it hope again for the future and a feeling that someone has a concern for his welfare the West Zone. Our fate lay in the hands of a higher power. We were processed through the Berlin refugee camps and then transported into West Germany where we were then placed in another camp.

I am a farmer at heart and therefore I desired to be a farmer again. I had made friends with people and eventually I was able to find a small plot of land which I rented. Of course, this all took time and it was early spring 1954 when we were able to move our family, which now had grown to five children, into an old cold brick house which stood on the plot of ten acres we had rented. The house was several hundred years old and the stalls which were next to the kitchen were run down and broken. We had to make many repairs but soon were able to rent an additional ten acres and we knew because of the help of friends we would eventually become self-supporting.

You can see how many different things have had an effect upon my life. I have lived under different systems in this world and have made important decisions while living under these systems.

I was just a ragged poor man, when in June 1954 I was informed that I was to receive a cow which was given by an unknown donor, to help a refugee in Germany. Suddenly it seemed that a small light was shining through the darkness of our despair. This was the most wonderful gift that I had ever received in my whole life.

Someone in a church fellowship whom I didn't even know became my brother. I did not know how to explain it but, now as I think of it, that certainly is what they call brotherhood. We received the name and address of the donor and were therefore able to make direct personal contact with the donating group. Through the gift and through the friendship that followed with the donor, our hopes grew. We received encouragement and we hope to sometime pass on the results of both our material and spiritual gifts. Love had been shown us and our spirits were awakened once again.

Some months later we were visited by an American who was representing the donors of many American gifts. He told us of the meaning of the program and of the inner motivation causing people to give of their material wealth in this world; how they wanted to love, to be loved, and to work for a brotherhood of brethren in peace among men.

I have received great blows by losses in material possessions and also by loss of spirit because of the great injustices caused by war. I have learned to know different governments and the new basis on which they are founded. We as refugees, perhaps more than anyone, know the difference between hate, fear and love. We were shown love when we received personally, through a representative, material aid, through correspondence with the donor, and once again when we were visited by an American representative. I know in my poor meager life I will never be able to repay it all. But it has made our family happy and we will face life with a new courageous spirit. For love, we can only thank God.

"Conversation"

Luther A. Weigle

THE archaic use of the word conversation in the King James Version of the Bible is so misleading and so completely abandoned by the revised versions and modern translations that it will be well to cite other examples, in addition to those given in this column recently. I will quote the renderings of the Revised Standard Version, and state in parentheses the archaic phrases which they have displaced.

In Gal. 1:13 Paul refers to his "former life in Judaism" (conversation in time past in the Jews' religion). He reminds the Ephesians (2:3) how "we all once lived" (we all had our conversation in times past) as children of wrath; and he urges them (4:22) to "put off your old nature which belongs to your former manner of life" (put off concerning the former conversation the old man). He exhorts the Philippians (1:27) to let their "manner of life be worthy of [conversation be as it becometh] the gospel of Christ," and declares that "our commonwealth [conversation] is in heaven" (3:20).

Timothy is encouraged, in spite of his youth (1 Tim. 4:12), to "set the believers an example in speech and conduct" (be thou an example of the believers, in word, in conversation). Among the injunctions in the Letter to the Hebrews is (13:5): "Keep your life free from love of money" (Let your conversation be without covetousness). If a man is wise and understanding (Jas. 3:13), "by his good life let him show his works" (let him shew out of a good conversation his works).

Peter counsels his readers (1 Peter 1:15; 2:12) to be holy "in all your conduct" (in all manner of conversation), and to "maintain good conduct among the Gentiles" (having your conversation honest among the Gentiles). He warns (3:16) that some may "revile your good behavior in Christ" (falsely accuse your good conversation in Christ). He encourages them (2 Peter 3:11) to "lives of holiness and godliness" (holy conversation and godliness).

Luther Weigle, chairman of the Standard Bible committee responsible for the Revised Standard Version, has made a special study of Bible words that have changed their meaning.

The Cup of Life

Elmer L. Dadisman

FROM time immemorial men have sought release from the loneliness of life, the stimulation of its joys and fellowship, by passing the cup. The term "the cup of fellowship" has come into common usage, connoting any one of a number of possibilities. If when we hear that expression we find our minds turning to the picture of a social drinking party, we can know that we have been conditioned to accept the degradation of a worthy life-centered expression.

The word fellowship is the key word in that term, "the cup of fellowship," the word cup coming in only as a matter of association. It has always been that when the basic ties of friendship or brotherhood are to be celebrated in any company, large or small, there is no better way than that of eating and/or drinking together—of sharing life's basic sustenance. True, the actual food and drink have been symbolized in different ways from time to time so that within certain limitations it matters little the nature of the food or content of the cup. It can be a taste of salt on the moistened finger, a leisurely cup of tea or even the simple cup of cold water to a thirsty traveler. But it does matter greatly whether the cup of fellowship contains life or death when we lift it to our lips or offer it to another. Therefore we shall seek to find and define for our socially sensitive age the cup of life, the cup which can be the cup of fellowship par excellence.

If we open our ears to the world we will hear a babble of voices. We will hear that beer belongs—that it belongs to the outdoor life, that it belongs to the hour of relaxation, that it belongs in the hospitality of home life, that it belongs as the life of the party! How ridiculous! And these voices do not cross the threshold of our resistance alone; they become as carpets across those thresholds to muffle the approach of even more dangerous foes. God help us to know that it takes more than a social setting to make just any drink become the life of the party! Every alcoholic beverage which reaches the lips comes from the cup of death.

It has long since been known that the cup with an alcoholic content is a cheater. The wise men of every age have warned against it and its use has been forbidden for the consecrated. We can take the broad warning of the Proverbs of Solomon that "wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging. and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise" (Prov. 20:1), or the warning from this chance parable in modern life. I am told that there is an old church near Berlin, Germany, which attracts many tourists. The graveyard out back is kept locked, but on one of its gates is the following notice:

Pastor of the Navarre church, Kansas

"The key to the graveyard is to be found in the tavern."

The question, "Have you ever voted for me?" is a vital one. Because we wanted the taxes that come from letting the brewers, the distillers and the handlers traffic in human life, beginning with its moral and spiritual values; because we were willing to let our neighbors who desire release from the disappointing realities of their lives buy it in the deceitful cup of death rather than seek it in the gift through Jesus Christ; because we sold out far too cheaply after our Lord had given his life, we find ourselves in the predicament of having tried to make respectable the cup which contains death. I can hear the heartbroken, stinging words of our Lord reaching to us across the centuries and through our quickening spiritual senses: "Woe to you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for you cleanse the outside of the cup and of the plate, but inside they are full of extortion and rapacity. You blind Pharisee! first cleanse the inside of the cup and of the plate, that the outside also may be clean" (Matt. 23:25-26, R.S.V.). As Christians we must find a deeper answer to this personal and social problem. We must find the cup of life.

The desire for release from or removal of a life that has become humdrum or unbearable is a God-given desire; it should neither be discontinued nor denied. No one can successfully storm the citadel of life in his own powers. Every person has the right to experience what it is like to leave his frustrations, his sorrows, his insecurities, his inmost doubts about himself behind. But this can come about through the cup of life found in the gospel of Jesus Christ. Paul makes the contrast specific and clear when he says, "And do not get drunk with wine, for that is debauchery; but be filled with the Spirit, addressing one another in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making melody to the Lord with all your heart, always and for everything giving thanks in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ to God the Father" (Eph. 5: 18-20, R.S.V.).

"Do not get drunk with wine . . . but be filled with the Spirit . . . ." In other words, find the answer to those deep-felt needs in your Christian faith. Let's take a look at some of the ways in which the cup of life shows up in the gospel and is found in experience.

The cup of cold water, the cup of sharing in the gospel, is a form of the cup of life. As such, it certainly is worthy of its central place in our emblem of Brethren Service. On a purely psychological basis, it is wholesome indeed for one to leave one's own sorrows and losses behind as he gives attention to the blessings of life that are his which he can share with others of the world who have incomparably less than he. There is deliverance for many in the cup of compassion, if we but give ourselves to it. In contrast, those who look inward in self-pity without the gospel of love in their hearts are but watering their sorrows as they attempt to drown them with the cup of death. It is a Christian issue. The cup by which life's blessings are shared in the name of Christ becomes a cup of life. Someone has caught this basic thought in a little quatrain with Scripture background.

Is thy cruse of comfort failing?
Arise, and share it with another;
And through all thy famine
It will feed you and your brother.

The cup of cold water can be the cup of life and we can all have it and give it.

There is also a cup of redemption which is even more deeply the cup of life as we find it in the gospel. It is the cup of salvation that flowed from Calvary's cross. We must first of all receive it. It is the cup which Jesus gave to his disciples in the upper room experience, of which we read: "And he took a cup, and when he had given thanks he gave it to them, saying, 'Drink of it, all of you; for this is my blood of the covenant, which is poured out for many for the forgiveness of sins'" (Matt. 26:27-28, R.S.V.). But this cup had a price for him, even as it does for us. He gives it to us freely, but it costs if we accept it fully. Regarding it, Jesus himself prayed earnestly in the garden, "My Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me; nevertheless, not as I will, but as thou wilt" (Matt. 26:39, R.S.V.). So we see that this cup of life, besides bearing to us the salvation that flowed from Calvary, becomes also the symbol of our own total commitment to the will of God. When his disciples began speaking for places in his kingdom, Jesus asked, "Are you able to drink the cup that I am to drink?" immediately assuring them that they would drink it (Matt. 20:22-23).

This particular cup should have a higher place in our lives. It is not so much a matter of seeking a cross in life as it is the depth of faith in and commitment to God that will enable us to accept all of life's crosses with unshaken trust in him, in his power and his love. The Christian is able to drink deeply of life's sorrows and heartaches, even if they come to him undeserved or through another. He is ready to be poured out, if need be, to the glory of God. Now this cup of redemption and salvation through faith is so far removed from the popularized alcoholic cup of death that the two can hardly be compared, but we dare not forget that we choose between these two again and again. Blessed are those who have received and accepted this cup of life, for without it the temptation may come to fall back on the deceitful cup of death.

Now let us see the cup of life in one more scriptural setting. We find it mentioned in the most loved psalm of David, the twenty-third. We need hardly discuss it in this setting, for it comes to us with a perfect picture of what life is like when we drink it from the right cup.

The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want;
he makes me lie down in green pastures.
He leads me beside still waters; he restores my soul.
He leads me in paths of righteousness for his name's sake.

Even though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death,
I fear no evil;
for thou art with me;
thy rod and thy staff,
they comfort me.
Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of my enemies;
thou anointest my head with oil,
my cup overflows.
Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me
all the days of my life;
and I shall dwell in the house of the Lord
for ever. (R.S.V.)

Yes, "my cup overflows"; it is the cup of life. It is not the cup of death which is continually empty and mocking, swallowing up more and more of life's resources as into a bottomless pit. It is not the cup of death which we have tried to cleanse on the outside, but which inside is full of death and destruction. We have a choice. Paul says, "Do not get drunk with wine, for that is debauchery; but be filled with the Spirit." Our situation is parallel to the one with which Moses faced the children of Israel when he said. "I call heaven and earth to witness against you this day, that I have set before you life and death, blessing and curse; therefore choose life, that you and your descendants may live, loving the Lord your God, obeying his voice, and cleaving to him; for that means life to you and length of days, that you may dwell in the land which the Lord swore to your fathers, to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob, to give them" (Deut. 30:19-20, R.S.V.). Let us drink deeply from the cup of life only, to the glory of God!

More for Your Money

Harl L. Russell

WHO does not want more for his money? In recent years advertisers have stressed as never before the "worth more" aspects of their products.

In an intriguing new book entitled What Are You Worth? G. Curtis Jones states, "In today's world of deflated dollars and inflated values, there is no place where you can get as much for your money as in your church." Even so it now takes a doubling of our gifts to carry the same program, locally and beyond.

However, the fact remains our money goes farther through supporting the church. Besides the program achievements from our investment in legitimate Christian causes where else can we get the lasting radiance and abiding satisfaction that comes from contributing to the far-reaching work of the church of our choice? A case in point is Zacchaeus, who received the Savior joyfuly (see Luke 19:6) for he had determined beforehand to give half of his goods to the poor and to restore fourfold to any man whom he may have defrauded.

Christianity is a religion of sharing. To be a genuine Christian is to be possessed of a burning desire to support that which enlarges the influence of Christianity. Within the breast of the true follower of Christ is the compulsion to return to God, as an expression of love and worship, a generous portion of God-given resources. When we understand fully, we, too, will know joy unspeakable as we give of time, strength and moneys unto Christ.

Secretary of the Brotherhood Fund

Yes, there is more return on the dollar invested in the work of the church than can be obtained from any other investment. To know of the rich "dividends," however, we must prove God. Remember, the worldly minded do not understand or experience the blessings that come to those who freely give.

Perhaps some who read this may say, "Yes, I would give regularly to Brethren causes if I lived where I could worship in my home church. Then I would see the needs and be moved to give." If this be your thoughts, consider one well-known Brethren man's staunch assertion that he and his wife "would give 15% of their income to Brotherhood enterprises even if their local church had $5,000 in the treasury." Why? It is because they do not give on the basis of need but out of hearts full of love and gratitude for God's goodness. They know there is always great need and they just cannot withhold from the work of the kingdom the Lord's money that has been given to them to use.

It has been my privilege to confer recently with men who serve churches full time in helping members to contribute funds for building purposes or to underwrite enlarged programs as represented in a budget twice the size of budgets of former years. These men concentrate on developing right attitudes and motives. Never do they permit a member to think the need of a church or the need of an expanded program are as important as the need of the individual to give. Again and again they point to Christ's words as found in Luke 12:34, "Where your treasure is, there will your heart be also."

Truly the dollars we hold in our hands are a fragment of self: the coinage of God-given time, ability and energy. What we do with our money we do with our life. How we use our money is an index to our motives and basic desires. In deciding on its use we do well to consider the wisdom of great Christians and what Jesus has to say on the question.

Would you get more joy and abiding satisfactions from life? Then support kingdom work with money, you in "proxy" form. Do it regularly and generously. See if you won't experience something good deep down inside and a new outlook on life. Should your material possessions not increase, what does it matter? You have begun to realize, as the Pilgrims did, that a little is abundance when God is recognized in it. When that concept gets hold of you then you will sense the divine partnership. More and more will you turn gladly to the "Senior Partner" for his guidance and approval on the use of what is entrusted to your management.

 How to Be an Effective Church Woman. Carolyn P. Blackwood. Westminster, 1955. 189 pages. $2.50.

This is the book we laywomen have been looking for. Mrs. Blackwood believes that next to the home "nowhere in the world can a Christian woman find a vocation so thrilling as in the work of her own church." Women have increased opportunities in today's changing church and she challenges them to prepare themselves for the church of tomorrow, where she hopes they will not stand out as over against the men, but will work side by side with them.

In simple, easy-reading fashion the reader is given specific helps in how to serve effectively, whether it be presiding at a meeting, praying in public, being a good committee member or serving on a total church board.

However, with emphasis on her organizational detail, the author never loses sight of the paramount goal of women's work. She would have every woman of every local church at work for the winning of the world to Christ. Hence she calls on them to be promoters of a twofold Christian stewardship. Her chapter, As a Raiser of Church Money, is very timely for Brethren women who are now trying to evaluate our women's work in this regard. In another chapter she calls for even a greater stewardship—that of our very lives, reminding us we cannot serve God with just spare money and spare time.

The emphasis of the entire book is caught up in a part of her closing paragraph—"To serve as a leader among church women you don't have to be a brilliant organizer or an eloquent speaker, but you do need to know God's love in Christ. That is the indispensable element." — Mrs. Charles E. Zunkel, Elgin, Ill.

Modern Illustrations for Public Speakers. Dr. Robert G. Lee. Zondervan, 1955. 128 pages. $1.75.

This seems to be an unusually fine selection of interesting illustrations taken from insect, animal and human life. They are the kind that appeal and have value.—Charles Zunkel.

The Faith That Rebels. D. S. Cairns. Harpers, 1955. 260 pages. $3.00.

A re-edition of a book issued first in 1928. At that time it was recognized as a work of major exegetical importance. Dr. Cairns sets forth the traditional and the modernist theories of the interpretation of the miracles and shows the defects of both. Then he shows how by approaching them from the pattern of thought in the Old Testament we can truly see in them the work of Jesus in the framework of a new order—a divine order— the fragment of heaven emerging in our world. A most helpful book. — Charles Zunkel.

La Verne College

Graduation speakers have been announced by the college. Dr. Charles S. Braden, professor of history and literature of religions at Northwestern University and visiting instructor at Scripps College this semester, will be the Baccalaureate preacher on Sunday evening, May 29. Dr. Myron Olson, professor of secondary, higher and adult education at the University of Southern California, will deliver the commencement address on Thursday evening, June 2.

Year-end events also include presentations of the world premiere of the ballad opera, The Philosopher and the Fool, written by Clokey, by the college music department and the annual alumni banquet on May 28.

Summer session dates are June 20 to July 29. In addition there will be a two weeks' postsession Aug. 1-12. Liberal arts courses applying toward a degree and many special teachers' credential courses are offered in the regular session. The postsession will feature two seminars: one in international relations sponsored in co-operation with the Brethren Service Commission will be directed by Gladdys Muir of Manchester College; and the other in current issues on education will be taught by President H. D. Fasnacht, Dean Paul Baum and Prof. Jack Melhorn.

National Christian College Day observance was assisted on the West Coast on April 24, when the La Verne College chapel choir was featured by the National Broadcasting Company's western division network.

Esther Williams, junior student from Wenatchee, Wash., will serve the college and the regional youth organization during the summer by assisting in summer camps and with youth groups.

Major revisions in admissions requirements, major patterns and curriculum divisions and in the general education programal of the college are outlined in the 1955-56 annual catalog. These revisions are the culmination of several years' work of the faculty and its curriculum committee.

Dr. George A. Scott, San Diego business executive and leading layman, announced a gift of $20,000 to the college during his New Era Banquet address, March 18. He turned to President Fasnacht midway in his address and said: "I've decided to do something. I'd like to give you $20,000, sir, as of now." His generosity and enthusiasm added inspiration to the college's development program.

Long-range development goals were outlined and announced by the Board of Trustees at its annual meeting on March 19. A realistic immediate, three-year $500,000 goal including a new dining hall, partial financing of a new dormitory, improvement of facilities and scholarship funds, is the first step in the long-range program. Milton J. Brock, Sr., chairman of the trustees' executive committee, is general chairman of the program with F. A. Yearout as chairman of the church division and Gerald Deal in charge of alumni development.

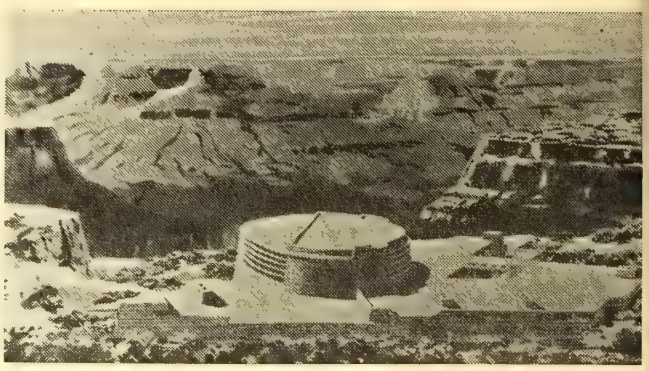
News and Comment From Around the World

Discover Remains of Shrine Denounced by Amos

A French archeologist has discovered at Beersheba in southern Israel the remains of what is believed to be an idolatrous shrine denounced by the prophet Amos (Amos 5:5), according to an announcement by the Israeli Department of Antiquities. Diggers work-at the site unearthed a large quantity of Iron Age figurines which definitely date the building as of the era of the early Jewish kingdom.

Indications of an even earlier civilization were found under the structure. It is hoped that continued digging may unearth the sanctuary of Abraham, mentioned repeatedly in Genesis, which some persons believe is at the same site.

E and R Women to Stress Christian Marriage



The Women's Guild of the Evangelical and Reformed Church has decided to give increased emphasis in the coming year to the duties and obligations of Christian marriage. The guild's board of directors has also decided to encourage members to seek new sources of spiritual life through private and family devotions; to provide homes for more foreign students; to impress members with the duties and obligations of Christian citizenship; and to take a renewed interest in various relief programs.

Post Office Calls Prayer Chain Illegal

Prayer chain letters that have been circulating through the mails were declared illegal by post office officials in Louisville, Ky. Although the letters ask for no money, they still violate the federal lottery laws. The letters transmit a "good-luck prayer" that supposedly has been sent around the world four times. Recipients are asked to send copies to five other persons within twenty-four hours. If they do not, they will have bad luck.

Protestants Oppose Gift of Civic Center by Brewers

Protestant clergymen in Toronto are opposing the erection of a new $12,000,000 Civic Center by the O'Keefe Brewing Company. They contend that beer profits should not be used for such a purpose. The city council approved the gift, allowing the brewery concern to choose the site, name it the O'Keefe Civic Center and assist in its management.

This is the architect's sketch of the "Shrine of the Ages," a chapel that will be built in the Grand Canyon national park. Located on a promontory jutting into the canyon, the chapel will be available to all faiths and will serve visitors and families who live at the canyon.

Dr. Emlyn Davies, prominent Baptist minister, told a temperance meeting that the center was not a civic project and that expropriating land for it sets a dangerous precedent.

U. S. Opposes New Calendar Proposal

The United States opposes any change in the present calendar, according to a note sent by the State Department to Dag Hammarskjold, secretary general of the United Nations. A new World Calendar, proposed by India, has been referred to member nations for study by the U.N. The State Department said that any further study of the proposal would "serve no useful purpose."

The new calendar has been strongly opposed by some religious groups because it would mean that the Sabbath would keep shifting. The State Department said it would not be appropriate for the U.N. to sponsor any calendar change conflicting with the principles of important religious faiths.

Church Leaders Urge President to Resist War Pressures

Three National Council of Churches officials recently urged President Eisenhower to resist those who advocate policies that could lead to a third world war. They also asked him to take all honorable steps to peaceably end the Asian crisis. The message was signed by Eugene Carson Blake, president of the National Council, Ernest A. Gross, chairman, and Walter W. Van Kirk, executive secretary of the Council's Department of International Affairs.

The officials said they "reject the view that negotiation is appeasement." They said there was no substitute for negotiation except the arbitrament of force which creates vastly greater problems than it can ever solve.

Priest Says All Christians May Have to Be CO's

All Christians may have to be conscientious objectors to war in the future, according to Father O. Danielou who spoke to a meeting of the Pax Christi Movement in Paris. He said that "it is possible that in view of the development of the techniques of destruction every and any war may appear an unjust one and a matter of condemnation by Christian standards. In this case it would be the duty of every Christian to refuse to fight." However, the priest added, it is not for the individual conscience to decide whether this is so. It would be for the church to decide.

World Council Executives Plan Australia Meeting

The World Council of Churches' executive committee has accepted an invitation to hold its first 1956 session near Sydney, Australia, Feb. 6-10 next year. It will mark the first time any governing body of the World Council has met in the southern hemisphere. The executive committee meets twice yearly. In addition to its chairman and vice-chairman, the committee is composed of twelve members and seven ex-officio members, the latter being the World Council's six presidents and its honorary president, the bishop of Chichester.

U. S. Baptist Leaders Invited to Moscow

Three United States Baptist leaders have been invited to preach in Moscow by officials of the All-Soviet Council of Evangelical Christians, a Baptist body. Invitations were extended to Dr. V. Carney Hargroves of Philadelphia, president of the American Baptist Convention, to Dr. Theodore F. Adams of Richmond, Va., a Southern Baptist minister who was one of the speakers at the Richmond Annual Conference of the Church of the Brethren; and Dr. J. H. Jackson of Chicago, president of the National Baptist Convention, a Negro body.

No decision on accepting the invitations has yet been made. If the bids are accepted, it will mark the first time since before World War I that U.S. Baptist clergymen have filled Russian pulpits.

Religious Welfare Leaders See President on Escapee Program

Representatives of religious and other voluntary agencies co-operating with the United States escapee program called on President Eisenhower recently. The escapee program, directed by the Foreign Operations Administration, is carried out on a contractual basis with seventeen private welfare agencies.

The 600 projects undertaken with government aid in the past three years have helped escapees with food, clothing, medical care and vocational training in preparation for resettlement. Roland Elliott of Church World Service served as spokesman for the voluntary agencies in expressing gratitude to President Eisenhower for his support of the program.

Supreme Court Reverses Conviction of Jehovah's Witness

The Supreme Court has reversed the conviction of three Jehovah's Witnesses charged with refusing to report for induction in the armed services. In so doing, the high tribunal rebuked for the second time in a month the Department of Justice for the manner in which appeals by conscientions objectors have been handled. A. Stauffer Curry, executive secretary of the National Service Board for Religious Objectors, hailed the court's decision as "an important advance in defending the rights of religious objectors."

Churches to Increase Surplus Food Shipments

John Metzler, special Church World Service representative attached to the World Council of Churches staff, recently returned to Geneva from a survey trip through Greece and Italy. He said he was "enormously encouraged to find the European share of the administrative expenses of the share-our-surplus program to be under one per cent of the value of the foods shipped." He said that "a phenomenal opportunity is offered through this program to meet the urgent needs of many people in southeast Europe."

Newsbriefs on Religion in Europe

Howard Schomer

HOWEVER EFFICIENT the powerful political machine with which Chancellor Adenauer pushes through the ratification of the Paris accords, the widespread church debate unleashed by this question is extremely revealing. Not only the Catholic forces in general, but the bulk of the Lutherans tend to approve German rearmament, political orthodoxy vis-a-vis Dr. Adenauer's Christian Democratic policy having become almost a test of spiritual orthodoxy. On the contrary, the United Church and Reformed Church elements repudiate this political trend of the church and their distinguished leaders have had a steadily growing attention. Dr. Gustav Heinemann has declared that the real policy of West Germany is at the opposite pole from any conceivable "Christian policy." It is, he says: "Make a lot of money.... Get an army to defend it...and a church to bless both."

The public seems to respond more and more, both to the Protestant and to the Socialist opposition to rearmament. The question is asked again and again: What long-term value will the victory of the Adenauer machine have?

In the midst of rising tension between the Arab population of North Africa and the government of France, the tiny French Protestant social work organization CIMADE and the Paris Missionary Society are helping the Protestant church in Dakar to open a fraternal center in the heart of the Arab city. The center, a friendly meeting place for Moslems and Christians, will also offer a dispensary service.

When Pastor Martin Niemoeller declared the intention of several German provincial churches to follow through on the recommendations of the Evanston Assembly of the World Council by inviting representatives of the Orthodox Church in Russia to visit West Germany, Archbishop Alexander, head of the Russian Orthodox Church in Germany, protested. He said the Orthodox Church of Russia is used as a political instrument. The persons whom the Patriarch of Moscow would send must be considered as representatives of the Kremlin.

A bishop of the Lutheran Church in Finland has aroused widespread interest by telling a laymen's meeting that a church which is identified exclusively with the upper classes loses its influence on the life of the people. He added that working men are far too few in the committees of the World Council of Churches.

When responsible German church leaders have a chance to buttonhole a visiting churchman from the United States, one subject overshadows all others: dollar-bought vice. A G. I. in Germany, without any expenses for food, clothing and shelter, receives in cash each month the equivalent of the total income received by a German worker's family.

In a district where the French army (not necessarily more virtuous but whose privates receive about two cents a day) was encamped for half a dozen years without any considerable vice problem arising, the coming of the affluent G. I.'s has led to incredible "red light" concentrations. Certain towns and villages where Franco-German pastoral meetings have been held annually since 1949 are in such districts.

Now the German ministers, overwhelmed by the pastoral problems the dollar has brought, tell of parishioners who cannot resist the temptation to rent every possible room in their houses, even if their children must sleep in the attic, for more money than they have ever hoped to have—on condition that they ignore the use to which the rooms are put. German and French ministers alike turn to American churchmen, saying: "Why don't your churches act?"

The next in a long and growing series of Franco-German meetings of churchmen will be held right after Easter in the Saarland and elsewhere in the orbit of the Rhineland Evangelical Church. By unanimous agreement the theme of the gatherings is to be: The Christian Confronted with Modern War. (World-over Press)

SUMMER INSTITUTES

THESE SUMMER INSTITUTES are excellent training opportunities for:

—Brethren Service workers
—Social Education and Action workers
—Youth citizenship chairmen and Youth counselors
—Women's work peace and citizenship directors
—Men's work leaders

Each of these institutes has been set up and designed to train local church and district leaders in the fields of Christian citizenship, international relations or race relations. If you are one of the above workers or are simply interested in one of these institute topics, you are urged to take advantage of one or more of these institutes this summer. Each of our congregations needs trained leadership in these fields.

Hope for the Aged

Joanne Nesler
Kassel, Germany

Joanne Nesler, a volunteer in the material aid department, takes a food package to an old lady

WE IN material aid have taken on a new project which is a very interesting one.

We called the local social office in March and they informed us that in the city of Kassel alone there are 3,000 old people who are getting less than $20 a month to live on. We suggested to the office that we would be willing to contact 300 of these old people and take a food package to them. The social office was very pleased.

We are hoping to deliver 100 food packages each month for a three-month period and then if we feel after talking to the people and seeing the conditions that they live in, that these people need another package, we will again take one to them in three months.

We have delivered forty-one packages to date. These old people are a forgotten people. They are so surprised and happy to have someone visit them and talk to them for a while that they hardly know how to act. Emotions spring up when one presents them with a food package. Some of them ask how much it will cost them to keep the food that we bring. It is hard for them to realize or understand why anyone would want to help them. When we show them what is in the package, they act as though we had given them a most precious jewel.

I went to one address and found that there was a man living alone in one room. He had only one leg, having lost the other because of an illness. He does his own cooking, washing, ironing, cleaning and all the other things that go along with living. He has no friends with whom he can visit and pass the time of day because they are living outside of Kassel; the ones who did live in this area are dead. This man was so happy just to talk to someone.

I visited another man who also lives alone. His wife has been dead for twenty-eight years. He has two small rooms which were not very clean or orderly. He said that he hadn't slept for days because the people above him played cards every night until the early hours of the morning and made so much noise that he could not sleep. I asked him why he didn't ask them to be a little quieter. He said that he was afraid if he said anything that he would be put out. He was just thankful to have a place to sleep. He showed me pictures of his wife, children and grandchildren. He acted like a little child running from one room to the next looking for pictures to show me. I don't believe he had talked to anyone for a long, long time. He cried when I gave him the food and as I told him what the package contained, he turned toward the window, looked up and thanked God for the help that had come to him.

I have met many interesting people and have come to realize more and more each day that there is more misery in this world than any of us realize. I am certain that the Lord does not want it this way and I believe that we as Christians all over the world are and should be the kind of people who do not just go to church every Sunday, sit in the front pews and then go home to fine houses and feel proud because we have given 25c to the church.

James said, "Faith without works is dead." Let us not forget that when we are asked to give some of our time and/or talents to God's kingdom.

Church Newsletters --- Vital Educational Tools

E. Floyd McDowell
Lititz, Pennsylvania

CHRISTIAN education in the local church can be greatly strengthened by the use of a monthly newspaper. Such a paper is usually considered a publicity or promotional instrument. It can serve a deeper purpose, if it is well planned, as a vital educational tool which will undergird the total Christian education program. Articles on the worship, teaching, projects and beliefs of the church can all serve to educate the local congregation in the Christian way of life.

The production of a church paper is not a difficult task, but it will take some careful planning, if it is to be effective. Deciding upon content matter, means of production, sources of financial support and types of records to keep are four major considerations that need attention. Let us look briefly at each one of these.

Content of Newsletter

The content matter is the editor's responsibility. An editor with a vision of "the world and the individual" will be necessary if the newsletter is to be significant for its people. The quality of the printing can be poor, the publication date irregular, but if the content is irrelevant to the people with whom you are working, your efforts are practically wasted. Gear the content to the aims and purposes you have in mind, but mostly to the needs of the people who are served by your paper.

The production of a church paper is not difficult, but it takes careful planning if it's to be effective

Items concerning the worship, teaching, projects of the church and achievements of local members would be helpful. Be certain that your paper does not become a "gossip" sheet as you think of the last of these suggestions. Supplement all of this with educational articles on the doctrines and beliefs of the church. Stimulate your members with articles challenging them to a deeper devotion to their church and their Lord. Preview coming events for them by giving summaries of future programs. Publicize and promote various projects or educational opportunities held in the local church. Have your pastor make reports to the church through this medium. Keep your congregation posted on the giving and attendance of the local group. Use as many people as possible to write your materials, but reserve the right to reject or change any materials that you receive. Insist on short articles (maximum of 1,000 words) and on printing the names of contributors. Finally, try to get the name of every family in the congregation in the paper at least once a year so all will feel that this is their paper.

Layout of Paper

A related concern to content is the layout of material on the page. Take some time in layout, cutting of stencils and actual mimeographing, if you are not having the paper done commercially. An attractive paper commands more respect than an obvious haphazard piece of work. A four-page (8½ x 11) paper is a good size for a church to produce monthly. A two or three column page usually makes a more attractive appearance than a single column type. Two column pages would be recommended for mimeographed papers and three column for commercially printed ones. Maintain a liberal margin between and on either side of the columns.

Pictures will help to make your paper attractive, but they are expensive to use especially if your work is done commercially. It is imperative that they be selected wisely if you plan to use them. Be certain to place them in a conspicuous place, probably on the first page.

It is usually a good policy to have several striking headlines on the first page. Do not occupy that page with just one article. Begin your key materials on page one and continue them on another page so that they do not occupy too much of the premium space. Remember that effective layout requires a conscientious craftsman.

Means of Production

The actual printing of the paper can be done in a number of different ways. Your choice of method will be determined by the size of the church you represent and the finances available. There are many companies which are set up specifically to receive your materials, supplement them with syndicated religious articles and send you the finished product within several days after you send in your materials. Your local printer will be glad to work with you in producing the paper within your community if that is your desire. Perhaps you will want to do all the work within the local church. The mimeographing or duplicating process can be used to advantage in this situation. Be sure to compare the relative costs before you decide. Certainly commercial printing can be more attractive than duplicating or mimeographing and the costs may not be as prohibitive as you might guess.

Let us imagine you are producing the paper within the local church. The following are some suggestions for facilitating its publication. Three groups of staff people are necessary: editorial, secretarial and circulation. First, the editorial staff would decide what articles and news items are to be included, assign these to individual writers and reporters, receive the completed materials (preferably typed double or triple spaced), proofread and edit them and then turn them over to the secretarial staff. It is recommended that you have one person finally responsible for this editing. (Note: If you are producing the paper commercially, you then send these materials to the printer who would take care of the second step in the process.)

A group of secretaries would receive the copy and immediately begin typing it in columns the width of the finished product. Consult a local secretary for the technique used in having all the lines end at the same margin. Care should be given to correct syllabication of words. The typewriter desk should be equipped with a good dictionary or a small volume, 20,000 Words. A layout person in the secretarial staff would then take the typed materials and cut them to fit the respective pages. Perhaps he would want to paste them on sheets of paper. After this is completed, the secretaries could cut the stencils directly from this second draft, now pasted on sheets exactly as it will appear in the final form. A good grade of stencils should be used and the secretary should have a good quality of correction fluid on hand so all corrections can be made neatly. The paper is then ready for mimeographing. Care should be used in the duplication process that a sufficient amount of ink is used in order that clear copies are produced. Mimeographed materials can be produced in neat, attractive and easily read formats.

The last group to receive the paper is the circulation staff. They assemble, staple and fold it for distribution. If the paper is to be mailed to the total membership, consult your local postmaster for the requirements to mail under a second or third class bulk mailing permit. There are certain regulations that are very important in such mailings. If you are distributing the paper otherwise, perhaps your ushers can hand it out with the Sunday bulletin. At any rate, be certain that the paper gets into every church home.

Suggested Time Schedule

Timing is important if your news and articles are to be pertinent. A suggested schedule would go something like this: Assign articles at the first of each month. Insist that they be returned by the last Sunday of that month. Edit them in the next several days. Turn them over to the secretarial committee which should have three or four days to complete their work. The circulation committee could then have the paper in the hands of the membership by the second Sunday of that month.

Means of Financing

The source of financial support is a major consideration for all churches. Locate a local member or members who would be willing to sponsor your paper. Perhaps you would get twelve people, each sponsoring one month. Or, more advisedly, the paper could be included in the local budget as a regular expense. In other cases, you may even be able to charge a nominal subscription rate, but the danger here is that circulation will be limited to those who subscribe. Above all, try to finance the newsletter without selling advertising space.

Records

Records of the publication are a necessity. Keep official copies of each issue, a list of contributing writers, financial reports on costs and how they were met, postal receipts from mailings, correspondence received regarding your paper and other pertinent information.

A church newspaper has value for the smallest and the largest of churches. We live in a world where people are inclined to react favorably to that which is continually before them. The church should recognize this principle as she plans her educational strategy. The newspaper can be used in your church as a consistent and effective means of placing the work of the church before the people and of drawing and keeping members in the fellowship of Christ.

Sunday Morning Worship

GOING to church on Sunday morning continues to be a growing experience for me, for every such service not only strengthens my relationship with my Creator but it also gives to me a new and meaningful experience with him. It is the grand finale in my little personal drama which starts earlier in the week. Yes, the worship service is the culmination of God's weekly wooing of a new facet of my being of which he gives me consciousness. Because of the abundant love which he gives to me without the asking or the deserving I spontaneously respond, first by simply adoring him, then by surrendering to him this newly revealed facet of myself. It is here that we two, the Creator and the creature, are again united through love into a better and more perfect union; it is here that I again say "I do"; it is here that all our voices join as one in singing the triumphant march, in proclaiming the good news, always exciting, always surprising.

Once again, through this worship service, God's people have been united with one another to become lost in a spiritual oneness, and then united with him whom we worship and adore, so that our common light might shine anew within a world which is filled with so much darkness. And then we depart from this place of worship, not one by one, but together as one people, united into a oneness of purpose which is to live the new week in a finer way, serving him who first loved us, who then created us, and who now sustains and redeems us in all of time.

The Church Abroad

Edited by J. Henry Long

In November 1954 Dr. and Mrs. Vernon Kinzie of Tonasket, Washington, paid a vacation visit to our mission in Ecuador. Here are Dr. Kinzie's observations in question and answer form.

Report on Mission in Ecuador

Dr. Kinzie, I understand that your trip to Ecuador was partly a vacation trip. How does Ecuador strike a tourist?

From a vacation standpoint, I think Ecuador is a wonderful country. It is almost a cameraman's paradise. Lots of beautiful scenery there. I think the country struck us as being a little bit more backward than we had anticipated, a little more primitive, certainly in the Indian area.

However, in addition to taking a vacation trip you had definitely planned to observe the mission at work and to bring back a report to the Board?

That's right.

Several questions come to my mind concerning Ecuador. The one that is asked perhaps most frequently is the question of religious liberty. How is that situation in Ecuador? Do the Protestants, or Evangelicals as they are called, have freedom of worship as we understand it?

Yes, there is freedom of worship, I think as we understand it, although there is much pressure brought to bear on Protestants in various ways. You can feel pressure against the Protestant religion.

Then there is nothing official that would restrict their assembling for worship or organizing as a church?

No, as a matter of fact, freedom of worship is guaranteed in the constitution.

Our mission seems to be directed primarily to the Indian people. How do these people stand in relation to what you might call Ecuadorians?

There is a rather heavy Indian population in Ecuador and the Indian in Ecuador is the bottom of the totem pole, so to speak. He is looked down on by every other class of people. Our work did start primarily among the Indians, but as our work progressed gradually there came to our Indian church whites or mixed whites, as they are called, who asked to become Christians. We explained to them that if they did become Christians they would have to come into an Indian church. This is hard to visualize because the whites and Indians are culturally far apart, something like putting a group of college professors and household servants together in one group. The whites speak Spanish, whereas the Indians, although some of them can understand Spanish, largely speak Quechua. And so there is a great difference, but more and more whites are coming into the church. This produces some cultural problems in our church right now.

Do you forsee any great difficulties in our attempt to minister to both these groups in the church?

It certainly poses a great problem, and I don't quite know what ultimately will be the answer. If the church was immediately put on an indigenous basis, we would have two groups right now. The Indian group would go its way and the white would go its way. As long as we maintain missionary influence I think they will remain in one church.

Are there any Indians on the teaching staff of our school?

No, they're all Ecuadorians. The national director of the school was converted in another mission and is a loyal Christian. The other members on the teaching staff, of whom there are three, are Catholic, but liberal Catholic I'd say, because they co-operate in our school program and attend Bible study and prayer meeting with a group of our Christians and help in numerous ways. They do not seem to be obstructive at all in our work.

To what extent is it possible to give religious instruction in the school?

We have complete freedom from that standpoint in our school, which is on mission property. We have chapel services twice a week and there are classes of religious instruction.

Are any Bible study classes held outside the school?

They are Bible study classes for the adults in our church.

Is there any prospect that as the school program grows these graduates of our school may develop into evangelical leaders?

I think there is a good prospect of that. One boy now in the fifth grade actually conducts the worship services on Sunday morning. At least two others are at normal school taking teachers' training courses; and Mercedes Tasiguano, who is one of our first Christians and who brought her father and family into the church, offers real promise for Christian leadership later on.

One of the things that gives me concern, however, is that we do not have any actual training program beyond the sixth grade. One wonders what is going to happen to these youngsters if we cannot hold on to them in some way or other.

Is there any possibility of developing a hostel for our students who are at public schools?

There is a teacher's training school, which is a national school and there is a possibility that one of the other missions is going to run a hostel for Christians who attend that school for teachers' training.

What are the major health needs of the Indian people?

There is an urgent need of medical care among Indians. They have practically none. There is a free clinic in the city of Quito to which they can go, but the medical care is of poor quality. Since Faye Koontz came into our area we are now having clinics once a month at our school to which a doctor from Quito gives his services. The Indians have many skin diseases. Much of their trouble is due to poor diet, poor nutrition. They have parasitic diseases of various kinds, hookworm, malaria and that sort of thing.

Do you feel that our mission program, even if it would not otherwise be greatly expanded in the future, should have a resident doctor?

One of my recommendations to the commission was that we have a doctor and wife sent down as soon as it is practical to do so and that attention be given to the preventive health program. I think that will pay the biggest dividends. We need to do something to raise the general health level.

In your report you pointed up some of the difficulties in agricultural work. What kind of an agricultural program is likely to be of most help?

Among these Indian people, of course the thing that will be of most help, if we can accomplish it, is to improve the variety of some of the things that they are raising and improve their soil conservation practices both in the matter of erosion and in the matter of using fertilizer for their soil. That will pay the biggest dividends for improving their health and their general living standards. There would be some value in getting the Indians to use milk, but that is an extremely difficult thing to do. Even though they have goats, some of them, they almost never use milk. If we could get them to raise animals to produce food, it would be of real help.

Is this a program that will take time and patience?

The Indian lives only for today; he cannot see how doing things now will help him tomorrow.

Will new ideas take hold through the school? Are the children our best opportunities?

We are hoping that we can change the attitude so that they will be more susceptible to some of these teaching methods. Rolland Flory is attempting to introduce new ideas with the school garden plots on which the youngsters are working.

Just what is the difference between our mission in Ecuador and the Foundation?

The Foundation is a nonprofit corporation that owns the buildings and the land and some of our vehicles. It is a nonprofit corporation administered by some of the missionaries and some of the Indians for the benefit of the people in the area. Any profits derived from the sale of produce on this farm or this Foundation will be used for this work. It cannot be sent out of the country. It has to be used there.

If there are political changes in the future that would make it necessary for missionaries to leave, would the Foundation facilitate the continuing of the church and perhaps some of these other activities?

A Pronouncement on Indian Affairs

Adopted March 3, 1955, by the General Board of the National Council of Churches on recommendation of the Division of Home Missions

THE communions constituent to the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U.S.A. and the National Council's Division of Home Missions have long been concerned for the welfare of Indian Americans. In their missionary outreach to Indian Americans they have preached the gospel, provided schools, conducted hospitals, rendered services to families and communities and labored persistently in behalf of justice.

Suggested Standards for Federal Policy

Because of this historic interest and contribution the National Council of Churches expresses certain concerns and proposes certain standards in respect to recent trends and actions of the Federal Government in relation to its responsibilities towards our Indian fellow citizens. We are mindful of the very long trustee relationship which the national government has sustained to these original Americans and the moral obligation to see that any transition is made in an orderly and deliberate way with full participation by the Indians affected.

We note a major trend in recent years toward the development of proposals for the termination of federal trusteeship and services. The last session of the Congress actually passed bills affecting six groups. In the consideration given to such legislation in the Eighty-third Congress, it became evident that members of tribes for whom tentative decisions had been made were not prepared to accept the responsibilities. We deplore the haste with which the recent termination bills have been drawn up and, in certain cases, enacted.

Safeguarding of Democratic Rights

A primary objective of our democratic society is that Indian people along with all other American citizens shall have opportunities for self-development in family and religious life, in education and employment and for participation in the benefits of housing, medical care, public services and accomodation. Indians can and should be helped to participate more fully in the benefits and responsibilities of the American community. We recognize that America has been enriched by the Indian cultural heritage and that the values thus brought into our society should be conserved. We therefore affirm the necessity for assuring to each Indian tribe or band the right to preserve, to the extent consistent with the general welfare, its own cultural identity. In any actions terminating its special relationship to Indian tribes, we believe that the Federal Government has a responsibility to act in accordance with objectives stated in this paragraph.

Careful social planning is necessary to make the transition a just and equitable one, so that the termination of federal trusteeship and services does not become a program of abandonment. Such planning should take into consideration the special problems which arise as a result of the varying social, economic and cultural conditions that exist among the Indian tribes or bands. In keeping with the democratic principle, this planning must be accomplished by full consultation and by decisions reached through co-operative effort on the part of the Federal Government, the Indian tribe or band, state and local governments and voluntary agencies.

Specific Considerations

In the light of the more general concerns stated above the National Council of Churches believes that the following specific considerations will contribute to the orderly transition of Indian tribes or bands from trusteeship status to full participation in community life.

1. Legislation to terminate trusteeship should protect the Indian tribe or band against unilateral government abrogation of contracts or treaties which exist between the tribe or band and the Federal Government. Therefore provision should be included in such legislation for the renegotiation of such contractual agreements.

2. Legislation and the administrative procedure of government agencies should provide for consultation and negotiation between federal officials and the representatives duly authorized by the Indian tribe or band. In this way the social and economic problems which confront the tribe or band during the transition period may be handled equitably. The tribe or band should have an opportunity to develop plans or a program for administering its own affairs either as a group or as individuals as the tribe or band itself may decide.

3. Negotiations should be carried on between the Bureau of Indian Affairs and the other agencies of the Federal Government as well as with state and local governmental agencies to work out mutually acceptable arrangements. These should guarantee that the customary governmental services shall be fully available to Indians without segregation or discrimination. Federal services should not be terminated until such arrangements have been made.

4. Programs should be continued and greatly expanded: for the development and use of reservation resources; for a solution of the fractionated land problem in a way that protects the Indian's interests; for the development of those social and economic skills that make possible normal adjustment to employment; and for assisted voluntary relocation.

5. Greatly increased attention should be given to programs for fundamental education and health education. These programs should conserve the values of family life and be in harmony with accepted principles of education.

6. Programs of education for the entire community are necessary to develop an understanding of the changing status of Indian tribes or bands and its effect on Indian American families and individuals.

The National Council of Churches believes that the churches have a particular responsibility through their interdenominational and denominational agencies to contribute to a constructive process of change as Indians face new adjustments to the American community. Every step possible should be taken to prepare local congregations to understand the problems and to maintain mutually helpful relationships between Indians and others in the community.

Report on Mission in Ecuador

management and function of the Foundation and continue to use it in the work that has been established there.

We have been hearing reports, almost every few months, of the baptisms in the church in Ecuador. In your opinion what is the most promising aspect of the church and its future there?

The most promising thing, from my standpoint, is the fact that we have recently gotten some rather influential people, as far as the Indian community is concerned, to confess their faith and become Christian. One is a fellow, they call him the Old Soldier, who came in the day we left. He is sort of a patriarch in the Indian community and respected by everyone. He is one who leads the parade in all festivities. It was somewhat of a surprise and a real joy that he has come into the church. And then Pedro Manuel, who is the present president of P.T.A., a real leader in his own right, recently came in. He works in Quito in one of the embassies there.

Does this developing church in Ecuador have any share in a larger group of evangelical churches there, such as we have in Africa and India for example?

At the time I was in Ecuador, I talked to a great many people and they said they did not believe as far as they could see there was any possibility that there would be a united Ecuadorian church on the level of the Indian himself. But since I came back I have a note from Benton Rhoades, saying that there is in the process of formation now such an organization. Some of our own local Christians are working to effect such an organization.

Is the church in Ecuador to stay, or is it just a transient thing?

The church is in Ecuador to stay. Of course, we need to expand our program. We can rejoice that our mission is succeeding where many have not been able to succeed.

Church News

Northern California

Yuba City—A school of missions was conducted under the guidance of Mrs. Lloyd Dukes with the study being on India, Pakistan, and Ceylon. On Youth Sunday the young people helped prepare for and participated in the love feast and communion with the help of the deacons and the pastor. Our evangelism committee with Melvin Herrick as chairman planned for a preaching revival which was held in March by Bro. Leland A. Nelson, pastor of the Modesto church. Three have been baptized into our church fellowship. On Easter evening one of our youth, Miss Beverely Landis, presented a vocal vesper concert of Passion Week music. On April 16 Miss Hazel Kennedy and Mrs. Paul Halladay were in our church in the interests of both children's work and women's work. Representative leaders from neighboring churches attended this conference.—Ward E. Pratt, Yuba City, Calif.

Washington

Seattle, Lakewood—We have several newly appointed junior ushers who assist at the Sunday services. Installation services were held in March for our deacons. The finance commission made an every-family canvass to help finance the budget and to discuss plans for our church. Good Friday was observed in our church with music and drama by the combined choirs. The choirs also participated in the services at the Easter sunrise service at Seward Park. Elijah Odokara, a member of our church in Harcourt, Nigeria, talked to our youth group on missions. He is attending the university in Seattle and is attending our church.—Mrs. J. W. Ralston, Seattle, Wash.

Northern Iowa, Minnesota and South Dakota

Minneapolis—Nine children were dedicated at the Easter morning service. Since the first of the year seven persons have been received by letter into our church fellowship. The first of the year a beginner's Sunday-school class was started and on April 17 a class was organized for young married people. A group from the Barnum church furnished a service in song one evening and a group from our church went to Barnum to present special music at one of their evangelistic services. Several men representing the men's work group at the Waterloo church visited with us one Sunday evening. The McPherson College ladies' quartet spent one evening with us. At a special church council meeting Bro. Vernon Carothers and Bro. Dale Eddy were elected deacons. Bro. Ray Zook, district fieldman was with us on that occasion and delivered the morning message. Our school of missions series was on the work of the city church. Several films were shown such as Unto These My Brethren and Bible Through the Ages. Rev. David Witheridge, representing the Greater Minneapolis Council of Churches, was guest speaker one Sunday evening. Two of our young people attended regional youth conference at McPherson College. Our church participated with other churches in the community in Good Friday services. The ladies' aid has been making and tying comforters for relief. The devotions at every other women's meeting pertain to missions and the offerings go for that purpose. The ladies have been having a fellowship dinner once each month. Our Bible study and prayer group meets every Wednesday evening.—Minnie E. Smith, Minneapolis, Minn.

South Waterloo—The church is growing steadily and Sunday-school classes were moved about to give the entire basement parlors to the children's department. The women's work group sponsored a mother and daughter banquet on April 22. The Hi-Y and men's groups were co-sponsors for the father and son banquet. On April 6 the McPherson College a cappella choir were with us for the evening program. Fourteen persons were baptized and seven received by letter into our church fellowship. Communion services were held on Good Friday. We participated in the special services on the World Day of Prayer. Once a month a night is given over to the young people with a supper followed by a film, program or recreation. Our evening services have included a number of films. The men's work group has helped at several places in razing old buildings and recently the group tore down the old barn on the custodian's property where a new garage will later be erected.—Mrs. R. C. Hollis, Waterloo, Iowa.

Middle Missouri

Kansas City—The women's work has an all-church women's meeting in the evening once every three months. We had a reception for our pastor and his family, recognizing their five years of loyal service. Bro. Ralph Skaggs and James and Harold Mohler were with us for the reception. Elizabeth Baile also was with us representing the young people's department. Our missionary circle sent clothing to the Navajo Indian mission prior to Christmas. A Christmas pageant in living pictures was presented by the junior high, junior and primary departments. We have two young men in alternative service. One person was baptized and two received by letter into our church fellowship. On Sunday evenings during January our pastor talked concerning the city church. A teacher's training class was held on Monday evenings during February. Race Relations Sunday was observed by exchanging groups with the African Methodist Episcopal church. The women's work group had charge of the World Day of Prayer program with Dr. Ben Morris Ridpath as guest speaker. Our love feast was held Palm Sunday evening. On Easter the McPherson College chapel choir was with us. We met in regular quarterly council on April 13. Mrs. R. J. Gibbs was elected delegate to Annual Conference. Approximately eighteen of our women attended the women's work rally at Warrensburg on April 14.—Mrs. Gertrude Gaba, Kansas City, Mo.

Nebraska

Omaha—On Palm Sunday two were baptized and one reclaimed. A candlelight love feast was observed on Thursday evening, April 7, with our pastor, Bro. Wieand, officiating. On Easter evening the senior choir presented the cantata, King of Glory, which was followed by a fellowship hour. The junior choir also sang on Easter. Our men's quartet has sung on several occasions. All phases of our church work has shown considerable growth since the coming of our pastor, Bro. John Wieand.—Mrs. O. J. Dickey, Omaha, Nebr.

Middle Indiana

Wabash City—Bro. Harl Russell met with us in the sectional stewardship meetings on Feb. 23, March 2 and 9. On district pulpit exchange Sunday, Bro. Wayne Lawson brought our message. A large amount of relief goods was collected in our community. Eight persons from our church attended the regional vacation school conference at Manchester College. Twenty-one from our church attended the district women's rally at Salamonie church. During our Holy Week services, one person was received into our fellowship. Our CBYF sponsored a sunrise service on Easter morning. Council meeting was held April 12 with our elder, Bro. Charles Oberlin, in charge. Bro. Wilford Crumrine was chosen as delegate to Annual Conference. Brethren Marvin Ridgeway and Howard Uhrig were chosen as deacons. The Willing Workers' class sponsored the film, Rim of the Wheel. Our mother and daughter banquet was held May 2 and a baby dedication service, May 8. Two members have been received into our church by letter.—Mrs. Ray Ulery, Wabash, Ind.

Northeastern Ohio

White Cottage—At our regular church council on April 12, we held our election of officers. Bro. Fausnight held a one-week pre-Easter meeting. Our church co-operated with the churches of Newton Township in an Easter sunrise service at Lake Isabella in East Fultonham, Ohio. Two new members have been received into our fellowship. The women's work group has been quilting and making comforters. Minor repairs have been made on the parsonage and a gas furnace has been installed. During our pastor's vacation the latter part of April, a guest speaker was with us for the Sunday morning services. A week of evangelistic meetings will be held in August.—Miss Ella Weaver, South Zanesville, Ohio.

Northwestern Ohio

Eagle Creek—Recognition was given to seven of our juniors for perfect attendance during the past year. One afternoon a number from our church gave a program at the Brethren Home in Fostoria. One evening the men and boys had a meeting at the church using the filmstrip, Unto These My Brethren. On Feb. 27, at the close of the morning service, one person was baptized. At our March family night program, one of our servicemen, Bayard Bosserman, showed pictures of Guam, Honolulu and other places where he had been. Several from our church attended the spring assembly at the Lick Creek church. At the regular March meeting of our ladies' aid group, the women went to the Brethren Home in Fostoria and sewed with the group there. Our church had pre-Easter services, co-operating with four near-by churches in our district. Speakers for these meetings were Brethren Edgar Petry, Oliver Dearing and C. O. Brubaker. The last evening of the meetings, four of our community churches held a union meeting in our church with Professor Howard Raid of Bluffton College as guest speaker. At the beginning of our Easter program on April 10, a pageant was given of the resurrection based on the account in John by the intermediate young people. Following the Sunday-school session, three babies were dedicated. Our church observed the One Great Hour of Sharing.—Mrs. Lois Rodabaugh, Williamstown, Ohio.

Western Pennsylvania

Manor—We had an exchange of ministers during our pre-Easter services. Before our last two evangelistic meetings, we used the two-by-two visitation plan.

Brethren George Fyock, Valgene Fyock, Glenn Ober and Kenneth Widdowson were installed as deacons. At our spring council we elected Brother and Sister J. I. Thomas as delegates to Annual Conference. On March 31 our district young people held their meeting at Penn Run. We elected Bro. Chalmer Dilling of Nanty-Glo as our elder with our pastor, Bro. Thomas, as associate elder. Evangelistic meetings are being planned for October at the Diamondville church. The basement at the Purchase Line house is about completed and plans are in the making for the auditorium with a baptistry.—Mrs. Rosie Ober, Clymer, Pa.

Rummel—Through the month of January a mission study was conducted each Sunday evening on the theme of India. Our pastor, Bro. A. Jay Replogle, taught the adults and Mrs. Luella Edeline taught the children. Rev. J. H. Tice, Pennsylvania temperance representative, gave a talk at Rummel and Ogletown. The offerings were used for temperance work. On Feb. 6 we honored our three golden wedding couples. A religious survey was conducted in Windber and the surrounding territories. A follow-up of visitation by the different Sunday-school classes has been planned in our church. Lenten services were conducted by our pastor and Rev. John Gaus in our church and the Lutheran church. Services alternated between the two churches. Holy Week services were conducted by Edward Cauffiel, Richard Gillin and Kenneth Blough. Our fellowship hall is open one night a week for supervised recreation for the young people. Since our last report one has been received by baptism and one by letter into our church. — Mrs. Warren Hoover, Windber, Pa.

Eastern Maryland

University Park—Bro. Carroll Yingling and Bro. Byron Flory, Jr., were guest speakers on Sunday evenings. During our adult study the chairmen of committees and boards of the church led the discussion; Charles Ogburn led our mission study on India; and letters were written to congressmen by the youth and adults regarding UMT. The women of the church made a money contribution towards a church library which will be under the direction of the board of Christian education. Our church helped in a religious survey in our area. Bro. Irven Stern, missionary to Africa, spoke at a morning worship service. On Feb. 6 we observed the second anniversary of the dedication of our present church building. Mrs. Kenneth Shifflet presented a half-hour organ recital and Ray Ogburn showed pictures and told of his recent visit to Europe as a cattle boat attendant. The evening offering went towards the CBYF's heifer project. A deputation team from Bridgewater College conducted a Sunday morning worship program. Howard Ogburn spoke several Sunday evenings concerning his B.V.S. work in Europe. We again joined in the community Wednesday night Lenten services. The filmstrip, They Also Serve, was shown to several groups in our church. Herman Baliles, who is graduating from Bethany Biblical Seminary this spring, was ordained to the ministry on Palm Sunday morning. Bro. Berkley Bowman represented the district in this service. The Homebuilders class presented the play, The Symbol of a Cross. The film, I Beheld His Glory was shown on Easter evening. On May 1 the Bridgewater College glee club presented a program at the morning service. Seven have been baptized, seven received by letter and seven babies dedicated since our last report.—Blanche Bowman, Riverdale, Md.

Washington City, D. C.—The senior and junior choirs presented the Christmas story, Come to Bethlehem. Our church was represented at the Christian school in the nation's capital, which was sponsored by the Washington Federation of Churches. At our adult forum on Jan. 23, Robert Zigler, Jr., who is with the Heifer Project at New Windsor, showed slides and talked concerning his recent tour of the Middle and Far East. On Feb. 6 the Boy Scouts of our church had charge of the evening program. On Sunday morning, Feb. 13, our pastor, Duane H. Ramsey, was ordained to the eldership. A. Stauffer Curry and our moderator, Saylor C. Cubbage, participated in the ordination service. Our new church parsonage was dedicated on Sunday, Feb. 20, with Bro. Warren D. Bowman, president of Bridgewater College, as speaker for the morning and afternoon services. Open house was held at the parsonage following the dedication service. Special speakers for our Thursday evening devotional services during Lent were Dr. Frederick E. Reissig, executive secretary of the Washington Federation of Churches; Dr. Clarence W. Cranford, pastor of Calvary Baptist church; Bro. Ralph E. White, pastor of the Frederick church; Rev. Edgar W. Beckett, pastor of the Hyattsville Methodist church; Dr. Lawrence D. Folkemer, pastor of the Church of the Reformation; and Bro. Carl H. Zigler, pastor of Broadfording—A number of our women attended the women's work convention in Martinsburg, W. Va. Miss Helen Roth, sponsored by the women's group, presented a selection of pictures taken while on a Brethren Service tour in Europe. A Christmas program was presented by the children and young people of our Sunday school. The CBYF, which is responsible for one Sunday night service each month, conducted a service in January entitled Worshiping Through Hymns, one in February entitled Some Great Men of History, and on March 27 the group presented the Easter play, This I Know. Our women's work group presented a program on the theme of spiritual enrichment through Bible study. Pre-Easter services were held with Bro. Leroy Plum delivering the messages. Work on the new parsonage is progressing rapidly; Bro. Howard Wishard is chairman of the building committee. An Easter program was presented by the children of our Sunday school. At the council on March 30, it was decided to call four young men to the office of deacon at our fall council.—Betty Lou Cunningham, Hagerstown, Md.

Martinsburg-Vanclevesville—The youth presented the play, A Stranger in Bethlehem. Our church was host to the community Week of Prayer service with our pastor, Floyd H. Mitchell, bringing the message. The Martinsburg midweek prayer services are being conducted by the adult Sunday-school classes. Vanclevesville continues to have cottage prayer services on Friday nights. We co-operated in the Wednesday noon community Lenten services which were sponsored by the city ministerial association. The Berean class members have been doing visitation. Our ladies' aid group has been sewing for relief. Brother and Sister Ernest Wampler of Bridgewater, Va., spoke at our morning and evening services on Feb. 27, bringing an end to our month-of-missions emphasis. A special offering was received for missions. The filmstrip, Bill's Decision, and the movies, Alcohol and the Human Body and No Smoking, were shown as a part of our March emphasis on clean living. Our elder, Bro. Fred Spitzer, conducted our council meeting. Mrs. Vaughn Brown and Mrs. Elmer Keesecker were elected Annual Conference delegates.—Betty Grubb, Martinsburg, W. Va.

Second Virginia

Beaver Creek—Bro. Orville Garber was morning speaker for our home-coming service and Bro. Carroll Ringgold, afternoon speaker. They were both ordained to the ministry in our church and are now serving in other churches. Our children's Christmas program was followed by a fellowship supper at the church. Bro. James Renz was with us on Sunday morning, March 6. Our CBYF group presented a musical program on Sunday evening, March 13, which included special music and congregational singing.—Mrs. Roy F. Simmons, Bridgewater, Va.

Southern Virginia

Boones Mill—Since our last report visiting ministers in our church have been Bro. Ezra Bowman from the Bethlehem church, and Bro. Homer J. Miller from the Barren Ridge church. Our young people attended the district hilltop at the Danville church. One Sunday evening, Wesley Wright showed pictures of his trip overseas. Mrs. Roland Ikenberry and Mrs. Sylvia Laprade represented our church at the children's workshop at the Coulson church. A group of our young people attended the district youth banquet at the Bassett church. Our church council was held on April 3, with Bro. G. W. Bowman as moderator. We are looking forward to securing a full-time pastor in the near future. Bro. E. E. Bowman was appointed to represent our church at Annual Conference. Our spring communion was held on April 7, with Bro. Randolph Abshire officiating. On April 10 Bro. O. D. Eller brought our Easter message. The young people sponsored a sunrise service in the Mountain View cemetery.—Mrs. Owen Ikenberry, Rocky Mount, Va.

Unto One of the Least of These

ACROSS the barbed-wire that restricts her playing this German girl offers her gift of flowers. She is not responsible for the almost impossible living conditions in which she has grown up. War is to blame—and the evils that result from war are responsible for the loss of parents and friends, for bombed-out homes, for the tragic disorder and suffering that follow a giant conflict. But she has made the best of what the world left her—a plaintive smile, a simple act of friendliness, most of all an outstretched hand. She is expressing her thanks for the gifts she received from Christian friends in America. The artist who says so much in his drawing is eager also that his gift of thanks will express to American Christians what his countrymen feel so deeply. As long as such small hands are stretched out, either in gratitude or need, we must continue to share and to increase our service, knowing that what we do "unto one of the least of these" is also done "unto Him."

Could Lead to Misunderstanding

Bro. Eby's article, "Education for Sectarians," in the April 23 issue of the Gospel Messenger was very provocative, and should be considered seriously as a symbolical sectarian group is being distorted by contemporary exigencies. Although I think I understand what Bro. Eby means when he says that Brethren doctrine should be taught as heretical doctrine, I feel that this particular terminology can lead to misunderstanding. It seems to me that Brethren doctrine, if it is to maintain a vital relationship to the church universal, must transcend the orthodox-heretical conflict in which true doctrine is identified with particular relative understandings of Christianity. Pietism was a reformation or purification of a distorted interpretation of Christianity in which doctrine had become a matter of intellectual deductions in both the orthodox and heretical camps. Pietism was an attempt to state the truth that Christianity transcends any human formulations about it, and consequently contended that neither the orthodox nor the heretical views of Christianity could be identified with Christianity. Pietism went beyond the conflict and concluded that Christian experience stands in judgment on any concept of doctrine which claims to have the totality of Christian experience wrapped up within itself. Therefore, the Church of the Brethren as a part of the Pietistic movement finds itself not only faced with the problem of maintaining a tradition which is capable of producing nonconformists, but is also faced with the responsibility of relating this tradition to the ongoing development of doctrine within the church universal which has a tendency to claim a sovereign status for human fragmentary interpretations of Christianity—Armon Snowden, Raleigh, N. C.

Together

More than fifty years ago, the Brethren church at Mathias, W. Va., was separated from the Church of the Brethren. There are now, and have been for many years, two buildings in almost calling distance of each other. Of recent years, however, there have been many co-operative activities between the churches of this community. Realizing that our two organizations have a common heritage, and that our practices are almost identical, even closer co-operation has existed between the Brethren church and the Church of the Brethren.

Since there is no baptistry in the Church of the Brethren, the Brethren church kindly offered its facilities to the Church of the Brethren over a year ago, and the pastors of the two churches together administered the sacred rite of baptism to several applicants from the Church of the Brethren. Later, the Brethren church, needing another minister to assist in the ordination of deacons, called on the pastor of the Church of the Brethren.

All of these experiences have been so gratifying and satisfying, that this year, a joint communion was planned. It was held in the Brethren church on April 9, and there were many from both organizations in attendance. Among the many touching scenes was one that some will not soon forget. The two old doctors, now both in their eighties, who served this community for so many years, and who represent both of the churches, washed each other's feet.

After fifty years! What rejoicing in the hearts of many. Activities such as these cannot help but deepen our religious experiences. May the time soon come when all of God's children sit down to the table of the Lord together.—W. G. Kinzie, Mathias, W. Va.

Lessons From the Israelites

For the past several months our Sunday-school lessons have been given to the study of the Old Testament. I have found the lessons very helpful and inspiring; I have started studying the entire Old Testament.

The study of the journey of the Israelites has taught me several important lessons. As long as they followed God they were in need of nothing. As long as we follow God and obey his commandments we have nothing to fear.

The journey of the Israelites corresponds to the journey of a Christian from babyhood to a full-grown Christian. When an individual realizes he needs God he tries his very best to do what is right in God's sight. If he has secret faults God is willing to forgive them. A person sometimes finds that living the Christian life is not easy but if he trusts God he will not return to the pleasures of the world.—Patricia Brate, Falfurrias, Texas.

What is truth? a persistent question before and since Pilate cynically asked Jesus the question

THE setting for a very persistent question was the ancient city of Jerusalem. It was early on Friday morning, before the Feast of the Passover. A mob of Jewish people had gathered before the Roman governor's residence, where they raised a clamor calling for Pilate to come out and give them an audience.

When the governor came out, he was grouchy. It was early; he was probably groggy from more than just lack of sleep, and he despised these Jewish people and their religious concerns anyway.

"All right! What is all the fuss over this man? What kind of charge are you going to bring against him that justifies getting me out of bed in the middle of the night?"

"Listen, governor," the Jewish leaders said, "We have a very serious charge against him or we would never have handed him over to a Gentile court. He has blasphemed against God."

Pilate was not impressed with a religious charge. He said, "Take him away; you have courts to handle such things."

But the Jews insisted that Pilate try Jesus, for they felt that he deserved death. So Pilate went into the guard house and talked with Jesus. He got right down to the point that bothers any ruler. Did Jesus have any political designs? Was he a member of some underground movement that would threaten Rome? Was he the King of the Jews?

Jesus was rather surprised. He asked Pilate, "Do you ask this question yourself, or is this a charge brought against me?"

Contemptuously Pilate asked, "What do you take me for, a Jew? Your leaders handed you over to me. Why did they do it? What have you done?"

Jesus told Pilate of the kingdom of God. There were no political designs to it. If there had been, the followers of Jesus would not have allowed him to be taken. His kingship was in the realm of the spirit. Pilate was impressed, and he confessed there was something kingly about Jesus.

But Jesus would not accept that in material terms. The only kingdom Christ claimed for himself was absolute rule over the kingdom of truth. He responded like this, "For this one reason I was born into the world, to bear witness to the truth. Everyone who is of the truth hears my voice."

The flippant, skeptical Pilate scoffed and asked, "What is truth?" Rome and the Roman Empire were filled with people who claimed to be searching for the truth. Many religious and philosophical groups claimed to have a monopoly on truth. When the Romans developed into a luxury-loving people, they welcomed the Epicureans. The Epicureans taught that the only real good in life is to enjoy your appetites.

Pastor of the Ottawa church, Kansas

There were the Greek Sophists, teachers of the fine art of living. They taught the skillful artistic use of speech, the use of clever arguments and reasoning to win their point. They used fallacy which could not be disproved.

There were the Oriental Theosophists, who claimed to get their knowledge by a mystical inspiration from God. There were the Hindus, with their doctrines of the reincarnation of the soul, which may come back as a man or an animal, depending on how well one submitted himself to his caste limitations. Maybe that was truth.

There were the Stoics, who taught you must discipline yourself so you are not influenced by your emotions, either of joy or of sorrow.

Rome had developed laws and a physical power to enforce order. They believed that might makes right, that peace belongs to the strong. Maybe this was truth.

The Roman world of Jesus' day was running over with people who claimed to have the truth. It is no wonder this poor man of the world, Pontius Pilate, flippantly scoffed at Jesus. Truth —what is truth?

Jesus had an answer to that question. He gave it to the disciples in the upper room, following the last supper he shared with them. Jesus' answer is, "I am the truth." No man will ever find enduring satisfaction, peace, or joy in this life; no person can come into a right relationship with God the Father and know eternal life, except through Jesus.

The flippant question of Pilate is a persistent one. It still plagues the people of today. We wonder what truth is. What is right and wrong? It seems a relative matter, doesn't it?

Our news is a good illustration of this. We take our newspapers and read different columnists' comments about the same news story, and we wonder if we have understood what we read. Then we realize some things are told from the interest of big business or labor; some from Hollywood's viewpoint; others from a religious viewpoint. The religious commentators are likely to differ more than anyone else.

The other day I saw a very interesting news picture of the President giving a citation to Dr. Salk for his polio vaccine work. He commented on how much the people of the United States and the world appreciate what he had done to relieve suffering and death. It was a very moving sight. Then I saw that the program was sponsored by a tobacco and an automobile company. I recall reading only a few days ago that speed is one of our greatest killers, and we are building and buying faster and more powerful cars. On the one hand, we are thrilled to be overcoming the fear of polio and death, but this emotion is used to induce people to buy things that may kill them anyway, by a sudden jolt or in a slower cancerous way.

Young people are constantly faced with the problem of what is right and wrong in thoughts, habits, moral conduct, choosing friends, deciding what to do with their lives. Recently a student from a nearby university robbed a bank in Kansas. Those who knew him said he was a fine boy, and they wondered about his motives. Newspaper reporters said it was because he owed bills at school and he wanted money for dates, like other fellows at school. The next day the police found him. The things he wanted, if the reporters got the real story, are not his to enjoy because he chose the wrong way to get them.

You cannot measure right and wrong on the basis of your own situation. Truth and right are the same under all circumstances. A wrong answer will get you into trouble.

It is a persistent question. There is an enduring answer. Jesus said, "I am the truth. I will not just tell you what it is; I will show you. I am truth itself. My spirit, my nature, my life are truth. All else is false, error, sin."

I think we can illustrate truth by our experience of remodeling old houses. I was helping to put up a new wall in a building one day. We had tested the sides with the level, and they seemed almost perfect. But when those carpenters put up the studding for the doors and built in the door frames, they didn't measure from the walls; they used a level,

SELF

RUSSELL S. SHURTE

Why do we pray, "Thy will be done," and then reject it?
Why do we search and beg and plead, then not respect it?
We are afraid; we have not learned to trust Thee;
Our foolish self has caused us to mistrust Thee.
Each morn we pray to know "thy will" this day,
Then rise and start to falter, on the way.
The simple reason is we can't believe
Because our hearts have not been open to receive,
And thus with others we have failed to share
Our lives too wrapped in self to really care.
O God! there is a way from out this great distress
But we our selfish sins must first confess,
Then crucify the self, with all its lusts,
And live a life of one who really trusts,
Or we will never follow where He trod;
No man can follow both himself and God.

Is It a Genuine Revival?

IS THERE a revival of religion in America? Is it genuine or is it "phony"? Is Protestantism truly "resurgent" or are we in danger of accepting some new religion that is not really Christian?

These are questions that frequently come to our minds as we read today's newspapers and magazines. The statistics are impressive. Churches accepted more new members at Easter time than ever before. There are now more than ninety-four million church members in our country. The percentage of church growth increases faster than the growth of our population.

There are evidences of a new interest in religion. The sales of Bibles, especially the new Revised Standard Version, are high. Billy Graham and Fulton J. Sheen, though most widely known, are not the only leaders whose meetings, whose radio and television appearances and whose books appeal to millions. The movies have seized on Biblical subjects; popular songs exploit religious themes; and the Jehovah's Witnesses can crowd more followers into Yankee Stadium than any ball club.

Religion is popular in Washington. The Capitol now has a prayer room; the pledge of allegiance includes the phrase "under God"; new stamps insist that "in God we trust"; senators and representatives go to prayer meetings; and President Eisenhower regularly attends church.

Writing in Life Magazine, Paul Hutchinson points out that the new interest in religion appeals to high brows—the intellectuals who read Niebuhr, watch Eliot's plays and Menotti's operas; the low brows—who like juke box versions of religious songs and hillbilly-type hymns; and even the middle-brows—who go in for books about peace of mind and who follow the "positive thinking" of Norman Vincent Peale.

But is it a genuine revival? Billy Graham draws his crowds and thousands make decisions, but does that merely prove, as one critic said, that "there's no business like show business"? In other words, are we as a nation merely responding to well-publicized showmen or are we on the way to finding real security in a faith that will transform our personal lives—and give strength to our nation?

Prominent churchmen have come to the defense of the revival, especially in Washington. Joseph Sizoo, who now ministers to university students, says "the search for God is on." Elton Trueblood defends public leaders, like the president, who are openly identified as church members. Many who once were critical of Billy Graham are now among his supporters.

But many other Christians are raising questions. Franklin Clark Fry, Lutheran and World Council official, notes that much of the interest in religion results from anxiety and fear. People want God, but their God is not clearly defined. It seems that "any God will do." Liston Pope, dean of Yale Divinity School, comments that radio and television religious programs are merely sentimental—they focus on the audience, not on the gospel.

Dean James Pike, Episcopal leader and university teacher, warns against the hypocrisy that results when we state noble ideals and then fail to live up to them, putting "in God we trust" on stamps and coins but making sure we have more atomic weapons than any other nation. Another Episcopalian, young Francis B. Sayre, the grandson of a former president, reminds us that the cross is lacking in these public manifestations of religion. He says that terror is not the motive on which to build religious faith. Terror can thrust out love for man and love for God.

A genuine revival always requires repentance. Let's face it frankly. There's little personal or national repentance in the United States today. When a real revival starts we'll start asking questions about the monstrous evil of building and using hydrogen bombs, about wasting our agricultural resources while other nations starve, about drafting our young men for compulsory training to kill. A real revival should raise questions about our high standards of living, our growing materialism, our increasing crime rate, our problems resulting from alcoholism.

There is a revival of interest in religion. The church has, therefore, a unique opportunity to meet that interest with the preaching of a genuine faith, calling for honest repentance as a prerequisite for a new life in Christ. The church must never "focus on the audience" to the neglect of the gospel. The church must preach and practice a religion that has the cross of Christ always at its center.

There is a revival and it is neither phony nor phenomenal, but it will not become the revival we pray for unless it confronts men with the gospel of Jesus Christ, a gospel that cannot be sold by hucksters, but must be lived by those whose lives it claims.—K.M.

From Bobby Wildgoose to Cleveland

OVER thirty million attend Sunday schools in the United States and Canada today and many more millions in other countries around the world, but it was not always so. It required newspaper publicity in 1783 in Gloucester, England, for Robert Raikes, "proprieter of the only printing press in several counties," to make the Sunday-school movement, then new, known and accepted. Three years earlier he had quietly founded a Sunday school to teach reading, writing and good moral habits.

The reformation started by Robert Raikes inspired the first national Sunday School Convention in New York in 1832. Continuing the work to "Teach Christ Now," the twenty-third International Sunday School Convention will be held in Cleveland, Ohio, July 27-31, marking the 175th anniversary of the founding of the Sunday-school movement. Some ten thousand volunteer church workers of the U.S. and Canada, the men and women who teach children the importance of religion in their lives, are expected to attend. Also present will be directors of church school programs and leaders of weekday activities.

The Sunday school has moved from a school for underprivileged children with paid teachers to a church agency for teaching adults, young people and children

Opposition to Raikes' Sunday school was fierce for many years and even in 1797 the Sunday school was attacked in the British press as "subversive of that order, that industry, that peace and tranquility which constitutes a happy society and that . . . it ought to be exploded as the vain chimerical institution of a visionary projector."

As an editor, Robert Raikes' attention was first drawn to the deplorable condition in prisons. From this he advanced to the study of the lower classes from which there was a continual procession "ripening for the gallows." Ignorance and neglect of childhood prevailed in England even in the late eighteenth century. Children worked long hours six days a week and were deprived of both religious and secular teaching. On Sunday they roamed the countryside upsetting and damaging farm products and properties, and in cities they ran riot in the streets. Many lived in vicious, foul slums. Not one in twenty persons in Britain could read.

Sometime before 1780 it came into Raikes' mind to attempt a reformation by restraint and instruction in the rudiments of morality. He attacked the problem through the children whom he saw in the streets of the cathedral town "spending their Sundays in sports and drinking, with lewd and brutal songs."

In 1780 he began an experiment which he pursued without publicity for three years to see whether salvation might be accomplished through the children. From his own pocket he paid a poor woman a shilling a day to teach the boys he gathered in "Sooty Alley." He and his young charges were dubbed "Bobby Wildgoose and his ragged regiment."

On November 3, 1783, Raikes published an editorial in his paper and began to exploit his plans in the weekly issues and in the popular and influential Gentleman's Magazine. He secured the interest of such men as the Wesleys and Whitefield, and by 1784 there were five schools in Gloucester with seventy-seven boys and eighty-eight girls.

It was John Wesley, in 1786, who promoted the idea of volunteer teachers, thus insuring the more rapid growth of Sunday schools. By this time the number of scholars in Sunday schools in England had risen to 250,000. The improvement in the morals of the children and in the conditions that encourage and produce vice and crime was remarkable.

Attacks on these schools continued, however, and a Scottish preacher's objection was the fear that "they will destroy all family religion." "It is sacriligious to desecrate the Sabbath Day by having these Sunday schools," said another.

The second great forward step was taken in Wales where adults as well as children were taken into the Sunday school and activities centered on the study of the Bible.

Robert Raikes lived to see the Sunday school established in England, Wales, Scotland, Ireland and America, and the 12 boys of his "ragged regiment" become an army of 400,000. He was honored by the queen, who gave his work the stamp of royal favor.

Development in the United States

The Sunday-school movement had a hard struggle getting under way in America. In Charleston, S. C.., in 1787, a Methodist preacher, George Daughaday, was drenched with water, pumped from a public cistern, "for the crime of conducting a Sunday school for the benefit of the African children of that vicinity." New England was no better, for a young girl in Connecticut in 1820 who gathered a little Sunday school in a church gallery, was forbidden by the church to continue her work on the ground that she was "desecrating God's day in God's house."

The pastor of the church shouted at her and her flock, "You imps of Satan, doing the devil's work!"

In this country there are records of a number of Sunday schools in the late 17th and early 18th century, but these were quite different from the later systematic development stemming from Robert Raikes. For example, by or before 1738, there was a Sunday afternoon meeting held for young people in our Germantown congregation. In 1744, Christopher Sower printed 381 cards for use in these meetings. Each card had on it a verse of Scripture and an appropriate stanza of poetry. This was probably the first Sunday-school literature printed in North America.

A Sunday school on the Raikes plan was organized by Bishop Asbury in America in 1786. Other similar schools were soon started. Sunday schools were begun in the interest of the neglected and uncared for. At first they gave general education such as reading, as well as religious education. Later, with the rise of better public instruction, Sunday schools became more specifically religious and all classes of people began to attend.

In 1817 there were 100 Sunday schools in the whole country. Local Sunday School Societies or Unions were formed in Boston, New York and Philadelphia, and by 1824 the American Sunday School Union. Its purposes were: publication of suitable literature for Sunday schools, selection of Biblical lessons and helps and the organization of Sunday schools in needy parts of the country.

The Mississippi Valley Enterprise was begun in 1829, when the first permanent agency in the Western states was established in Cincinnati. In 1830 it was resolved to organize a Sunday school in every destitute place in the valley of the Mississippi. Among the Sunday schools organized was one at Winchester, Illinois, where a little child, Mary Paxson, brought her father. This Stephen Paxson, known as "Stuttering Steve," soon became the greatest of the Mississippi Valley missionaries.

His parish was the Mississippi area which at that time numbered scarcely 3,000,000 persons. Chicago was a mud hamlet and Illinois a wild prairie. Paxson was provided with a horse named "Robert Raikes," which carried Paxson 100,000 miles in 25 years. The horse is said never to have passed a child on the road without stopping. When "Robert Raikes" eventually wore out, Paxson was presented with another horse known as "Robert Raikes, Jr."

Paxson organized 1,314 Sunday schools with 83,405 pupils and teachers, besides encouraging and aiding 1,747 other Sunday schools. Sunday schools were organized in schoolhouses, barns, log cabins and sod houses, homes and primitive little churches.

The Sunday-school movement came to be supported by the choicest laymen as well as the ministry. By 1832, a common need arose around such matters as the duties of officers, Sunday-school organization and management, and the best method of instruction. To meet these needs, 200 superintendents and teachers representing 14 states and 4 territories convened in New York City.

This was the first National Sunday School Convention. The delegates came by canal barge, by stagecoach, on horseback, by horse and buggy, on foot, and a few on the less than 200 miles of railroad in the entire United States.

The 1832 Convention recommended that the whole congregation, young and old, take part in Bible study. Among the topics considered were infant Sunday-school organizations, qualifying scholars to become teachers, organization of county and other unions.

Use of such secular aids as a blackboard, whiteboard and object lessons came into use late in the 19th century. One teacher reported at the 1887 convention of her experience in teaching the story of God feeding Elijah. She used a loaf of bread to gain attention. This went well in Philadelphia, for example, where boys and girls had bread and butter for breakfast. When, however, she asked in Boston, "And what did you have for breakfast?" the Boston children shouted back, "Baked beans!"

No two classes had the same lesson. The little children studied their catechism; the intermediate groups recited verses they had learned during the week; the advanced classes read the Bible through, without questions, comment or explanation, often without meaning!

Quaint and varied ideas on grading existed in the early days, perhaps necessary because of conditions. About the middle of the century the prize-winning essay in England on practical instruction for Sunday-school teachers urged the following grades: "The Infant," from 2 to 7 years old; "The Ignorant," those from 7 to 15 unable to read well; "The Instructed," those from 7 to 15 who can read; "The Adult," those over 15. The writer calls this classification "natural" as compared to the usual "artificial" separation of the sexes.

Preceding action on uniformity of Sunday-school lessons, there was a meeting of all lesson writers and publishers in New York, on August 8, 1871, with twenty-nine publishers and writers on hand. To them, uniform lessons meant the sacrifice of copyright, plates already prepared and popular schemes of study, aggregating in value many thousands of dollars. However, they appointed a committee which selected lessons for 1872 made up of outlines from different plans, and the first tentative international course came into being. It is of interest to note that the International Sunday School Lessons studied today by millions of people and syndicated in more than 1,100 newspapers follow, with modifications, but in direct uninterrupted sequence, this lesson series of 1872.

The Sunday school has been (1) a "ragged school" with paid teachers, (2) a "ragged school" with unpaid teachers, (3) a church agency to teach neglected children of those outside the church, (4) a church agency to teach both church and outside children, (5) a church agency to teach both adults and young people.

The fifth convention in 1872 drew from twenty-eight states and laid the foundations for the establishment of the International Sunday School Associa-

Live Up to the Dream

Glen Weimer

GOD CREATED MAN in hope that man would be man in the way he meant him to live.

Each newborn child is a sign of divine expectancy and hope.

Man does not really live until he fulfills God's hope for his life.

God made man to be Christlike—to repeat in his own measure the mind and spirit of Christ. The great sorrow of the human heart is to fail in being like Christ. This alone is the supreme tragedy of life!

God made us to be persons in whom he is felt and seen to live—persons who flood the world with healing, redeeming love, persons who carry the eternal light into the dark corners of the world and into the night-like chambers of the human soul.

God made us to be so much, and we are content to be so little.

God made us to give so much and we are satisfied to give mere tokens of what we might give.

When we lose sight of God we lose the vision of life's goal, we leave the path of life and the music in us dies.

When we lose God, we lose each other—

When we forget God, we deny the Christ who loved all equally.

Only as we live up to God's intention do we know the ineffable joy of living.

Now and again life measures up and the heart abounds and overflows with peace, joy and contentment. What is thus occasional in experience, God meant to be continuous. In Christ it was constant because he was fully at the command of God.

Father, enable us to live to thy dream of life for us. Amen.

tion. Uniform curriculum lessons were adopted for the first time. A graded curriculum, for different ages, was adopted in 1908.

By 1890 there was a new appreciation of the value and power of home visitation and teachers were urged to get acquainted with the children in their classes. Mabel Hall of Illinois, a leader in this movement, not only urged visitation in homes but, shocking as the implication must seem to us in 1955, she urged teachers to visit little children in their places of business.

For many decades Sunday-school emphasis was placed on memorization, and the number of Bible verses sounds almost incredible to our ears today. A New York Sunday school reported "18,859 Bible verses recited in one school during the past year." One boy of eleven had memorized four hundred verses in six weeks.

Many verses, of course, were misunderstood. When asked to write out the verse, "Take ye heed, watch and pray," a junior girl wrote, "Tee hee hee, watch and pray." A boy wrote the text, "Many are called but few are frozen," and a girl, "There is a green hill far away, without a city hall."

The twentieth century moved in the direction of stronger organization and greater co-operation. The international Sunday School Association was organized in 1905, with a congressional charter granted in 1907. Meanwhile, the denominations had for many years been organizing their Sunday-school work under boards of education, beginning with the Methodist Episcopal in 1827.

The conviction grew that it was the responsibility of the churches to provide an adequate program of religious education for their constituency. The International Sunday School Association, while thoroughly co-operative on an interdenominational basis, was wholly independent of church control. With the intensification of the sense of church responsibility, the Sunday School Council of Evangelical Denominations was organized in 1910. It was a co-operation of denominations.

The work of the two associations, particularly in the matter of Sunday-school lessons, naturally paralleled one another, and in 1922 they merged to form the International Sunday School Council of Religious Education. This later became the International Council of Religious Education.

In 1950, at Cleveland, in the same auditorium where the Sunday-school convention will be held in July, twelve large interdenominational organizations merged to form the National Council of Churches. In this merger, the International Council of Religious Education became the Commission on General Christian Education. The Missionary Education Movement became the Joint Commission on Missionary Education. These, together with the Commission on Higher Education, now form the Division of Christian Education of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U.S.A.

When "Comprehend" Means "Overcome"

Luther A. Weigle

THE word comprehend comes from a Latin verb which means to seize or grasp. The primary reference of the Latin comprehendere was to the physical laying hold of something but it readily acquired a secondary meaning and was applied to the intellectual grasp or understanding of a matter. In the sixteenth century the English word comprehend was employed in both the physical and the intellectual senses, as was also the related word apprehend. Today the physical sense of comprehend is obsolete, while apprehend retains both senses.

For this reason the translation of John 1:5 in the King James Version has now become misleading: "The light shineth in darkness; and the darkness comprehended it not." That seems to the reader of today to be a statement concerning the stupidity of those who were in the dark and their lack of understanding. The translation by the American Standard Version is better: "The darkness apprehended it not"—but it still is open to the same misunderstanding.

The best translation is that which was given in the marginal note of the American Standard Version and has now been adopted by the Revised Standard Version: "The darkness has not overcome it." The opening sentences of John's gospel concerning the Word in whom is life and who is the light of men do not close with the anti-climactic idea that it is all very puzzling, but with the triumphant assertion that the light dispels the darkness, and that the darkness cannot overcome the light.

Here is the present rendering of the first five verses of the Gospel of John: "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. He was in the beginning with God; all things were made through him, and without him was not anything made that was made. In him was life, and the life was the light of men. The light shines in the darkness, and the darkness has not overcome it."

Other modern translations have "did not master it" (Moffatt); "has never put it out" (Goodspeed, Phillips); "has never overpowered it" (Weymouth, Twentieth Century, Williams); "overcame it not" (Torrey); "did not conquer it" (Rieu).

Religion helps the alcoholic to find joy in serving God and man and to forget himself in helping other alcoholics to make a comeback

Roger T. Hodgden

Religion Makes the Difference

THOSE who are opposed to alcohol and what it stands for are facing a battle of uneven odds. Wherever you go you are reminded of alcohol, through the meduim of television, newspapers, magazines and road signs. Almost every grocery store and drugstore dispenses alcoholic products. It is greatly advertised and it is available on a wide scale. Those in favor of, or those who profit from alcohol are fighting steadfastly for its continued use.

Having had no more experience than the average layman dealing with the situation, I was gratified and inspired to learn from reliable sources that the main difference between the for and against factions is religion. From whichever angle you may examine the subject, it is religion that makes the difference in your line of thinking.

Of all the organizations fighting against alcohol, the Alcoholics Anonymous especially drew my attention. Recently I had the privilege of attending one of their regular meetings. I was greatly impressed by their sincerity and seriousness of purpose. The A.A. is an organization which has but one purpose—one objective only—"to help other alcoholics to recover from their illness." The A.A.'s have twelve steps to recovery, boiled down these steps mean simply: admission of alcoholism, personality analysis, adjustment of personal relations, dependence upon some Higher Power, working with other alcoholics.

Medicine and religion are in surprising agreement and we can compare briefly in a general way what medicine and religion tell the alcoholic:

Medicine says: The alcoholic needs a personality change. Religion says: The alcoholic needs a change of heart, a spiritual awakening. Medicine says: The patient ought to be analyzed and should make a full and honest mental catharsis. Religion says: The alcoholic should make examination of the "conscience" and a confession—or a moral inventory and a frank discussion.

Medicine says: Serious "personality defects" must be eliminated through accurate self-knowledge and realistic readjustment to life. Religion says: Character defects, or sins, can be eliminated by acquiring more honesty, humility, unselfishness, tolerance, generosity, love, etc. Medicine says: The alcoholic neurotic retreats from life, is a picture of anxiety and abnormal self-concern; he withdraws from the herd. Religion says: The alcoholic's basic trouble is self-centeredness. Filled with fear and self-seeking, he has forgotten the "brotherhood of man."

Medicine says: The alcoholic must find "a new compelling interest in life"; he must "get back into the herd." He should find an interesting occupation; he should join clubs, social activities or political parties; or he should discover hobbies to take the place of alcohol. Religion says: The alcoholic should learn the expulsive power of a new affection, love of serving man, of serving God. He must "lose his life to find it," He should join the church and there find self-forgetfulness in service. For "faith without works is dead."

However, we must give religion the last word, by saying, "God grant us the sincerity to accept things we cannot change, courage to change the things we can, and wisdom to know the difference."

The Family Counselor

Naomi Will H. K. Zeller, Jr. Jesse Ziegler

The Family Counselor welcomes letters of inquiry. They may be addressed: Family Life Department, General Brotherhood Board, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill.

Dear Family Counselor,

Our daughter, who is in the eleventh grade has never been known to drink or smoke. But the other night she stayed out much later than usual. Of course, we were concerned. When she came home we are certain we detected alcohol and cigarettes on her breath. When we approached her about it, she first tried to laugh it off. When we pressed the matter further, she became very angry, ran to her room and will not talk to us about it.

We also think we detect a change in her attitude towards us when we approach other matters. How can we regain the confidence that is shattered and continue to grow in our family fellowship?

Concerned Parents

Dear Friends,

From reading your letter I observe assets that are both commendable and constructive. You have had a good personal relationship with your daughter. You have had her confidence and still do to a large extent.

Understanding the experience of your daughter in participating with a group who smoke and drink is basic to understanding the problem. We know the social pressure of the group is extremely heavy at this period in the life of students. Social pressure begins in the late sixth or seventh grade and continues to increase until the tenth or eleventh grade. In most cases it begins to subside then and is not nearly so strong in the twelfth grade. In college or university it will either increase or decrease, depending upon the school attended and the group with which the student is associated.

To most youth the first drink or first smoke is an evidence of the attempt to grow up. It is a way of stating that the individual is big enough to be a part of the social group. From studies made by competent authorities, it has been determined that the children of parents who abstain are about three times more likely to be abstainers than they are if their parents use such items. This does not insure complete victory, but it seems to be primary.

I would then suggest that the change in attitude of your daughter is an evidence of a growing person in a complicated world. Knowing how you feel about engaging in such practices she has already been convicted of her actions. I believe you can do your best to assist her by accepting her completely and bringing her and her problem into your confidence. You will need to assist her to regain completely her confidence by sharing with her more of home responsibility and family concerns and by working with her on other problems without pressing or alluding to the problem related to her smoking and drinking.

As a family you may want to plan more picnics, hikes, camp-outs, cook-outs, trips and other creative experiences where such confidence can be built. To provide the opportunity for her to have friends in the home and to take them along on such family outings will give her security in the family and social group. Further, it will also let her set the pace rather than follow the pressures of the group.

Most youth experiment with smoking or drinking at some time or other. Social pressures in the United States demand it everywhere we turn. Tensions exist in all families at some point or other. Happy is the family who recognizes them early and uses ways of handling them in a constructive way.

You may rebuild broken confidences by sharing more within your family—by taking your daughter more and more into your confidence. Constructive methods of meeting such a problem will also include creative approaches as mentioned above or others that may appeal to you and your family.

It takes time to rebuild that which has been destroyed. Patience and understanding lead to a greater confidence. But also use such experiences as a means to an end. Wait and watch for the opportunity to discuss the basic problems underlying her experience with the group and your relationship to it through her. I feel confident that through such an experience both you and your daughter will grow and deepen both your confidence in each other and convictions related to such problems.

New Director of Children's Work

Norman J. Baugher

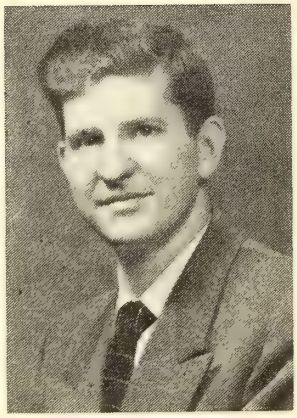
MARY SPESSARD will begin service to the church as director of children's work on June 1. She was called to this position by the General Brotherhood Board to succeed Dessie Miller Myers, who left the office March 1, 1955, to be married.

Miss Spessard comes to this position with a fine background of experience in educational and church activities and enters her new responsibilities with a high sense of dedication to Christ and the church.

In her local church at McPherson, Kansas, Miss Spessard has served as superintendent of the kindergarten department, chairman of the board of Christian education, member of the church board and representative to the city council of churches. In the district she has been director of junior-high work, participated in camp work for seven years and served as a member of the district board of Southwesten Kansas.

Mary Spessard

Miss Spessard is a graduate of McPherson College and has taken graduate work at Kansas State College. She has had twelve years' experience in teaching in the junior high and high schools of Kansas and has served on committees or as an officer of a number of city, district and state educational and professional groups.



Mary Spessard is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Keller Spessard of McPherson, Kansas.

Wendell Eller Assumes Audio-Visual Education Post

Norman J. Baugher

WENDELL ELLER of Chicago, Illinois, who has been called by the General Brotherhood Board to become director of audio-visual education for the Church of the Brethren, will begin his service to the church in that capacity on June 1, 1955. He succeeds J. Henry Long, who is now associate secretary of the Foreign Mission Commission.

Since 1953 Bro. Eller has been employed in the Department of Audio Visual and Broadcast Education of the National Council of Churches in Chicago as evaluation assistant. In this capacity he has worked with committees in evaluating audio-visual materials for use in the local church.

Wendell Eller

Wendell Eller graduated from Bridgewater College in 1948 and received his B. D. degree from Bethany Biblical Seminary in 1953. He taught for one year in the public schools of the state of Virginia.

Among the church activities in which Bro. Eller has participated are a summer pastorate, Brethren Service projects in mental hospitals and a work camp, district youth work and the young adult program.

Wendell was born in Lynchburg, Virginia, the son of Henry C. and Effie Mae Naff Eller, now of Salem, Virginia.

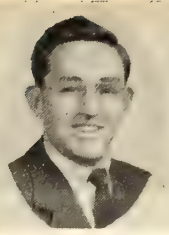
Toward the Kingdom of Truth to capture the force of gravity. They knew that if they wanted the doorway to be square, it must conform to the original true force of God.



It was Jesus who said, "You shall know the truth, and the truth will make you free." He also said, "I am the truth," the truth of God and of life. What was the spirit and nature of Jesus Christ? It was moral righteousness, love, mercy, forgiveness, respect for the personalities of others, a desire to serve; this is in line with the eternal standard of God. This is the truth that will set men free from selfishness, sin and spiritual death. It is truth on which you can build a life or a civilization that cannot be defeated.

We are living in a day when the truth of Christ is needed in our world. It is needed in the world of the family, the home, religion, education, finance, recreation and politics—in every area of living. Pilate's question is a persistent one. "What is truth?" What is right and wrong? Is it relative, depending on you and the situation? Men who have accepted that answer have always ultimately been defeated.

There is an enduring answer. Jesus said, "I am the way." Let us walk in the way he lived. He said, "I am the truth." Let us conform our lives to the spirit of God which he has shown us. He said, "I am the life." Let us believe this and live.

Bethany Biblical Seminary Presents Class of 1955

THE fiftieth Anniversary Commencement for Bethany Biblical Seminary and Bethany Bible Training School was held on Sunday, May 22, with fifty-eight graduates. Included among the Seminary graduates were forty-two who received the Bachelor of Divinity degree, one who received the degree, Master of Theology, and ten who received the degree, Master of Religious Education. In the Training School two were granted the Bachelor of Sacred Literature degree and three received the two-year certificate.

Seven of the Seminary graduates receiving the B. D. degree were of the Mennonite affiliation while the candidate for the Th. M. degree and three of the candidates with the M. R. E. degree were Mennonites. One M. R. E. graduate was a member of the Christian Reformed Church. The remaining graduates were all members of the Church of the Brethren. For the first time in many years a woman was granted the B. D. degree.

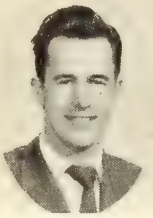
Of the thirty-four Brethren ministers who are completing their work twenty-six expect to go immediately into pastoral work. Others will be entering church service following special graduate work while one will continue on the general office staff at Elgin and another will engage in missionary work for the church in Africa.

The Brethren graduates from the Seminary who received their Bachelor of Divinity degree are:

Herman Lee Baliles, son of Mr. and Mrs. Mack L. Baliles of Hyattsville, Maryland, from the University Park church, Eastern Maryland. He is married to Ruth Hilbert, daughter of the Reverend and Mrs. Carl Hilbert from the White Branch church of Southern Indiana. Herman is a graduate of Bob Jones University and Ruth is a graduate of Manchester College, with an M.R.E. from Bethany. They will probably be serving a pastorate in the Southeastern Region.

Willis Orlo Bosserman, son of Mrs. Fred Sampson of Ada, Ohio. Willis comes from the First Church of the Brethren of Adrian, Michigan, in Northwestern Ohio. He is a graduate of Adrian College and is married to Virginia E. Sweeny of Georgia, Vermont. They expect to serve in the Central Region.

John Robert Boyer, son of Mr. and Mrs. John O. Boyer of Keedysville, Maryland. Bob comes from the Pleasant View church in Middle Maryland and is a graduate of McPherson College. He is married to the former Bernice Miles, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph E. Miles, Sr., of Shelby County, Missouri . They will probably be serving in the Western Region.



Richard Allen Coffman, son of Mr. and Mrs. Allen Coffman of Dalton, Ohio. Richard is a member of the East Chippewa church of Northeastern Ohio and is a graduate of Manchester College. His plans for the future are uncertain at this writing.

Gale David Crumrine, son of Mr. and Mrs. Wilford Crumrine of Wabash City, Indiana. He is a member of the Wabash City church of Middle Indiana and is a graduate of Manchester College. He is married to Ruth Gessaman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Mahlon Gessaman of the Hanoverdale church in Eastern Pennsylvania. Gale will be going to the Palmyra church, Pensylvania, as minister of Christian education.

David Lemoine Eiler, son of Mr. and Mrs. Austin Eiler of Nampa, Idaho, a member of the Nampa church in Idaho and West Montana. David attended McPherson and graduated from Manchester College. He is married to Ruth Holsopple, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joe Holsopple of South English, Iowa. Ruth is a graduate of McPherson College. They plan to spend a year visiting the Bruderhof Community at Woodcrest, Rifton, New York.

Johnson of the Carthage church, Missouri. Harold graduated from McPherson College. They have accepted the pastorate of the Fernald and Maxwell churches in Middle Iowa.

Donovan E. Speaker, whose foster mother is Wilma E. Speaker Giboney of Plainville, Kansas. Don comes from the McPherson church in Southwestern Kansas and is a graduate of McPherson College. He is married to Avis Albright, who was reared by Miss Mae Albright of the Ivester church, Iowa, and who is also a graduate of McPherson College. They will be going for pastoral service to the Pampa church in Texas.

Stanley Terrance Sutphin, son of the Reverend and Mrs. Elmon Sutphin of the Waterford church in Northern California. Stanley is a graduate of LaVerne College. He is married to the former Ardys Albright, who was reared by Miss Mae Albright. Ardys is a graduate of McPherson College. Their plans for pastoral service are uncertain at this writing.

Robert Ray Swank, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ray Swank of the Bremen church in Northern Indiana. Robert is married to Mary Louise Gorden, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Gorden of the Michigan City church in Indiana. Both are graduates of Manchester College and will sail soon for the Africa mission field.

Richard Daniel Ward, son of Mr. and Mrs. Clyde X. Ward of the Lima church in Northwestern Ohio. Richard is married to Mary McDonald, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry J. McDonald of the Lima church, Ohio. Richard is a graduate of Manchester College and has accepted the pastorate of the Union City church, Indiana, in Southern Ohio.

David Kulp Webster, son of Mr. and Mrs. Parker Webster of the Bethlehem church in Southern Virginia. He attended Radford State Teachers College in Virginia and graduated from McPherson College. He is married to Hettie Bowman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Elijah Bowman of the Bethlehem church in Southern Virginia. The Websters will be going to the pastorate of the church in Orlando, Florida.

Mary Grace White, daughter of Mr. Robert White of the Johnson City church in Tennessee. Grace is a graduate of East Tennessee State College and holds an M. R. E. from Bethany. She plans to be married soon and enter the pastorate with Merlin Shull.

Harold Dale Zimmerman, son of Mr. George D. Zimmerman of the Ligonier church in Western Pennsylvania. Dale is married to Norma Shumaker, daughter of Arthur Shumaker of the Oakdale church in Western Pennsylvania. Dale is a graduate of Juniata College. His plans at this writing are uncertain.

KINGDOM GLEANINGS

In order to provide a two-week vacation for the employees of the Brethren Publishing House, there will be no Gospel Messenger published on July 23 or Aug. 6. This is a slight change from former years when one issue was omitted and two others were reduced in size. The full-size Messenger will appear regularly on July 16 and 30 and Aug. 13 and each week thereafter. Announcements intended for the July 30 issue should reach our office by July 7.

Nancy Groff of Marietta, Pa., a member of the Florin church in Eastern Pennsylvania, has been employed as secretary to the youth director in our Brotherhood offices.

Gary Williams of Imperial, Nebr., a member of the Enders church, has been employed to assist in the audio-visual department of the General Brotherhood Board.

Alice Ann Davis from the Red Hill church in Southern Virginia has begun employment as secretary in the church building counselor's office of the General Brotherhood Board.

Benjamin G. Bushong is terminating his employment as a Brethren Service staff member in the relief and rehabilitation department. A dinner in his honor was held at the Service center at New Windsor on the evening of May 25.

Appalachian Trail Hike

The Appalachian Trail Hike, sponsored by the Eastern Region youth cabinet, will get under way on Sunday afternoon, Aug. 7, at Caledonia, Pa., and will end Saturday, Aug. 13, at Pine Grove Furnace. The cost of the hike is $10 and includes food and insurance. The deadline for registering is Aug. 1. Discussion leaders will be Robert Mock, pastor of the Everett church, and his wife.

Radio and Television Programs

A program which presents in a fifteen-minute dramalogue a portion of the life and journeys of Paul, can now be heard over the ABC network each Sunday through July 10 at 1:35 E.D.T. Entitled Pilgrimage Into All the World, the half-hour program also includes an interview with a guest who comes from the area covered in the dramalogue or is an authority in the field under discussion.

Dr. Robert J. McCracken, pastor of Riverside church, New York City, has returned to the air on the program, The Art of Living. This can be heard at 9:35 a.m. E.D.T. on the NBC network.

The television program, Frontiers of Faith, has brought to the National Broadcasting Company and the national organizations representing the three major faiths in the U.S. the Class 1 Television Award given by the Institute for Education by Radio and TV at Ohio State University.

Dale Mankamyer, alternative service worker who has been located at Kassel, Germany, has been transferred to the International Voluntary Services project at Assiut, Egypt.

Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Royer, from Garkida, Nigeria, W. Africa, to Bethany Hospital, 3420 Van Buren St., Chicago 24, Ill. Ralph, a I-W worker under the Foreign Mission Commission, is now finishing his alternative service under Brethren Service. Mrs. Royer, the former Florence Miller, is on furlough from the Africa field.

Mr. and Mrs. James Bowman, from Lassa, Nigeria, W. Africa, to 109A G St., Modesto, Calif. They arrived in the States on regular furlough on May 24 and expect to attend Conference before going on to California.

Mr. and Mrs. Amsey Bollinger, from Anklesvar, India, to c/o Foreign Mission Office, General Brotherhood Board, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill. Returning with the Bollingers on May 23 were their son and daughter-in-law, the Richard Bollingers, who had been teaching at Woodstock School, Landour, India.

Elizabethtown College

Dr. Ralph W. Sockman addressed the graduates at the fifty-third commencement held on May 30 in the college auditorium.

President A. C. Baugher conferred baccalaureate degrees upon fifty-six seniors and three honorary doctor's degrees upon outstanding ministers. Two alumni honored with the degree, Doctor of Divinity, were Nevin H. Zuck, pastor of the Elizabethtown Church of the Brethren, and Charles F. Jenkins, pastor of the Second Baptist church, Columbus, Ohio. The degree, Doctor of Humane Letters, was conferred upon Dr. Sockman. Sixteen candidates for degrees majored in liberal arts; eleven in science; eight in business administration, three in business education; four in secondary education; and fourteen in elementary education. Candidates for two-year certificates included four in medical secretarial science; seven in secretarial science; and two in medical technology.

Baccalaureate services were held on May 29, in the Washington Street Church of the Brethren, Elizabethtown. The Rev. Charles F. Jenkins delivered the sermon, The Role of God's Witness.

The fiftieth annual Alumni Day was observed on May 28, with A. Stauffer Curry as alumni dinner speaker.

Six seniors were graduated with honors. Donald Zook, summa cum laude, completed his course in business administration at the close of the first semester and is now serving the Brethren in Christ Mission,

Northern Rhodesia, South Africa. Donald Albright, magna cum laude, has accepted an assistantship in chemistry at the University of Illinois. James Miller, cum laude, has accepted an assistantship in chemistry at Purdue University. Two cum laude graduates, Nancy Hoffman and Patricia Kratz, will teach in elementary schools. Richard McElrath will enter business.

In an Arbor Day ceremony on April 29, the class of 1955 planted a shingle (laurel) oak on mid-campus, the first of two memorials. The second class gift will be a fountain near the outdoor fireplace and floodlights for the fireplace area.

Manchester College

Dean William M. Beahm of Bethany Biblical Seminary preached the baccalaureate sermon on Sunday evening, May 29, and Harry Zeller, Jr., pastor of the McPherson church, McPherson, Kansas, gave the commencement address on Monday morning, May 30.

Prof. Paul Keller will receive his Ph.D. degree in speech from Northwestern University in June. The subject of his dissertation was An Experimental Study of Openmindedness in Group Discussion.

Miss Betty van der Smissen of Buhler, Kansas, will become head of the recreation and women's physical education department, beginning in the fall of 1955. Miss van der Smissen is a graduate of the University of Kansas with an A.B. and an LLB. degree and will hold her A.M. and Ph.D. degrees from Indiana University. Miss LaVernia Jorgensen, who has held this position for several years, is continuing her studies at Indiana University next year.

Prof. John E. Dotterer, who has been teaching mathematics at Manchester College for twenty-eight years, will retire to part-time teaching next year. The college has secured Ralph Shively to become head of the mathematics department. Dr. Shively holds his doctor's degree from the University of Michigan and has been teaching at Western Reserve University. He is the son of L. S. Shively, who taught mathematics at Mount Morris and Ball State colleges for many years.

Mrs. Isaac Oppenheim of North Manchester, Ind., has recently decided to endow the chair of mathematics at Manchester College to be known as the Isaac and Etta Oppenheim Chair of Mathematics. Funds for this purpose are being provided through a trust fund, and the grant is made in perpetuity. The Oppenheim family have been lifelong residents of North Manchester and have long been friends of the college.

Following the convocation held on March 11 and 12 the college has been encouraged by the response of the public to the march of progress program. The faculty subscribed $20,000 to the fund.

Wayne Carr, who recently served as pastor of the churches at Pyrmont and Rossville, Ind., has been employed to assist in directing the financial campaign at Manchester College. He began his work at the college on a part-time basis in February, but is now on a full-time basis.

John H. Knelson of Dixon, Ill., one of Manchester's 1955 seniors, has won a Fulbright Scholarship for next year. Mr. Knelson had been admitted to the Medical School of Northwestern University and was planning to study there. He will probably defer the beginning of his medical studies and will go to Paris to study biochemistry for next year. This is the first Fulbright scholarship assigned to a Manchester student.

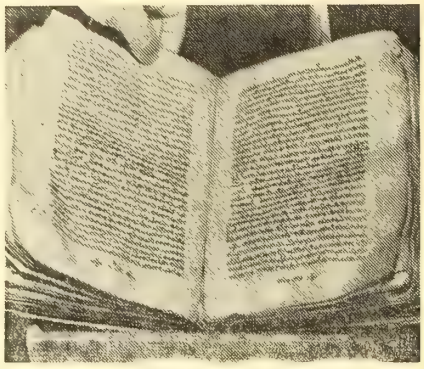
News and Comment From Around the World

American Church People to Tour Africa

Dr. Emory Ross will lead a group of twenty Americans on an extensive study tour in Africa next July and August. The group will meet with governmental, educational, and economic personalities, mission and church representatives in a number of different African countries.

The project is sponsored by the Association for World Travel Exchange, a nonprofit educational organization which arranges two-way exchanges between the United States and other countries. Persons interested in applying for membership in this traveling seminar may write to the Association at 1790 Broadway, New York 19, N. Y.

Church Protest Leads to Abandonment of Easter Parade



The traditional Easter Parade was abandoned in Washington because of the objections by church members. Businessmen on fashionable Connecticut Avenue, site of the promenade, voted not to sponsor it any longer. They received a letter from the Washington Federation of Churches calling the annual display of fashions "a grave violation of the spirit" of the religious festival of Easter.

The prompt response of the merchants brought praise from Dr. Frederick E. Reissig, executive secretary of the federation. He said that their co-operation "should assure a much more worshipful observance of Easter in the nation's capital."

Supreme Court Upholds Religious Scruples Against Oath Taking

The United States Supreme Court ruled that witnesses with religious scruples against oathtaking do not need to make more than a simple affirmation that they will tell the truth.

The court reversed the conviction of Perry Bowen Moore of Sullivan, Ill., who received a two-year sentence on charges of draft evasion and ordered that he receive a new trial. He had refused to take an oath or make a "solemnly" affirmation as demanded by a federal judge. The high court said, "There is no requirement that the word 'solemnly' be used in the affirmation and the judgment of conviction is therefore reversed and the case is remanded for a new trial."

This 1,600-year-old Aramaic manuscript, said by several Biblical scholars to be the oldest known copy of the New Testament, has been on display at the Library of Congress. Known as the Yonan Codex, the manuscript is owned by Norman Yonan, a retired Washington businessman who emigrated to the United States from Iraq after World War I. Mr. Yonan said the book has been in his family for fifty generations

Philadelphia Quaker Meetings Unite

After 128 years of separation, the Arch Street and Race Street Yearly Meetings of Friends have united as a single Philadelphia Yearly Meeting. The union was consumated by the two historic Quaker bodies at a joint 275th annual session. The action was unanimously adopted by more than 1,000 members of the two Meetings, which first gave endorsements in the form of "uniting minutes" at their separate business sessions.

The split into two separate Yearly Meetings came in 1827 because of differences in emphasis on discipline and dress. For years the Arch Street body was known as "Orthodox," and Race Street, the more liberal, as "Hicksite."

Editors of Church Papers Hold Annual Meeting

A combined circulation of 10,550,000 was reported by the 129 member publications of the Associated Church Press at its 36th annual meeting in Washington. These figures were compiled by Dr. William B. Lipphard of New York, executive secretary of the ACP which comprises editors of Protestant publications in the United States and Canada.

Editors were urged to be both theologians and crusaders. One session of their meeting was devoted to the use of doctrine in the church press and another to the subject of crusading. Ralph Lord Roy, Methodist minister and author of Apostles of Discord, reported that charges of Communist influence in America's Protestant churches have all but disappeared. He said that Americans simply refused to believe the false charges.

The editors also heard sharp criticism of the administration of the 1953 Refugee Relief Act from Edward J. Corsi, who said that unless the program is put in friendly hands only a fraction of the refugee quotas permitted in the act will ever be used. Robert J. Cadigan of Philadelphia, editor of Presbyterian Life, was elected president of the Associated Church Press.

Plan to Enroll Million Men in Bible Reading Program

Plans to enroll a million men in a program of daily Bible reading were announced recently by United Church Men, the laymen's division of the National Council of Churches. The plans call for laymen of all denominations to read daily some selections from the Bible or to make use of readings to be telecast on TV stations across the country. Enough one-minute telecasts for this purpose to last 180 days have been prepared by the American Bible Society.

Urges More Nonwhites As U. S. Envoys

A leading American Protestant church woman urged on her return last week from a two-month world tour that the U. S. government send abroad "more diplomats who represent all races" as a means of winning more friends for the United States and achieving world peace."

Mrs. James D. Wyker, national president of the United Church Women, recommended the step as a means of meeting the criticisms by those who under the influence of Communist propaganda "doubt our sincerity" in building for world peace. She said foreign peoples disturbed by the stress on American military might needed to be reminded of such forces for peace as the foreign aid program and UN projects. She reported that women in many countries around the world were moving ahead in areas of political life and social welfare. She pointed to the number of national women's organizations which are crusading for better marriage and divorce laws, property rights for women and social welfare legislation. She gave credit to the work done by missionaries in preparing women for public service.

Pioneer Brethren Missionary to South America Dies

Dr. Charles Francis Yoder, former teacher at Ashland College, one-time editor of the Brethren Evangelist and pioneer missionary for the Brethren Church in South America, died on Feb. 7, 1955, at La Cumbre, Province of Cordoba in Argentina. He was the author of the book, God's Means of Grace, a scholarly study of the doctrines and ordinances of the Brethren. In recent years Dr. Yoder had discontinued active missionary work and had devoted himself chiefly to writing. A few of his manuscripts still await publication. The Brethren Evangelist, official organ of the Brethren Church, devoted its April 16 issue as a memorial to Dr. Yoder.

District Choral Societies Present Handel's Messiah

Two district choral societies presented renditions of George Frederick Handel's Messiah during the month of April.

On Palm Sunday the Northern Indiana district choir, under the direction of John Bechtelheimer, presented the oratorio before an audience of at least 700 persons. Solo parts were carried by members of the choir and a small orchestra accompanied them. The service was held in the Goshen College union auditorium.

The Southern Ohio Choral Society gave their presentation on Sunday, April 24, in the West Milton high school auditorium. This was the fifth year that The Messiah had been presented in Southern Ohio by a choral group representing the district and accompanied by an instrumental ensemble. Director of the Messiah was Perry Huffaker, pastor of the church at West Milton.

Representatives of these choirs, together with members of college choirs that have done the Messiah frequently will assist in the presentation of Handel's oratorio as a feature of the Sunday program at Annual Conference.

News Briefs

Steps towards affiliation with the World Council of Churches were approved recently by the National Christian Council of Japan at its annual meeting. Such affiliation probably will be on a consultative basis. The World Council's central committee has invited the participation of national councils in various countries on that basis.

Walter Freund, head of the Church Affairs Department in East Germany, asked West Berlin officials for political asylum. He told the officials he was unable to reconcile his differences with the Communists over their "youth dedication" program which church leaders have denounced. His defection is the latest in a series that has shaken the Church Affairs Department.

Three specialists in rural sociology have found that when people move to the suburbs they generally keep—and sometimes improve—their church-going habits. The sociologists observe that "the religious experience runs too deep in America to be rooted out by a mere shift in residence."

A Golden Jubilee World Baptist Congress will be held in London, England, July 16-22. Expected to attend the sessions are 3,200 delegates from the U.S. and nearly 4,000 from 60 other countries in which Baptist churches are maintained. According to the planning committee, a total of 18,000,000 Baptists live in the United States.

The Georgia Council of United Church Women has adopted a resolution condemning capital punishment for minors. They took the action after an eighteen-year-old boy was recently executed by the state.

Quotes

Eugene Carson Blake, president of the National Council of Churches: "When the Chief Executive of the nation gives the whole people an example, by his regular attendance at the church of his choice, all men of faith should be glad. Many adults are making decisions every day to join churches. To question the motive or challenge the sincerity of the President or of anyone else who makes such a decision is presumptuous."

Reinhold Niebuhr: "I don't think any nation has ever been so self-righteous as America is today.... But with all its power, America is not as powerful as it thinks it is; and with all its righteousness it is not as righteous as it thinks it is. The business of the Christian church is to say so despite all the temptations to avoid telling people what they don't want to hear."

Dr. John Sutherland Bonnell, after returning from a week's participation in Billy Graham's Scotland Crusade: "I have just come from a city that is throbbing with spiritual activity. And the thing that impressed me was that every individual coming forward was sincere, composed and quiet—no sign of excitement whatsoever. Millions are praying and when millions pray, things will happen. The flame may break out in America any day."

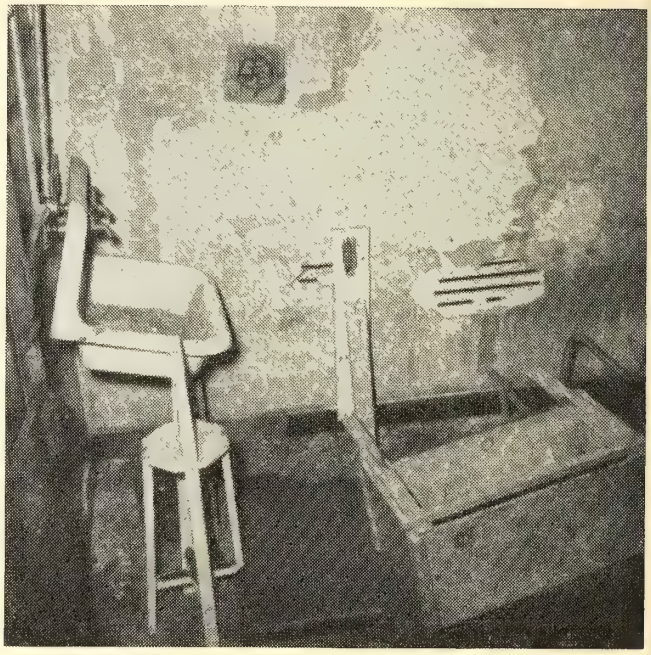
Lewis L. Strauss, chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission: "There is good reason for faith—for belief—that providence intends that the release of the energy of the atom through the instrumentality of man's effort and the intermediation of his genius will promote peace on earth and the greater happiness of mankind."

Dr. H. L. Turner, president of the Christian and Missionary Alliance: "We are going to need a different type of missionary in the future. That means that even our methods of training and preparing missionary candidates may be revised. The white missionary can no longer take the attitude of a lord among the 'poor heathen,' because of the growing insistence on the part of the natives to be treated as equals. Thus, many missionaries are going to be faced with the question of whether they will adapt to the new situation —or get out."

Dr. Emil Brunner, Swiss Protestant theologian, now a member of the faculty of the Japan International Christian University: "Bible study groups are cropping up all over Japan. They shy away from anything that looks like an institution with doctrines, creeds and a form of church government. It is in this group that the real hope for Christianity in Japan lies. I know the leaders of the major denominations will disagree with me, but I believe it is true."

Thelma Stevens, executive secretary of Christian social relations for the Woman's Division of the Methodist church: "Our Christian churches have not capitalized on the New Testament gospel of peace in this mid-twentieth century crisis. The churches are so interwoven in the social structure of the nation that in the cultural crisis confronting us they somehow have not been able to see the dangers and sins of society as objects for responsible action, a challenge to fearless leadership."

New Brotherhood Pilot House



The new Pilot House, 1324 West Lafayette avenue (center). Its rundown condition contrasts sharply with houses on either side

A NEW Brotherhood pilot house has been purchased in the Harlem Park urban renewal area of Baltimore, Md. This house in its "raw" stage was acquired in March by the Brotherhood Service, Inc., and will be renovated by Brethren volunteers. This will enable the Harlem Park citizens, many of whom will be asked later to repair their homes under the urban renewal program, to see a typical row house in the "before" and "after" stages of renovation. A complete cost analysis of the repairs will be available as a guide to others making similar repairs.

This new pilot house will be staffed by a Brethren Volunteer Service unit and will be a referral and information center for the neighborhood. It will also serve as a meeting place for community groups, Fight Blight Fund consultation and for other purposes.

The house selected for this new pilot house is a typical run-down, blighted house in the neighborhood. It has no heating system, exposed electric wiring, falling plaster, peeling wallpaper, dirt cellar, rat infestation and only one bathroom for three apartments. But the structure itself is sound. Later when the "urban renewal" program starts, the city will require other owners to repair those houses that are structurally sound. Those that are not worth repairing will probably be condemned to make space for parks, schools and recreation centers.

Brotherhood Service, Inc., purchased and repaired their first pilot house in East Baltimore in 1951, in conjunction with the housing bureau's Baltimore Plan pilot program. This house, after rehabilitation, was staffed by the Brethren Volunteer Service unit as a referral and information center for the East Baltimore community. For several years it has been operated by volunteers with a full-time director, Vernon Hoffman,

Falling plaster, sagging sink and littered floor are typical of many rooms in the house employed by the Brethren Service Commission. This unit has assisted people in the neighborhood to improve their own homes and has helped to solve social problems prevalent in the community.

Brotherhood Service, Inc., which originated this project, was formed from the men's group in the First Church of the Brethren in Baltimore. This group began to wonder what a group of men could do to clear up the slum conditions in their own city. As a result the corporation was formed and they began to raise money for the project. The new pilot house was purchased for $3,000, with a ground rent of $90 to be bought later. It is estimated that the rehabilitation work will cost another $2,500, most of which will be for materials since the volunteers will do all but the technical work themselves. Other interested organizations and persons have helped in this project since its beginning.

An open house was held in March so that residents of the area could view the house before work started.

Sagging chimney and broken windows in new pilot house will also need to be repaired

Another open house and dedication will be held upon completion.

Summer work camps have been conducted by the Brethren Service Commission to assist in this project, for the past several years. Another one will be conducted this summer to assist on the new pilot house.

"Brethren" German Students on University Campuses

Graydon Snyder

IT IS the present custom on German university campuses for the student Gemeinde or church to adopt an East Zone student Gemeinde as its own. Through this relationshrip there is an exchange of personnel and ideas. In two universities it is Brethren-befriended German students who are taking the initiative in this program of goodwill and peace. At the University of Goettingen, Herman Pabst, who was in America for two years as an exchange student, and Uvie Uhlm, who was a German volunteer in America have worked closely with this program. In November, for instance, they took their slides of America to the University of Halle and gave talks to the East Zone students about America.

In Germersheim, Gisella Pauling and Ulrich Damm, both members of the 1954 Kassel peace seminar, are doing somewhat the same work with the additional fact that they have started a book fund by which they buy Western books to send to their friends in the East Zone, who because of the censorship on publishers cannot buy many books which have come from America and England.

The importance and value of this work can be better realized in light of the fact that it is only through our German friends that we can really touch many people in the East Zone. It is impossible for Americans to do what they are doing because of the current political situation.

Graydon and Lois served as directors of a work camp in the sumer of 1954, and remained in Germany to attend a university.

About 800 pounds of garden seeds were distributed during the last couple months. About twenty Protestant pastors, ten Catholic priests, and three organizations received them.

Brethren volunteer workers on the Karlsschule (school) rebuilding project worked 10,680 man-hours from January 1954 to February 28, 1955, making a contribution of 91,780 Austrian Schillings (over $3,500) Ing. Reinhold Liebe in compiling these statistics expressed gratitude for this praiseworthy accomplishment.

For Volksdeutsch who are planning to emigrate to the U. S. in the near future under the resettlement program, the Brethren Service Commission is providing free English courses. These classes which are open to persons in the process of emigration, are supposed to teach a basic knowledge of the language with emphasis on speaking and less on grammar.

For several years the Brethren Service Commission in Linz has carried out a prothesis program in co-operation with local prothesis makers. Needy refugees are the recipients of these artificial limbs. With these cases the commission is either paying a sizable amount for the purchase of the prothesis or is taking over the total cost of the purchase. Most cases are helped so that the person may again find work.

GERMANY

". . . a clearer vision for the need to work for peace . . ." was one of the decisions made by a group of 100 returnees at their annual student exchange Conference held at Kassel House on April 4-9. The students have decided to start a fund which will help send students, who are unable to get State Department support, to the United States to study for a year.

Several new volunteers are now having the experience of living with German families. Leroy Burdick is living with family Weight. This is their first experience with an American volunteer. Lorene Clark is with family Polikowshi, also earlier the "parents" of an American son. The Gleichann family has their third American son, Bob Mendenhall. Frau Seigle has her first American son, Dale Mankamyer, after an American daughter. The Bluemer family has their first son, Jan Thompson, after two American daughters. The Williges family has their first American son, Ray Grim.

Personal Contacts Count . . . Every Member Canvass

Harl Russell

So I thought it necessary to urge the brethren to go on to you before me, and arrange in advance for this gift you have promised, so that it may be ready not as an exaction but as a willing gift" (2 Cor. 9:5).

ONE hundred forty-seven churches of our Brotherhood engaged in an every-member canvass the past year. The many whose canvasses were properly planned and carried out found this to be a time of spiritual reconsecration.

We support the position that "the primary purpose of the every-member canvass is not to get the gift, but the giver; not to get the possession, but the possessor; not to get the money, but the man."

The every-member canvass involves adequate training of selected canvassers. The church constituency must also be fully informed by announcements, wide use of the mails and finally by calls in the homes. This involves a planned sequence of letters; brief talks in the various classes and organizations, bulletin announcements, use of the church paper, distribution of leaflets, the giving of situation dramas, the preaching of special sermons and eventually the canvasser visits to the homes.

The carefully chosen canvassers are trained in one or two meetings. These usually occur immediately preceding canvass week. These training opportunities include an interpretation of the budget of the church in all of its aspects; a review of the work of the church during the past year; a thorough discussion of all the church has budgeted itself to do next year; a presentation of the outreach of the church in terms of the district, college and Brotherhood Fund causes; a review of scriptural stewardship and help for "telling the story" in the homes.

Effective canvasses require a sufficient number of trained and spiritually motivated canvassers. It is recomended that each pair of workers shall call in no more than ten homes. When adequately trained the canvassers can become the means of an enlightened and inspired congregation.

Why the Canvass

The face-to-face telling of the story of the church's total ministry in the community, its outreach in missions and service and its program of spiritual nurture is the essential contribution of the canvass effort. Many staunchly espouse the canvass experience for congregations of all sizes and types (urban, town or country) for these reasons: it brings a spiritual blessing to the entire church through the practices of the stewardship of time, abilities and material possessions; it is a widely tested method of effective enlistment of lay persons in support of all enterprises of the church; it increases the average financial commitment of members, often resulting in greater interest in kingdom values; it spreads the burden and blessing of church finance across the entire parish and abolishes exclusiveness in conducting and sustaining of the work of the church.

The visit to every member is important as rising costs, both in the local program and the church at large, demand that church finances be revised upward if vital work is to be maintained. Members generally have greater financial resources; more are able to give; more are ready to give; and more will give, if asked in person to do so.

Church leaders will find their enlistment efforts rewarding only if they are backed by congregational decisions that project courageous steps forward. Workers are eager to tell about a "going" church program. This year pastors will have a new set of "check lists" to lead all church boards and committees into democratic consideration of what the church is doing, and ought to do next year. We strongly recommend their use in advance of council consideration of the budget.

"People responded graciously"

When more members have a part in determining the program objectives and financial allocations for the new fiscal year, the congregation is in an attitude favorable to generous support of all the church seeks to do.

The injunction to Seek First His Kingdom will more likely be expressed through systematic and proportionate giving to the work of the church when members are seen personally. Dedicated workers have a unique educational opportunity to tell of the work of the church, to answer questions and to inculate the doctrine of Christian stewardship in the friendly atmosphere of the home.

The Turn-over Chart

Among the helps that are available for the financial enlistment in support of next year's budgeted goals is a canvasser's turn-over chart. It is a means by which inexperienced laymen, after a short training period, can effectively bring this story into the homes of the entire church constituency. Through this controlled presentation the lay visit is directed logically to a commitment in support of the church. Pastors of small, medium and large churches have reported that turn-over charts are instrumental in leading parishioners to volunteer more than token commitments for the church program of the ensuing year.

When the turn-over chart is brought into the home it gives the callers confidence and places those visited at ease. The planned sequence of the chart assures brief but general coverage of what the church is doing and would like to do. Other widely acclaimed advantages of the turn-over chart are: it assures accuracy in what is related as the work of the church; it arouses interest and holds that interest throughout the visit; it focuses attention on the work of the church—not on the canvasser; it helps those in the home to retain more of the story of their church at work since both eye and ear are involved.

Turn-over charts for use by canvassers are available for thirty-five cents each. Several pages of the three-colored, spiral bound chart are left blank to allow for a write-in of information on the budget and the work locally. A sound filmstrip (rental, $1) of another denomination may also be ordered to learn techniques of using the turn-over chart to the best advantage. All orders for canvass helps or inquiries about canvass procedure should be sent to the Stewardship and Brotherhood Fund Department, General Brotherhood Board, 22 S. State St., Elgin, Ill.

QUOTES ON THE CANVASS

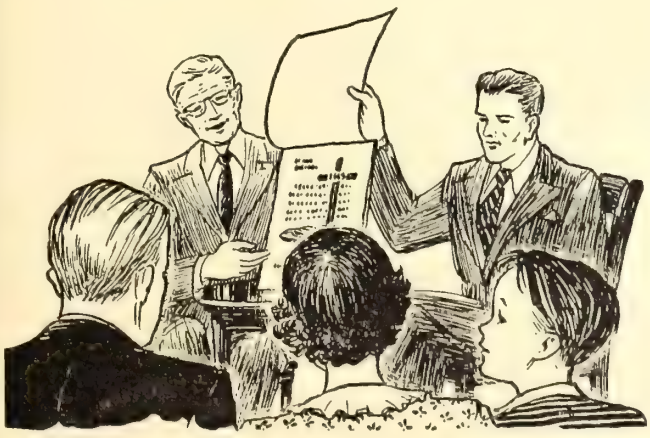
"By use of a canvasser's turn-over chart; by creating better publicity on the program as incorporated in the unified budget; by more careful training of canvassers, our canvass 'paid off' in sixty-two more commitments for an increase of fifty dollars per week."—an Illinois finance chairman.

"The every-member canvass was the greatest thing that ever happened in our church."—an Oklahoma church treasurer.

"Our pre-budget canvass followed an intensive educational effort. We informed everyone of needs and did much to build an adequate concept of Christian stewardship. Following these planned efforts we entered into an intensive canvass for commitments. Then we built a budget that is forty per cent larger than last year's budget—and the budget is completely subscribed. Our church has been spiritually revitalized by our educational and enlistment program."—an Illinois pastor.

"I wish you could have been here when the teams returned. The treasurer called me last night rather late to say he just could not wait to inform me of canvass results. Our new budget is a little over $11,000. Last year members pledged only $5,000. Last night he said the teams had already recorded $10,000 in pledges, a 100% increase, and the canvassing is not all done. For the first time in the history of the church the complete budget will be pledged, and we may go beyond it approximately $3,000 in commitments."—a pastor in Kansas.

"Our program for the coming year in our church of fifty members calls for a budget of $7,000. This is $140 per member, adults and children combined. We should reach it easily. After our budget was adopted we had a successful every-member canvass. The Lord has blessed our efforts in the promotion of his kingdom."—a Florida pastor.



"We have just completed our every-member canvass and the results seem very encouraging. The people responded graciously. We have quite a number who are learning the way of worship through Christian stewardship."—a West Virginia layman.

"Among the seven steps we took in the first year's program here at our church was the essential one to organize an every-member canvass to underwrite the budget. We stressed tithing; to date three fourths of the finance board members are tithers and many others in the church have also begun to tithe. We assure you that our program worked wonderfully well. The total giving to the budget for the year preceding the every-member canvass and the taking of commitments was only half what we will give this year."—Virginia pastor.

"The first year we employed the canvass and did the necessary preparatory work, our offerings increased from an average of twenty-two dollars to an average of forty-five dollars. The annual income that year increased from approximately $6,500 to $8,200. We are convinced on the basis of our experience that this increase could never have come to its present level apart from an every-member canvass. We have had nothing but positive results."—a California pastor.

"Every-member canvass in our church of fifty-two members was a spiritual experience. Our plans developed to fulfill a need and so far they have proved effective. Not everyone made a declaration of intention to give. Some had conscientious reasons while others were allergic to any kind of a commitment for the Lord's work. No force was exerted on this minority group but they were encouraged to contribute sacrificially. The results of this simple canvass and the taking of commitments surprised many of our folk. Giving increased manyfold, not only for local needs but also for the work of the district and Brotherhood."—a Missouri pastor.

"If I were to summarize it would be something like this: (a) study the program of the every-member canvass and know it thoroughly; (b) believe enthusiastically in the spiritual and financial results of the every-member canvass; (c) choose teams with care and thoroughly familiarize all of them with the church program; (d) spiritualize the whole proceeding by interpretation and prayer; (e) conclude the canvass in reasonable time—have a deadline and meet it; (f) thank your people and team workers; (g) inform everyone of the spiritual and financial results.

Turn-over charts arouse interest in the program of the church—focuses attention on work of the church and not on the canvasser

St. Thomas Christians

Goldie Swartz, missionary to India, on furlough, here tells of her experiences at the annual meeting of the Mar Thoma Church, India, which, according to tradition, was founded by the Apostle Thomas

WHO first brought the gospel to India? This had been an intriguing question from long past.

The commonly accepted tradition is that Thomas, one of the twelve disciples of Jesus, in obedience to the Lord's commission went to South India in the year 52 A.D. and there began to preach the gospel. Conversions soon commenced taking place first among the Jews, who had earlier settled on the western coast for trade purposes, and later among Brahmins and other Indian groups. Churches were established in seven different places.

After ordaining two presbyters to carry on the work in that region St. Thomas is said to have passed on to the eastern coast. There also his efforts were met with encouragement and fruitage. Later, probably about 72 A.D., a riot was stirred up against St. Thomas because of the progress Christianity was making and he was killed.

Although this tradition may not be conclusively proved, there are throughout the early centuries many recorded incidents and events in travel and history which lend great weight in its favor. Moreover, the members of the Travancore-Cochin Church, known formerly as the Syrian Church, have not the slightest doubt that their church was founded by the Apostle Thomas and that this Indian church is historically one of the most ancient in the world.

One may wonder then why historical data of this early church is not more plentiful, and why the church has not grown more rapidly. Several reasons may be assigned: the collapse of the Nestorian Church in Persia in the ninth century with which this Indian church may have had some connection; the Moslem invasion from Arabia beginning in the seventh century and continuing for more than seven centuries; the conquest of the Moguls from fourteenth to eighteenth century; and lastly from the violent pressure of the Roman Church during the Portuguese domination from the sixteenth century onward. The Portuguese happily finding Christians in this area became passionately zealous to convert them to the Roman faith. In this intense ardor the pope gave orders to the Portuguese to employ the inquisition. Not only was this severe means used but also they burnt up all the valuable books and records that could be found. To this extreme coercion some yielded and became members of the Roman Catholic Church. Others withstood and took shelter back of the Cochin-Travancore hills. There this ancient church merely managed to survive, carrying on only its services and the administration of the sacraments.

With the advent of Protestant missionaries in the seventeenth century there came also the awakening of this oppressed church. This markedly increased with the coming of the English, who devoted themselves not only to commercial pursuits but also to the spiritual interests of the people.

Thereafter followed an increasing arousal from lethargy of this ancient Syrian Church until today it is recognized and admired as an eminent Christian body. This sect has become a keen and active church ascribing to themselves the name, Mar (meaning Saint) Thoma Syrian Church.

Although this great Church became divided it nevertheless maintains a distinct Christian solidarity and is "the leading Christian community in India. From it have come leaders in missionary, social and edcational work, also outstanding figures both in public and in church life."

More than half a century ago two great Tamil evangelists so stirred South India by their moving messages that a great assembly met near the town of Maramon. The vitality they imparted to this church found a permanent response in the annual convention of the Mar Thoma Syrian Church. In February 1954 I had the opportunity to attend the assembly.

It is in a very picturesque setting in the dry river bed of the broad Pamba river in Travancore that the convention continues to be held for one full week during the moonlight season in February. At this site the stream takes a graceful bend, and is bordered by high banks wooded with banana groves. At night these silhouetted palms present a scene not to be forgotten.

To one side of this beautiful spot flows the now narrowed stream, this being the dry season, wherein are lined up house-boats which have brought many visitors by river. Others have come by foot, by cart, auto or bus. Mar Thoma members from every part of India turn their footsteps homeward for this great occasion.

During the week of the convention the government grants permission for the use of one-half mile of the river bed. The main pavilion, together with several smaller ones and numerous booths for restaurants, are located in this area. At first sight of this mamouth conference ground one might think weeks had been required for its construction, and at great cost. So one is amazed to learn that it is erected in one day and that for a trifle! The day previous to the opening of the conference farmer Christians appear bringing innumerable bundles of thatch (leaves of palm trees) and put up the structure in a few hours.

The attendance may begin with several thousand but by the last days the number may reach 40,000 to 50,000. Although this may be the largest Christian convention known, and certainly the most unusual one in the world, to those assembled it is but a heart-warming and heart-stirring occasion of fellow-- wooded with cocoanut palms and ship and spiritual growth. Morning, afternoon and night, for services of an hour or two in length, men, women and children trek from their camping places to and from the meetings.

As the attendance increases day by day the pandal is enlarged section by section until it may cover an acre or two. When this massive concourse of thousands arrayed in spotless white, seated on the clean sand and sheltered from the scorching sun by the palm-leaf thatch—what an impressive spectacle it is to behold!

This vast gathering is entirely a spontaneous one, and everywhere is manifest a high and wholesome religious tone. There are no outside entertainments or diversions. Over the whole grounds during the entire week I saw but three people smoking, and these near a restaurant. Even outside on the public streets of the town smoking was seldom noticed.

As to the program there were the early morning Bible classes imparting deep spiritual truths which set the ballast for the day. Preceding the forenoon and afternoon sessions were a song-fest and a season of prayer. Even to one not able to understand the language of this area there could be no failure to understand the spirit of the utterance. It was a thrill to listen to the chanting of their liturgy and their singing in unison without a special choir and with but one leader and one musical instrument, a violin.

Again one was deeply impressed by the spontaneity of their prayers of confession, petition and praise. Items for special intercession previously handed in were read, a few at a time.

How freely and fervently they prayed, man or woman here and there over that vast audience arose from squatting position to knees that the voice might carry throughout, and uttered short, pointed petitions.

A varied program filled the sessions—challenging addresses, numerous items partaking the nature of a survey of the whole life of the church including missionary activities within and outside Travancore, the Sunday-schools, children's work, women's work and youth groups. A surprising element of the meeting was to see so many young men and women in earnest participation. While being refreshed in soul they were hearing the call from discipleship to apostleship, and from their own inner urge were requesting to go out into evangelism of the ashram type, even to providing their own support. Certainly here I saw a Christian solidarity which has already made for itself a mark in the church and state which portends even a greater future.

On the platform were seated usually the highest head of the church—the Metropolitan, three bishops and members of the clergy, sometimes one, sometimes another officiating. Whether on the platform or mingling with the crowds outside the pavilion, it is obvious that the Metropolitan was alert even to the daily details and was the beating-heart of the convention. The bishops too manifested the very valuable traits of accessability and intimacy with the laity. As the Metropolitan and bishops, together with the clergymen at times, shared their dining table with us foreign guests, we learned to know and appreciate them in intimate and wholesome fellowship.

Except for the few guest speakers who delivered their messages in English which was translated, the medium of speech used was Malayalam, the mother tongue of that area. Of course to those of us coming from a distance this vernacular was not understood. But seated with us on benches brought in for guests were young people, mostly students knowing both Malayalam and English, ever ready to translate the substance of what was being said and done.

At the close of each session offering bags were quietly and quickly passed in each section and brought forward for consecration. By these contributions the expenses of the convention and other church interests are met.

Thus the long desired opportunity to attend this unique convention and to learn more about this renowned church body had come, at this their fifty-ninth annual assembly. The 1,000 mile rail and bus journey to Maramon and the week's stay there became more than a regular holiday—it was a feast for the soul as well.

I now feel assured that Thomas first brought the gospel to India. To mingle with this vigorous Christian body, the offspring of the converts of this apostle, vivifies anew to me the power of the gospel which Jesus not only himself proclaimed but enjoined its proclamation upon his disciples. Now, to view some of the astounding results of this gospel during the period 52 A.D. to 1954 I do rejoice that Thomas, one of the chosen twelve whom Jesus appointed and commissioned, responded to that great commission—"Go . . . Make disciples . . . I am with you." (Matt. 28:19-20)

The following story is the kind that can take place in almost any of our churches. True, situations and conditions will be different, but the principles are the same. Basic results are: love for God; concern for people; careful planning; hard work; prayer and persistence. Why not try some such effort in your church?— Charles E. Zunkel, executive secretary, Ministry and Home Missions.

WORKING AT THE LORD'S BUSINESS

A SUCCESSFUL program of attendance and evangelism came to a climax on Easter in the Hagerstown church, Md., when seventy-two new members were received into the fellowship and a new all-time high attendance record was set in the church school.

It all started last fall when the ministers, Brethren DeWitt L. Miller and Glenn C. Zug, began a systematic visitation of the membership. Approximately a third of the families were not at home when the ministers called but a written note was left at the door followed by a personal letter sent out yet that day.

The last two weeks before Ash Wednesday the deacons followed the ministers' visitation with an every-member enlistment program. Each member was visited by the deacons and their wives and asked to sign a recommitment card, promising to attend one service each Sunday, one service during Holy Week, to pray daily for the church and its ministry, to invite one person each week to the church services and to make an effort to win at least one person to Christ and the church during the Lenten period.

From visitors' cards signed at each service, the church school records, the results of the deacons' visits and many other sources, a new prospect list of 250 names was compiled. Each Sunday evening during the Lenten season trained teams of personal workers made two calls and reported the results to the ministers not later than the following morning. The ministers also continued an intensive program of calling upon those who responded favorably to the visits of the evangelistic callers and also upon all of the people whose names were on the prospect list.

A constant check was made on the attendance of these people at the church services through the use of a Ritual of Friendship at each morning service. This consisted of asking each worshiper to sign a card indicating whether he was a member or a visitor, identified with some other church within or without the community and whether or not he would like a visit from one of the ministers. These cards were dedicated at the altar along with the offering and carefully studied by the ministers the next morning.

During the Lenten season a class in the meaning and significance of church membership was held for boys and girls of junior and junior high age by the wives of the ministers while the ministers were conducting a similar class for young people and adults.

On Easter 862 people attended church school setting an all-time record and 933 attended the two identical worship services, the second highest record for church attendance. At the two identical worship services thirty-five people were received by transfer of letter and confession of faith. The lovely baptismal vesper service on Easter Sunday afternoon, made especially attractive by the new white robes provided by the deacons and their wives, brought thirty-seven men, women, boys and girls into the Christian fellowship.

Each new member was presented with a new member's packet containing material helpful to Christian growth, leaflets and pamphlets designed to acquaint thoroughly the new member with the history and beliefs of the Church of the Brethren, and a letter of welcome, a list of church and church school officers and other information which will serve to integrate him or her into the work and program of the local church. Adults who were received from a non-Brethren background are being presented with an introductory subscription to the Gospel Messenger.

On the Sunday evening following Easter 300 people gathered in the church social room for a reception honoring the new members. A host or hostess was appointed for each new member who extended a special invitation, accompanied the new member to the meeting and presented him or her to the entire group. After the new members had been properly introduced, the officials of the church and the church school were identified in connection with their various capacities. Delicious refreshments were served by the kitchen committee of the church and the meeting concluded with an hour of informal fellowship.

Long Beach—During January Sunday evening services were devoted to the study of city churches, as well as to that of foreign missions. Guest speakers at the men's brotherhood meetings have included Gene Warner, membership chairman for the Long Beach YMCA; Bro. Deeter; and Clarence Heckman. At the women's meetings Ira Frost gave a travelogue and Chaplain Frank Wood told of his work in this city. A number of the women attended the women's work spring rally at the Imperial Heights church. During the absence of Pastor Robert Richards, guest speakers at the morning worship services were Dr. Louis H. Evans, minister at large for the Presbyterian board, and David H. Studebaker, former pastor of the San Francisco church. Jack Brennecke, a member of our congregation and a student at La Verne College, gave a sermon at a Sunday evening service. At another evening service the play, Finger of God, was presented by the drama department of La Verne College. At another time the film, Unto These My Brethren, was used. A large group from our church was in attendance at the New Era banquet at La Verne. We joined with the other churches in observing the World Day of Prayer service in the First Christian church. At the three-hour Good Friday service in the First Presbyterian church, our pastor gave the message during the first hour. Communion services were observed on Thursday evening preceding Easter. Our all-church birthday dinner was held in March. There were two worship services on Easter morning with the special offering going into the parsonage fund. In the evening of the same day the sanctuary choir, directed by Robert C. Walker, presented the cantata, The Seven Last Words of Christ. During the Sunday-school hour, a membership class is being conducted by our pastors, Robert Richards and Frank Howell. On April 23 our church was host to the district deacons and their wives. The men's chorus presented a concert in our church on April 28.—Mrs. Homer E. Fike, Long Beach, Calif.

Western Canada

Irricana, First—At the beginning of the church year, our church commemorated our thirty-fifth anniversary with a Sunday dinner and an afternoon memorial service. We participated in a community Thanksgiving service. The ladies' aid of two churches sponsored the service in observance of World Day of Prayer. On April 3 baptismal services were held, followed by the love feast and communion service. On April 6 the district women's work rally was held with Mrs. Paul Halladay, president of the national women's work, as guest speaker. On Easter morning the young people had a sunrise service and breakfast. On Sunday evening the First and Second church choirs presented Easter music and the play, The Magdalene.—Mrs. A. P. Lepper, Irricana, Alta., Canada.

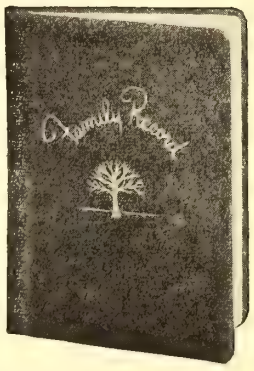
Colorado

Denver, Prince of Peace—Easter was a great day in the life of our church with 531 persons attending worship and 325 at church school. Since moving to the new church in the Athmar Park community last August, we have received twenty-six new members. We have had an average attendance of 250 each Sunday. It is a challenge and great opportunity for real Christian service in this new community. During the winter months we had family night meetings each Wednesday evening, beginning with a meal and then group meetings. Our pastor is teaching two membership classes each week. Lyall Sherred was licensed to the ministry. The first Sunday in Lent we began having two worship services each Sunday morning. Recently Elbert and Linda Flora, Earl and Shirley Heckman and John and Leah Zunkel were installed as deacons. Our love feast was held on Maundy Thursday. Mildred Shellenberger, Christian education chairman, has plans under way for a vacation Bible school to be held in July. The United Church Women of the Denver Council of Churches held a luncheon meeting at our church in May. Our mother and daughter banquet was held the last of April. Bro. Harl Russell recently met with us. Our women are organized with a homebuilders' group meeting once each month and an aid service which meets each week to quilt, make comforters and mend relief clothing.—Bessie Lucore, Denver, Colo.

First Grand Valley—Bro. Charles Dumond, Jr. of Hutchinson was our guest minister for the week following Easter. With a gift in memory of J. A. Lapp, our building fund was started recently. The CBYF assisted by the men's work group sponsored a banquet for the men and boys of our church community. The men's work group held a work day at church. At the final Cub Scout organization meeting, the den and pack organizations were completed. Since the beginning of the new church year, twenty-six members have been received by letter, five by baptism, four by confession of faith; one was reconsecrated; one awaits baptism.—Lewis Naylor, Grand Junction, Colo.

Middle Iowa



Dallas Center—Brother and Sister X. L. Coppock of McPherson, Kansas, were with us during Holy Week to assist in a series of evangelistic services. As a result of these meetings sixteen were baptized and one was reconsecrated. On Easter morning a sunrise service was followed by breakfast and the play, The Better Part. India, Ceylon and Pakistan were studied during our Sunday evening school of missions. Our annual birthday supper was held March 16, with the offering being used for the improvement of the church properties. Our communion service was held April 17 with almost 100 per cent of the families being represented. One of our young men, Karl Baldner, who has been elected to the ministry, completed his college work at McPherson in May and plans to enter Bethany Biblical Seminary in September.—Mrs. Alice M. Cooper, Dallas Center, Iowa.

Des Moines Valley—During the month of March we held a school of missions each Sunday evening under the direction of Sister Grace Jasper. For the last evening of the school Anna Warstler, a return missionary to India, was guest speaker. Bro. Don Rowe, regional secretary, held pre-Easter services at our church. Six new members were received by baptism and five by letter. At our regular quarterly council meeting on April 15, David Miller, Carl Hildreth and Harold Campbell were elected as deacons. Each spring our men's work department gives to each member of the congregation who cares to participate one dollar to be invested and returned with its increase in the fall.—Iva Reynolds, Ankeny, Iowa.

Northeastern Kansas

Lone Star—Brother Leland Wilson began pastoral work in our church last September. Four of our men had charge of the church service on Laymen's Sunday. Four foreign students from Kansas University visited our church and took part in a panel discussion with Bro. Ira N. H. Brammel as chairman. Our young people have been responsible for the new bulletin board and several road signs. They also

Northwestern Ohio

Fairview—One Sunday evening each month family night is observed with a fellowship supper at the church followed by a worship program which is sponsored by different classes and organizations within the church. Such programs included Martha Cocanower showing slides and telling of the work of the church in Puerto Rico; the primary department showing the adults how their own Sunday school is conducted; and the CBYF group explaining the Youth Action Plan. Bro. Glenn Crago of Toledo spoke recently concerning conscription and peace as it confronts us today. Several of our people attended the spring assembly at Bryan. The women's work group has made layettes and is sewing for the Bethany Hospital. Several of our women took part in the community World Day of Prayer service. The men's work group has insulated the ceiling of the church, put in a new fuel oil tank and erected a new bulletin board and road sign for the church. Several of our young people attended the recreation laboratory at Lima and the youth spring conference at Toledo. A new piano has been purchased through the memorial fund. Our pastor conducted devotional radio programs for a period of one week. Holy week services were held each night in the churches of the community. The cantata, The resurrection Morn, was presented on Easter. —Mrs. John Tomlonson, Matamora, Ohio.

Southern Ohio

Oakland—A school of missions was held for four Sunday nights during the month of January and a school of evangelism was held for the workers of the church. A district preaching mission, sponsored by eleven adjoining congregations, was held at our church March 14-21, with Bro. Olden Mitchell of Detroit, Mich., as guest speaker. Bro. R. H. Miller of Manchester College was guest speaker at the morning service on Feb. 6. He told of his visit to the India mission and to the Brethren Service projects in Europe. Fifteen persons were received by baptism and four by letter into the church. The regular business meeting was held on April 11. Delegates to Annual Conference are Pastor J. Earl Hostetter and Bro. Carl Stebbins. A committee was appointed to work on the sponsoring of a refugee family. We have renewed our 100% Messenger Club. A decision was made to buy new Brethren Hymnals for the church. The Manchester College a capella choir presented a program in our church on the evening of April 7.—Elvah E. Unger, Gettysburg, Ohio.

North Atlantic

Parker Ford—Our church held its love feast and communion the first Sunday of May. Bro. Alvin S. Alderfer is the pastor. On Easter three new members were received into our church by letter. In March of this year we reached our goal of $1,000 in paid pledges to the new Drexel Hill church. On March 13 two buses were chartered and a group from our church went to the Drexel Hill church to present the check to them. After serving a two-year trial period, Enos Fryer, Sr., and Ray Willauer and their wives were installed as deacons.—R. E. Kugler, Parker Ford, Pa.

Philadelphia, Drexel Hill—On Nov. 7 we celebrated our first anniversary with Bro. C. N. Ellis, president of Juniata College and a member of the General Brotherhood Board, delivering the morning message. During the ensuing week, Bro. Robert F. Eshlemen conducted evangelistic meetings. Six were baptized as a result of these meetings. During the month of January a school of missions was conducted on the church in the city. It was our intention to determine the place of a mission church in our community. Filmstrips, a panel discussion and guest speakers were a part of this program. As a result of special emphasis during the Lenten season, six were baptized into our church. Our church feels very much encouraged with our growth. The membership now stands at 81.—Rosaline P. Burns, Drexel Hill, Pa.

Eastern Pennsylvania

Mountville—Brother and Sister J. Mark Bushong and Brother and Sister Ray Enders were chosen as deacons. Bro. Norman K. Musser was re-appointed elder-in-charge for a three-year term, Bro. J. Harry Enders was elected to the eldership. Bro. Rufus McDannel conducted evangelistic services in our church. Eight members were baptized into the church as a result of these meetings. The school of missions held during the month of February used the film, A people Without Fear, an illustrated talk on mission work in Ecuador by Bro. Ben G. Bushong, a message on Africa missions by Sister Sara Shisler, and the missionary play, The Pill Bottle, by the junior high group. The missionary committee also presented a program in which Sister Clara Myer related the joys and problems of missionary work in Africa. At a council meeting approval was given for the appointment of a committee to arrange for the settling of a refugee family. On March 20 the Marietta depot chorus presented a song service. An informal family night program was held on March 27 with a fellowship supper and instrumental and vocal music. Bro. Graybill Hershey was guest speaker for the Holy Week services April 6-8. A service of worship and song was given by the junior and senior choirs on Easter evening. Bro. G. Wayne Glick was guest speaker at the father and son fellowship dinner on April 13. The women's work group has sent used clothing, shirts, layettes and knotted comforters for relief work. Through a contribution of the children in Bible school last summer, the church library has been reorganized and is now ready to begin the circulation of the new books. Eleven members have been received into the

From the pen of the author of Brethren Story Caravan comes this new heartwarming story of the experiences of one family in raising a heifer for relief. While this is a narrative of one family's experiences, it could be a composite of all those who provided heifers. Thousands of families throughout the United States co-operated in the Christian, humanitarian and far-reaching program that provides food —and hope—to so many needy families in other countries. This is indeed a story for entire family reading. Children will be delighted with it. Beautifully illustrated. Every church library should have a copy. 88 pages. Cloth. $1.75

Martinsburg—Bro. Henry Bucher of Elizabethtown College presented the message at the dedication service for the choir robes. Jack Padgett was speaker on Juniata College Day. At the father and son fellowship supper Bro. T. F. Henry was guest speaker and the picture, The Christian Family, was shown. Our pastor, Bro. Roy S. Forney, and two other persons attended the youth seminar at Washington, D. C. The district children's workers' banquet was held in our church. Sunday evening services during the month of January were given to a study of missions in India. One Sunday morning Bro. Stewart Kauffman spoke at our morning service. The Loyal Heroes Sunday-school class provides transportation for guests at the Cove Home who desire to attend our morning church services. The junior high fellowship has assumed the support of a school child at our Nigeria mission. Sisters L. K. Ziegler and Sara Replogle were speakers, respectively, in February and March at our monthly missionary meetings. Bro. R. W. Schlosser was in charge of our Bible institute on March 19-20. The men's work group served a meal to the guests at the Morrison Cove Home in March. Patricia Holsinger will be serving a year in B.V.S. On April 12 the women's Sunday-school classes held a combined meeting to hear missionaries, Mr. and Mrs. David Climenhaga of the Brethren in Christ mission in Rhodesia, Africa. Pictures were also used. Recently three persons were received by baptism and six by letter. Two others were baptized previously. The community cantata, The Triumph Hour, was presented in our church on Palm Sunday. Bro. Forney spoke at the community Easter sunrise service. We participated in the community Week of Prayer and Lenten services. April 17 was the third anniversary of the remodeled church building. Bro. Harold Bomberger of Westminster, Md., was guest speaker. Hollywood—We had a special offering for One Great Hour of Sharing. Bro. Davis Nolley brought our morning message on March 13. On March 20 Brother and Sister Howard Myers were with us in the interest of our missionary project. Six of our young people attended the CBYF banquet at the Manasses church on March 19. Bro. Paul Swigart worshiped with us on March 27 and brought the morning message. On Easter morning the Sunday school presented a special program.—Bertha M. Quann, Fredericksburg, Va.

First Virginia

Roanoke, Hollins Road—On Feb. 6 a talent and family night was held with a covered dish supper. Families presented musical numbers as a group; a girls' trio and boys' quartet sang several numbers; and children who play musical instruments also took part in the service. Our church has been guest in two different Negro churches in the city during the past two months. At these services our pastor, Bro. J. Weldon Myers, brought the message and the choir sang under the direction of Bobby Stamback. We also took part in the Poages Mill pre-Easter services. The men's work has been making repairs on the church and painting houses for a contractor who is a member of our congregation. The proceeds from the painting has been given towards our building fund. A play, The New Minister Arrives, is being presented by the ladies' aid. Guest speakers at our church recently have been Bro. William Lotz, Mr. C. Brookshire and a deputation team from Bridgewater College. Plans are already under way for our daily vacation Bible school in June.—Mrs. Betty J. Metz, Roanoke, Va.

COMING AND GOING

AMONG the many drawings by the Swiss artist, Eugene Burnand, there are two that have been frequently used in this publication. The one above illustrates the invitation to discipleship. Its title is "Come Unto Me." Jesus urged young and old to come: come and see; come and follow; come and take up your cross. To Zacchaeus he said, "Come down"; to Lazarus, "Come forth." He still invites us to come.

The other picture, almost as familiar, shows Jesus with one arm around a young man's shoulder and the other pointing into the distance. Its title is "Go Preach." Just as Jesus constantly invited disciples, so he constantly commissioned them. Go and sell your goods; go and tell what you have learned; go and teach all nations; go and sin no more.

As we recognize the claims of his kingdom upon our lives we discover that Jesus Christ confronts us in all our coming and going. We cannot escape him, we dare not refuse him. He bids us come and follow. He urges us to go and preach his gospel.

Important in Regeneration

There never has been a time in my knowledge when people try so hard to read water baptism out of the Bible or ride roughshod over this direct and important command of our Lord. To me baptism either plays an important part in regeneration and beginning the new life, or it is nothing.

In an article under Readers Write of April 2 by Edwin L. Chrisman, he speaks of Christ not using water baptism after the death of John the baptist. I do not find where Christ or the disciples ever baptized any unto John's baptism. But the fact that Jesus taught water baptism is plainly set forth in his conversation with Nicodemus and his definite instructions to his followers (Matt. 28:19-20). And in evidence of his followers carrying out his command, read Acts 2:38, where Peter in answer to the question, What must we do to be saved? said, "Repent and be baptized everyone of you," with a promise of the Holy Ghost to follow. Jesus told his disciples (John 14:26) that the Holy Spirit would bring all things to their remembrance that he had taught them. So in the experience of Philip and the eunuch, the Spirit brought water baptism to Philip as he very plainly demonstrated. As the Ethiopian was reading (Isa. 53) Philip preached unto him Christ and the eunuch asked to be baptized with water. And Paul and Silas remembered Christ's command when they baptized the jailor (Acts 16:33).

There is but one instance in the New Testament where the giving of the Holy Ghost preceded baptism and that was in the case of Cornelius, and that had a special significance (the admission of the Gentiles). On all other occasions baptism preceded the Holy Ghost.—Robert C. Wells, Scheller, Ill.

Reception of New Members

There is some question about the reception of members in our church. First, we ought to make it clear to unbelievers the meaning of repentance and faith, and then emphasize the truth that the Church of the Brethren follows the Scripture in baptizing penitent believers by trine immersion. We have a spiritual love for all believers, but if we have something scriptural to offer those who desire to be members of our fellowship, then we ought not to hesitate to deliver what we have received.

The Bible teaches that for man to be saved, he must believe and be baptized (Mark 16:16). To enter the kingdom of God, he must be born of water and of the Spirit (John 3:5). To be forgiven and receive the Holy Spirit, he must repent and be baptized (Acts 2:38). Baptism is the transliteration of the Greek word "baptizo," and has but one meaning, that is to dip, to submerge, to immerse. Rom. 6:5 tells us that we are planted in the likeness of his death, which means that we are put forward under the water, as Christ bowed his head and died. Rom. 6:4 tells us that we are buried with him by baptism and raised up from death to walk in newness of life. Now we have received this, dare we deliver anything else? I believe when the penitent believer is able phyiscally to be baptized, he cannot experience the complete reality of regeneration until he is immersed. If we could, why do we have the scriptures that I referred to?—Member of 1954 Standing Committee.

The Brethren and I

I was not born into the church nor have I always known the Brethren. My heritage, through natural birth, was that of another denomination. And even though I had lived for twenty years in a community where there was a large congregation of Brethren, I was hardly aware of the existence of the church until a few years ago when a little church house in our neighborhood was reopened as a mission point.

I sent my children to Sunday school there and I could see that they were being taught the great truths of the Bible. It wasn't long before I myself started to attend Sunday school and worship services there. It was through conviction of the Holy Spirit and by virtue of the new birth that I became a member of the Church of the Brethren and in this fellowship I have found my heart's desire.

I have sometimes wondered how much the Brethren of today really appreciate their heritage. I think I know just how those eight souls felt who founded the church; weary of man-made ordinances and the teachings of men in the apostate church, they sought to follow Christ according to the teachings of the New Tes-

Lonesome Valley

Wayne Zunkel

IT WAS a lonely road he walked, this daring Galilean. There was no one to show him the way. There were pointers, to be sure. Before him had been men with tremendous insights about God and his will. Around him were the disciples —eager, ready to try new things. And yet he was alone. The thinking and praying he did, the decisions he made, the suffering and sacrifice that were his were between him and God alone. He went through life and death without the assurance of friends. He went alone.

On the threshold of young manhood, his sense of calling was very clear. And there in the Jordan he was baptized by the prophet John. But the direction was not certain; the vision was blurred. So he left those about him and went into the wilderness alone to chart his course.

Out of the wilderness he came weeks later to lose his life in service. And he literally spent himself day after day amidst the press of the crowd and the call and clamor of voices. But at night, though tired from long hours of labor, he did not retire to seek the release of slumber. He sought instead the windswept brow of a hill. There in the cool of the night, under the silence of the stars, he went alone to feel the pulse-beats of Eternity, to catch the quiet voice of God.

He went to his home town. In clear and simple language he preached to them the impelling will of God. In unmistakable terms he told them what they were: comfortable and self-righteous. And there by his actions he alienated himself from those who knew him best and set out through what was ever to be a lonesome valley. Through life he went, teaching and healing. But in the stress and strain there was no person on whom to lean for guidance. It was a hard road and he had to walk it alone.

And after days of living and teaching, the choice came once again—hard this time. For such a life as he lived pulls us all up short. It judges us in a sense. Love so virile, so unmistakably clear, forces us to choose. God's will spelled out thus in human terms just cannot be evaded. And either we rise to meet the challenge or we counter and seek to stamp out this disturber of our complacent selves.

And so once again, as throughout his life, he faced an untrod path. Into the garden he went for strength and confirmation of the trail he'd chosen alone.

It was a lonely trail he faced. Those who had followed even at a short distance throughout his days of living were gone now. And he had to stand the test of his faith by himself.

It had been his battle, chosen by him, fought by him—regardless of what even his closest or dearest friends had said or done. When as a lad he had heard God's call, they had said, "Son, why do you treat us so?" And when a man, while spending himself in pouring out a life of love, there came to his ears their words: "He is beside himself." His parents, his closest friends, no one did he have to fall back on. It had to be his choice, arrived at by himself, carried out alone.

It was a lonely death he died upon that hill. On either side was a cross; he was surrounded by a crowd. Yet he died alone. They could not know his pain. They could not grasp his love. They could not feel the bond between his heart and God's. In those brief hours, men beheld the finale to a lifetime of love. But they were onlookers. He was the only participant. They stood and watched. It was his act and he was the sole actor. He died alone.

Jesus walked this lonesome valley.
He had to walk it by himself.
Nobody else could walk it for him.
He had to walk it by himself.

It is a lonesome road for us to, if we are to answer God's call. We do not always know what it means to be a Christian. And this happens to be one question which can not be answered by taking a poll of popular opinion. To be sure there have been others who have walked the path. But for us it is different somehow. We have new problems to face—new decisions to make. And if we are really in earnest sometimes it gets pretty hard and lonely.

Throughout the years have appeared men whose lives have been forever changed by a glimpse of God's dreams for mankind, men who have found themselves captured by an idea which meant that they would be forever alone. Their thought patterns were different, their desires different. Their lives were inescapably redirected by hopes and aspirations which were not shared by those around them.

And it is that way with every searching Christian in a day like ours. It is fine to read the New Testament seriously and to begin to live the things it talks about. But when friends begin to raise questions and words come sharp, then it becomes a more serious matter. The fascination wears off and we begin to think twice. Walking the road alone —if even for a short distance— is a sobering experience.

You must walk this lonesome valley.
You have to walk it by yourself.
Nobody else can walk it for you.
You have to walk it by yourself.

One of the glad rewards which awaits each Christian on life's road is Jesus' promise of plenty of trouble. It costs to be a Christian. It is a dangerous thing to love. It is a dangerous thing not to share current hatreds. And when his spirit comes ablaze in human flesh again, men are pulled up short and forced to choose between rising to meet the challenge or turning on it to crush it. For many miles we walk breathing the fragrant, scented air, the golden poppies at our feet. But one day, around a bend, the road gets rough. And in its path we see a cross. One day the choice comes hard. Either we will drift with the crowd or we will climb the long hard road of sonship, facing the judgment of our fellows alone.

You must go and stand your trial.

The Offered Life Is the Fruitful Life

Glen Weimer

GOD IS the measurer of life.
God continually examines the depths of the human conscience.
God opens every door of the heart and walks through each secret chamber of the soul.
God is the living searcher of hearts.
When a sense of shame overtakes the human spirit,
God is weighing life;
When the sense of peace pervades the soul,
God is confirming life and its course;
When a great urgency drives the will to embody the ideal,
God has moved into life.
When an unspeakable joy sings in one's spirit,
God is full communion with life, and life has found its center and rest in him.
God gives time that a person might prepare a highway in the heart and in the world for him.
God has made life—that living is a gathering of divine grace—and a letting go of the riches of God for the healing and blessing of humanity.
As the bowman relaxes the bowstring for a time—so life must become loose, open, receptive to the fresh insight, perspectives and powers that God would give.
A perpetually tensed life soon exhausts its powers.
There must be moments when all that we are—all that we have—all that we aspire after—all that we touch and handle is placed on the altar of God.
The offered life is the fruitful life—the unoffered life is fruitless.
O God, create in me the spirit that makes life's moments, life's strength of mind and body. life's responsibilities, life's joys, aspirations and hopes offerings to thee, in the spirit of Christ's life of self donation. Amen.

We Need More Than Assurances

OUR favorite cartoon character is J. Wesley Smith. He is the creation of Burr Shafer, who makes it possible for J. Wesley, the all-too-typical American, to appear at decisive moments in the world's history. For example, in a recent issue of the Saturday Review of Literature, J. Wesley Smith is the interviewing officer at Ellis Island on April 5, 1870, when a Jewish immigrant seeks admission to the United States. The immigrant's name is Salk, and J. Wesley asks, "What assurance do we have that your children will not become juvenile delinquents or a burden on the state?"

Instead of becoming a burden, Mr. Salk's son became the discoverer of the vaccine that at last is a match for polio. But present immigration laws seem to be designed to make it difficult, if not impossible, for any future Albert Einsteins or Jonas Salks to make their homes in this country even after the necessary assurances are in hand.

A Refugee Relief Act was passed in 1953, which called for the admission of 209,000 persons over a three-year period. With more than half the time gone only 15,000 persons had arrived, most of whom were relatives of U.S. citizens. Only a few more than a thousand refugees were admitted. Yet during this same period Church World Service, the National Catholic Welfare Conference and Lutheran Resettlement Service had provided assurances for at least 20,000 refugees. They would undoubtedly have had many more assurances on hand if there had been some "assurance" that they would be needed. It seemed evident, almost from the time the administration of the act was placed in unfriendly hands, that there was no real interest in doing the job that Congress had voted to do.

In April representatives of voluntary relief agencies met with Secretary of State Dulles to express their concern lest the firing of Edward J. Corsi after three months of effort on his part to get action for refugee admission would have a harmful effect on the program. The Secretary assured them that "greater attention would be given to the program in the future."

The trouble has been that far too many persons in our government are so security minded that they cannot trust the careful administration of our laws. They create new obstacles to the kind of "good neighbor policy" that once made us a great nation. They forget that nearly all of us are descendants of refugees and immigrants.

Church agencies were responsible for resettling a great majority of the refugees who came here under the displaced persons law. A thousand families in refugee camps are now awaiting placement in Brethren communities. We set a goal for ourselves last year—one family for each church. So far we have filed assurances for 152 families and ten persons have arrived. We should work harder to get the necessary assurances in order to indicate to refugees in Europe that we want to help, and to let government authorities know that we mean business.

Some Americans are afraid "to show hospitality to strangers" lest they entertain Communists unawares. We know the New Testament quotation reads differently, that by showing such Christian friendliness "some have entertained angels unawares."—K.M.

Sing Them Into the Kingdom

THE deputy city sergeant was tired of listening to the yelling and cursing of the five prisoners in the city jail. He told them, "If you can shout and curse like that, you can sing." From his home church he salvaged a few old hymnals and gave them to the prisoners. Before long they were harmonizing together on some of the more familiar hymns. And the sergeant soon reported, "You never hear them cursing any more."

Singing hymns in prison may have its hazards. One time a group of Juniata College students were conducting services at the county jail. Their leader asked for request numbers and one inmate promptly asked for Beulah Land. He said later it was because he liked to sing about "the land of corn and wine."

Singing in prison had a different result for Paul and Silas. Their midnight service in the jail at Philippi was no private prayer meeting. Fellow prisoners listened eagerly, amazed that men in such a predicament could sing. But that singing was only the beginning of events that were earth-shaking, to say the least, resulting in the conversion of the jailor's family and a happy breakfast around his table.

We miss a real opportunity if we sing hymns only in church. We are inclined to deplore the yelling and cursing we hear on every hand; but what efforts have we made, either in prison, on the street corner, in the park or around a picnic table, to turn that same noisy enthusiasm into praise for God? A few more earthquakes such as the one at Philippi might open our eyes to the opportunities for singing souls into God's kingdom..—K.M.

Following

Three Lions

Jesus' invitation, "Follow me," was given to every one who came to hear him or to be healed

Harold A. Bosley

THE hardest questions of all are the simplest and the most obvious ones, "What can it possibly mean to try to follow Jesus Christ today? How can we follow someone who lived and died so long ago?"

Such questions are honest, calling for a fair answer—one involving at least two steps. First, we need to look at the gospel records and find out, as best we can, why men followed him then, what they found in him and what he came to mean to them. Then, we will be in a position to determine what it might mean to us to try to follow him today.

Jesus asked and wanted men to follow him—that much is clear. The invitation to "follow me" is a refrain from all four gospels, "If any man would come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me." These words occur in this exact form four times and with slight alterations eight other times in the Gospels. Jesus addressed the invitation to everyone who came to hear him: the multitude, two or three fishermen working in their boats, a tax collector on the street corner of a town, critics and questioners, even his enemies. The invitation itself startled no one. Everyone who heard it from Jesus of Nazareth had heard it from dozens of other teachers, prophets and would-be messiahs with which that period abounded. Undoubtedly the cynics in the crowd, remembering their disallusionment with other leaders, thought, "Here we go again!" when they heard it from him. As nearly as we can determine, men accepted his invitation and followed him then for a variety of reasons—some shallow, some profound.

Some followed him because they were curious about what might happen. He seemed intense and popular enough to be the center of interesting if not exciting events. Why not tag along and see what happens? A few may have been revolutionists in search of any likely leader and they thought he might be it. Some followed him because they believed the Messiah was to come soon, and he was being hailed by his friends as the Messiah. Some were ill and followed him because he was reputed to be a healer. Some were hungry and followed him because he was reported to have fed a multitude. Some followed him because they were lonely and he seemed to have time for all who needed him. Some were spiritually hungry and wanted the bread and water of eternal life of which he spoke so frequently. Some were lost and wanted God—and he seemed to know and to love God.

What did they find in him, these people who sought him out for so many different reasons? Many different things to be sure, but basically these.

They found a man at peace with God and with God's will for his life. He felt called of God to his work and he had complete faith in God and in the work.

They found a man at peace with other men—friend, critic and enemy alike. He neither looked down on sinners and outcasts, nor did he look up to the holders of prestige and privilege and power. He heard the crying need for God which existed in all men and he set himself to answering it. He went among them with the joyous news that he was giving them what they needed above all else: a new relationship with God and a place in the kingdom of God.

They found a man at peace with himself. How could it be otherwise in one who had found peace with God and man? He was inwardly poised and ready for "the slings and arrows of an outrageous fortune," for the tricky questions of clever men, for the cruel malice of those who hated him, for the honest blunderings of his sincere disciples, for the shallow adoration of the crowd who mistakenly thought he was doing one thing when he was actually doing another. He was so much at peace with himself that he never learned to hate his enemies and he never ceased loving all men.

They found a man who was not buying their ideas about what he ought to say and to do. His purpose was his life as well as his message and he expected his followers to make it their message, too. They may have come to him for many different reasons, but he had just one reason for pressing his invitation upon them. He wanted helpers in the task of proclaiming the kingdom of God and of preparing men for life in it. If they were not interested in that task, they were not interested in him and in his invitation. He gave them a choice, a hard choice, and he knew it, in the invitation. That is why the word deny is the pivot on which the invitation turns. He knew that no man could hope to follow him without learning its bitter meaning.

True enough, when the multitudes understood what his invitation meant, they disappeared like the early morning mist before the rays of the rising sun, but some proved true and remained to follow him. And it is to these we must turn for answer as to what it meant to follow him faithfully and courageously and throughout life.

They have given us a full answer in the New Testament which they wrote, in the faith which they had fashioned and the church which they started. These tremendous realities lie all around us today and are ours for the winning. The faithful followers of our Lord say, "In following Jesus, we found a new meaning for life and death alike. He made God live for us. As we followed him, the love of God, the will of God, God's claim on our life became very real to us. We tried to do what he wanted us to do: we gave our lives to the proclamation of the gospel. We found in doing this a purpose for living and the strength to pursue that purpose to the very end. The most amazing thing about the entire journey in his train was our awareness of his presence, his love and leadership to and beyond the fact of death itself. We found him to be the Lord of life and death alike."

The mystic in me cries, "Settle for that! What more do you need in order to follow him?" And the rationalist answers, "Tell me how to do it, and I'll follow him as devotedly as I can!" If we are serious about this, the way to do it is straightforward and serious. We begin by getting acquainted with Jesus Christ, with his mind, his spirit, his life, his teachings. No man can do this for us, nor can we do it for another. Each man must do it for himself and each generation for itself. If we have the will to learn about him, we can do so readily enough. It is easier to learn about him than to take seriously the great guiding ideas we will find there that speak to us and to all generations.

Domestic decisions and internal events affect other nations; this is—

What Every Foreigner Knows About America

Ernest W. Lefever

• Three years ago the United States Congress passed an Immigration and Nationality Act over President Truman's veto. While correcting some injustices in our former immigration laws, the new act perpetuates the national origins quota system which discriminates against persons from Southern Europe and Asia who would like to migrate to America. It imposes unjustified restrictions on aliens and naturalized citizens residing in this country.

• Last year President Eisenhower accepted the report of his Tariff Commission and raised the tariff on imported watches up to fifty per cent to protect the American watch industry against Swiss competition and, explained the President, to preserve a pool of skilled precision instrument workmen in this country required in the event of war.

• On October 4, 1954, in Baltimore, Maryland, two white students from Southern High School walked down the street carrying a sign four feet square with these words on it: "Southern Don't Want Negroes." Another boy carried a placard with a picture of a big foot on it together with these words: "Kick Em Out." These sign carriers were three of 2,000 white students demonstrating against the integration of Negro students into their high school. School officials had ordered the integration in compliance with the unanimous Supreme Court decision against racial segregation in public education.

Beyond the Water's Edge

These three stories illustrate a significant act which every well-informed foreigner knows about America—most of our domestic decisions and internal events have a tremendous effect on millions of persons beyond our water's edge. Because of preponderant military, political and economic power in the free world almost everything we do or fail to do here at home affects vitally the morale, welfare and security of other peoples throughout the world. The old distinction between domestic and foreign policy doesn't make sense in our modern technically interdependent world.

Let us return to the three stories we started with, stories which illustrate America's negative influence on peoples beyond our borders.

Few things in recent years have hurt us abroad as badly as the restrictive Immigration and Nationality Act of 1952. In the world of 1952, just as today, there were millions of refugees living in makeshift camps or wandering over the face of the earth. Many of them looked to America with hope. But, alas, the Congress decided to make it more difficult for these homeless people to start a new life in the New World. In the name of security at home we lost friends and alienated peoples abroad.

The National Council of Churches and several Protestant denominations joined with Jewish groups in protesting the racial discrimination and the second-class citizenship for naturalized Americans implicit in the new law. Perhaps it was a guilty conscience or perhaps it was the pressure from church groups which induced Congress in the following year to pass the Refugee Relief Act, providing for the admission of 209,000 nonquota immigrants. This act, itself restrictive, has only partially undone the damage of the overall immigration law, which still stands unchanged. Further, only a small percentage of the persons eligible under the refugee act have actually been admitted to the United States and the act is due to expire next year.

As long as the discriminatory provisions of the 1952 law are on the books the moral position of America as the leader of the free world is compromised.

The Swiss Watch Case

In January of this year President Eisenhower called for a three-year extension of the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act which gives him the authority to stimulate world trade by adjusting tariffs downward. There is a good chance that the Congress will give him most of what he wants. The President in his public utterances has repeatedly taken the low tariff position, often against serious opposition in his own party.

Last year the President faced a difficult problem and made a strange decision. The American watch manufacturers were having a rough time standing up to the competition of Swiss producers. Even though the domestic industry already had some tariff protection they wanted more and persuaded the Tariff Commission to support their demand for higher duties on Swiss watches. On the other side was Switzerland, a small, friendly country whose economy was considerably dependent on watch exports to America. The President had to decide between the demands of the domestic watch industry and the welfare of the Swiss economy. He decided in favor of the American watch manufacturers.

Said the New York Times: "As for the Swiss, they may be forgiven for feeling that, as one spokesman has put it, this represents 'the breaking of a bargain that has stood for eighteen years.' . . . The fact that this decision strikes a serious blow at the basic economy of a friendly country is one of the things that leaves the President's action open to serious criticism, but it is not the only one. No less important is the circumstance that it comes as the culmination of a series of incidents that have contributed to world skepticism as to our economic policies."

The President said that his decision was based in part on considerations of national defense—the need for skilled American precision instrument workers. Everyone recognizes this need, but there are various ways of meeting it without injuring the economy of a friendly power. Conscientious Americans may take different positions on this issue, but they all must agree that so-called domestic decisions such as tariff rates do in fact have a tremendous effect for good or ill on peoples in other lands.

Religious News Service

The American Economy and the World Economy

When our government raises the tariff on Swiss watches, it is saying that the prosperity of one American industry is more important than the economic health of Switzerland. Tariffs against German pottery, Danish cheese and Japanese tuna have the same adverse effect on economies abroad.

But tariff decisions are not the only domestic decisions which affect other peoples. Even more important is what we do or do not do about maintaining a productive, expanding and full-employment economy at home. By the sheer weight of our economic power we export our economic health or sickness. We export our depressions and our periods of inflation. Shortly after World War II our big loan to Great Britain was seriously reduced, not in dollars but in actual value, by inflation in America. The British people received only about three quarters of what they were entitled to under the loan agreement.

The 1953 National Study Conference on the Churches and World Order, held in Cleveland, said this: "The maintenance of prosperity and increasing productivity in the United States is one of the greatest contributions to world economic stability and development that our nation can make." No wonder our allies became apprehensive last year when American unemployment climbed to more than 3,500,000 and our productivity decreased. It is important to promote international trade, to make grants and loans to needy countries, but it is even more important to maintain a healthy and expanding economy at home.

The Supreme Court and the Baltimore Story

Observers in Asia and Africa, and in Europe for that matter, have told us a thousand times that nothing in recent years has raised our moral stature in the eyes of people abroad more than the Supreme Court decision against segregation in public schools. This positive reaffirmation of the American creed is, of course, tarnished by the reality of existing racial discrimination and segregation in the school, the church and society both North and South.

The Baltimore story cited above was probably front-page news in Asia and Africa. American lynchings and race riots, however infrequently they occur, are played up in the foreign press and are vastly exaggerated by Radio Moscow. The darker-skinned peoples of the world who have suffered under white exploitation cannot tolerate racial bigotry in South Africa, South Carolina or South Chicago. America is still a symbol of democracy and freedom, but every flagrant violation of what we stand for weakens us at home and discredits us abroad. Conversely, our moral stature rises when we take a step in the right direction.

Where You Come In

There is no neat dividing line at the water's edge. Our domestic decisions have global reverberations. We Americans live in a big glass house and the peoples of the world are watching us. And well they might, for whatever we do is bound to affect them, for good or ill. A bill signed by the President may throw the Danish economy into a tailspin or an act of Congress may give new hope to a hundred thousand refugees.

We, the American people, probably have more influence over human destiny than any other people in modern history. Since America is a democracy our top decision makers must take seriously the will of the people in whose name they act and from whom they draw their power.

America has a responsibility commensurate with her power. She is accountable to her own people, to the world community and to a God who plays no favorites among the children of men. As citizens and as Christians this responsibility is our responsibility. And we cannot duck it. When our country fails it is we who fail, not some vague apparatus in Washington we call the government. When our government acts wisely it represents the wisdom of us all. We are responsible for the decisions of our country and for the consequences of those decisions on our neighbor next door, on a dairy farmer in Denmark or on a peasant in India.

The two high school boys carrying the ungrammatical sign in Baltimore last October were more influential than they ever realized. They had an effect not only in Baltimore, in Maryland and in the United States, but on the peoples of Asia and Africa who are trying to decide between Western democracy and Soviet communism. You and I are involved in this world struggle every bit as much as the two Baltimore boys because our private attitudes and our conduct in our community written large and translated into political decisions determine, for good or ill, the influence of America in the world.

The issues of war and peace, of tyranny and freedom, are made by the governments of nations, particularly the superpowers like the Soviet Union and the United States. As American citizens we cannot escape the awesome responsibility which falls upon us. Lincoln said that "no man is good enough to rule over other men, but some have to." No nation is good enough or wise enough to have the power over the destiny of other peoples that America has today, but that lot has fallen to us. In the daily decisions of our common life, but most of all in our political decisions, we help to decide the momentous questions which face our generation.

Lonesome Valley

You have to stand it by yourself. Nobody else can stand it for you. You have to stand it . . . by yourself.

There is yet one truth which we must not overlook, however. And that is that no matter how lonely the road there is a profound sense in which we are never really alone. For with us, no matter how dark the night, is our God imparting strength for every task.

Though at times the task seems hopeless, we know that our efforts are not in vain; that in time—in God's good time—the seeds we have been scattering will burst and bring forth harvest.

George Bernard Shaw has said it in a wonderful way. He has written the story of Joan of Arc into a play which he has called Saint Joan. And upon her lips as she is about to be burned at the stake he has put these words, addressed to her accusers:

"I see now that the loneliness of God is his strength: what would he be if he listened to your jealous little counsels? Well, my loneliness shall be my strength too; it is better to be alone with God: his friendship will not fail me, nor his counsel, nor his love. In his strength I will dare, and dare, and dare until I die. I will go out now to the common people, and let the love in their eyes comfort me for the hate in yours. You will all be glad to see me burnt; but if I go through the fire I shall go through it to their hearts for ever and ever. And so, God be with me!"

And so is it always for those who would see the carrying out of God's will! Though it is a lonesome valley, yet we are never alone. And though the end seems far from view, there in God's good time awaits victory for those who travel the long, hard road alone with him.

Dear Counselor,

Should every family have a will? My wife and I, forty-two and forty, have three minor children. We own a farm and other property. I have a $10,000 life insurance policy.

We are a healthy happy Christian family. We hold most of our property jointly. Why should we need a will?

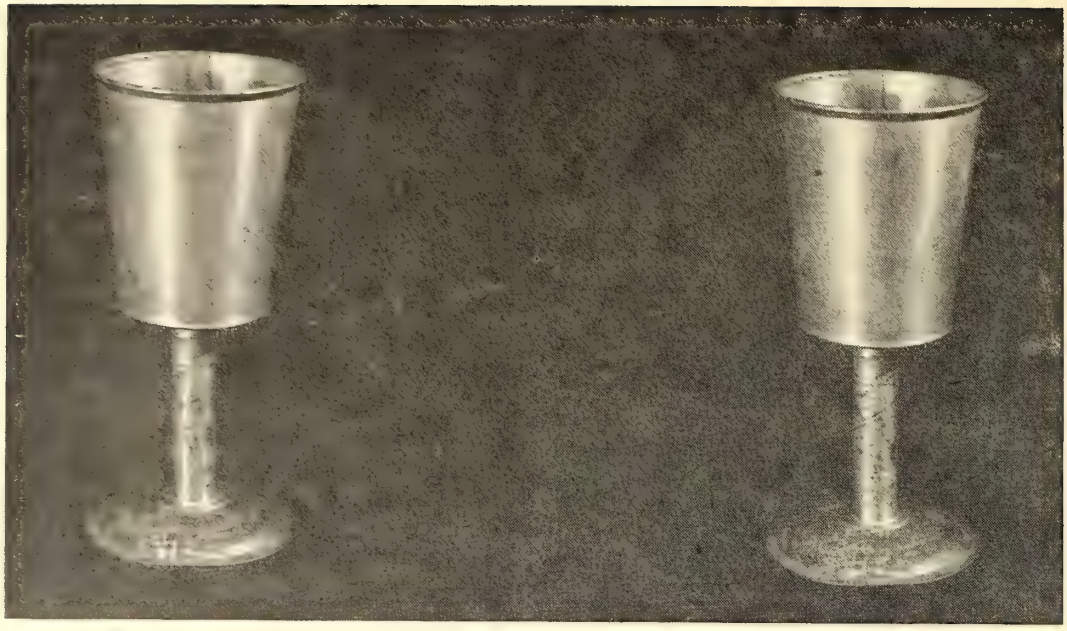
An Interested Husband

Dear Friend,

You are a wealthy man! Health, happiness, Christian faith, wife, children, farm, insurance and other assets! You are wise to consider and plan against the day when death will take you and your wife. Will your property be distributed as you wish?

Joint ownership of property is usually a good way to hold a farm, residence, bank account, car and other modest assests. By joint ownership, title at the death of the first party passes directly to the other. The delay and expense of probate court action is avoided.

In joint ownership you assume, at least hope, that the surviving spouse will be well and mentally able to plan business matters including the making of a will. But have you considered: (1) If you should go first is your wife experienced in business matters? Would she then make a legal will to protect your mutual desires? (2) What if a common disaster took both of your lives? Would you want anything to say about the care of minor children? This guardian would need to make annual reports to the court until the last child was of age. Then would you want your children as each arrived at age twenty-one to come into full possession of his share? Do you want to name the executor and guardian or have the court to act?



Many people live to a ripe old age without wills just as some people carry no insurance and are lucky not to have a fire. But death will come sooner or later. We think you and your wife each need a will. True the will of the first to go will be noneffective in respect to your jointly owned property, but the survivor's will is most important. It will then convey, carry out plans which you made together.

Your wills need to be reviewed and revised from time to time. Conditions which make revision wise or necessary include the maturity of children, a death in the family, a change of residence, a marked change in value of assets and new ideas for the distribution of your possessions.

Some ideas for you to consider include: (1) Should you not will something to the institutions of the church? Would this not be a part of your stewardship program as is giving from your current income? (2) Provision for appointment of a trustee to look after business affairs until your descendants are of an age to take over could be a part of your will. (3) If your estate grows in size so that a federal estate tax will be assessed at death it may not be wise to hold it all in joint ownership. (4) Your pastor may have good counsel as to financial matters in the family. A good Christian lawyer in drawing your will can answer technical questions.

Your will can be an expression of your Christian testimony.

These communion cups now in the Brothersvalley church, Pennsylvania, were made at Ephrata before 1765 and carried by the elders all over the early American colonies

The Stony Creek Communion Cups

H. Austin Cooper

THE Brothersvalley congregation was organized in the summer of 1762. It was located in the tabletop plateau of the Allegheny Mountains of Pennsylvania, in the present bounds of Somerset County, between the Allegheny and Laurel Hill mountains. Into this rich glades valley the early Brethren came from Antrim Township of present Franklin County, Pennsylvania. They called the area Stony Creek, named after the creek that flowed from Pious Spring located in the center of Berlin. The ridge on which Berlin is located was then known as "Dry Ridge," the very opposite name for the ridge, for it was merely a natural dam for the glades and swampland out of which Pious Spring drained the crystal clear mountain waters down the rough and stony mountainside where it united its waters, at the present site of Johnstown, with the Conemaugh River.

As early as the summer of 1758 Col. John Forbes with a vanguard of scouts came into the area to plot a road over the rough mountain trails to Ft. Duquesne, now Pittsburgh. This was in the interest of the Penn Company seeking a trade route with the Indians and trappers on the Ohio. About thirty miles to the south in the same general area Col. George Washington and Col. William Byrd were cutting a similar road out of the wilderness for the Virginia Land Company.

When Col. Forbes' scouts came into the area they found that the valley was already called Brueders Thal or Brothers Valley, named after the Brethren who addressed each other as "brother." As early as 1740 there were Brethren living on the Stony Creek, and the following four families were there as early as 1744: George Newmoyer; Henry Rhoads, Sr.; Philip Aswald; Philip Kimmel. Peter Lehman, the first Brethren child born west of the Alleghenies, went at the age of seventeen to Ephrata. He was educated by Conrad Beissel and became an important figure in the cloisters. He was a bricklayer and a builder. About 1787 he was sent to Snowberger's farm, near Waynesboro, Pennsylvania, and began the Snowhill Cloisters, being its first superintendent.

In the summer of 1762, Elder George Adam Martin left Antrim Township with a large company of German Baptist Brethren and settled in the Stony Creek area of Brothers Valley of the Glades. Elder Martin had just been recently released from the Brethren fellowship at the Bermudian and Conococheague churches. He had embraced the Seventh Day Baptist beliefs, except for child or infant baptism, and single foot-washing. However, he preached in as many German Baptist churches as he did in the Seventh Day churches. He never fully gave up his Brethren doctrines and preaching until the day he died on April 24, 1794.

Martin was a powerful man, both physically and spiritually. He was one of the outstanding preachers of colonial America.He preached as far north as Maine, along the Monocacy in Maryland, and down the Valley of Virginia, in North Carolina, Georgia, Tennessee, Kentucky, as early as 1765. Elder Martin never rode horseback for he believed it was unscriptural for the Brethren to ride. He quoted the passage in Isaiah where "the princes ride and the people walk." This was above his station to be placed on a level above his brethren. When he preached to the Brethren in the wilderness country he held "a feet washing" and a love feast.

The Stony Creek Communion cups were made at Ephrata sometime before his missionary journey of 1765. Elder Martin carried these communion cups "to all the Brethren everywhere scattered in the wilderness." As early as 1765, these cups were taken south by Martin as he administered the communion to the Brethren in Virginia at Strasburg and New Market, and to the south. In 1785, he again went into Virginia and thence to the Beaver Run church, east of present Burlington, W. Va. Brethren from Pennsylvania, Ohio, Kentucky, Virginia, the Carolinas and Tennessee, gathered for the great occasion where they worshiped together and visited old friends and relatives.

In the summer of 1774, Annual Meeting was held in the old Stony Creek church. This building was our first church, built in the summer of 1771 (it was torn down in 1928). The year 1774 was an eventful one for the Brethren in the Glades of the Stony Creek. There was the "big disturbance of 1774" in the wilderness Brethren community. This year the Brothers Valley militia was organized by the English as a protection against the Indian attacks. Four of the Brethren young men joined the militia, then organized at Brotherton and went to "the Little Fort on the Stony Creek." Then they went to Ft. Bedford and completed their training. All four later served with Washington's army at Valley Forge. This caused such a turbulent scene in the church that Brethren Alexander Mack, Jr. and John Staub were sent to the Stony Creek "to put down the big disturbance" there. This act of the young Brethren was in direct opposition to the Brethren principles of nonconformity and was considered important enough for an Annual Meeting to be held here.

This church was perhaps the very first place where the church was called "Church of the Brethren" and it was considered one of the most important of our early churches as it was the springboard for most of the western and southern movements into the wilderness.

There was another important factor for the calling of our first Annual Meeting here (we have had eleven here). Elder George Adam Martin had come back into the area and settled permanently. He took up one tract of land in 1769 and another in 1771. On the latter he settled to live out his days in the Stony Creek country. This same year, 1774, Martin began his more vigorous preaching and especially the writing of his book Christliche Bibliothek, the Christian's Bible Dictionary.

This writer just recently completed a translation and biography of Martin and his book, which was printed on the Ephrata Press in 1792 and was the reason for another Annual Meeting in the church here.

Remade–Not Just Repaired

Kirby Page

CONVERSION in the New Testament is upheaval, turning things upside down, finding a new outlook, maintaining new relationships and experiencing new joys. Paul says bluntly that when a person is in union with Christ he is a new creation. He has been remade, not just repaired. He was dead and has been brought to life. Conversion brings a basically transformed spirit. Self is removed from the center; God becomes foremost. Man's heaviest responsibility is to find out what God wants done and give oneself to the doing of it. The change is as profound as the difference between "my will" and "thy will." Nevertheless becomes the decisive word; I crave this, nevertheless I will do that. Conformity to this world is rejected in favor of the way of Christ, the way of doing the will of God in the face of any risk and at any cost; the way of compassionate concern and loving service; the way which leads to deliverance from fear of death, from fear of privation, from fear of defeat, and therefore from fear of enemies. Conversion in the New Testament is upheaval, turning things upside down, finding a new outlook, maintaining a new relationship, experiencing new joys.

Conversion means all this today. When a person is in union with Christ he is a new creation. Above everything else he wants to know what is right in the sight of God. He longs for wisdom and power to please his Father. He is filled with the spirit of loving kindness and is hungry for fellowship. He seeks first the kingdom of God, the establishment of right relations between God and man and between man and man. Christlikeness is his aim in character and outlook on life. He would rather be at home in the invisible world of the spirit than to acquire comfort and fame and worldly power. He is now living in eternity in the midst of time, and he also has no fear of moving through death from one room to another room in his Father's home.

A third thing happened in this year that was reason for the "Big Meeting." A large number left the Martin group in the old Stony Creek church; they went a mile south and held their meetings in the mill of John Groner. That same year they moved to the home newly built by John Groner a half mile still farther south. They met in this meetinghouse until 1790, when the "largest house in the Stony Creek" was built by Groner. This they called the Big Glades church. The impressive house is still occupied and is owned by Richard Croner, who is most co-operative with the Brethren in showing people through it.

In 1790 another Annual Meeting is said to have been held here. Tradition has it that the communion cups were brought from the Old Stony Creek church by John Groner and were used in both the early Groner meetinghouse and the new meetinghouse of 1790. Annual Meeting of 1821 was again held in this Big Glades church. This writer recently found the membership records of this church and wrote it into the present membership records. In 1785 another Annual Meeting was held four miles south in the Michael Beuchley meetinghouse. This was the forerunner of the present Berlin congregation. Why the meeting was held there is not known at this time.

On February 11, 1955, our oldest member Sister Emma Rayman was one hundred years old. She told this writer a year ago many tales about these old cups and remarked that when she was a girl she drank from these old cups when Elder Adam Snyder brought them into her congregation, the Middle Creek church, which had originally been a part of the Brothersvalley congregation. She said that she used to attend the "big meetings in the old Glades church" (meaning evangelistic meetings) with her father and grandfather. This old meetinghouse still has the folding doors that can be moved back to form the two big rooms into one large church room.

These cups are sacred to our oldest members and if they could talk could tell of some wonderful spiritual feasts with the brethren who are sitting down at "the feast of the Lamb" ever to dwell with him in the eternal church.

Meditation in a Garden

May Allread Baker

LATE April and May are very pleasant months to me, for this is when I plant my garden. This year, my heart was sad, for I had recently lost two very dear friends. One was a member of my own church whom I had known and loved for more than twenty years. The other was a fellow writer, the wife of a local clergyman.

But in the planting of my garden I found healing. As I put into the dark earth the small seeds, destined for renewal into flowers and vegetables, I realized that there is no death—but only change.

Where does the miracle, the marvel of color and beauty and fragrance come from in each dry seed and brown bulb? Here are blue, wine-red, smoky-lavender glads, and a new type which has a spicy fragrance.

These dull brown tubers are dahlias, and I must plant them down deep in the good earth. Some of the tubers are Commodore dahlias which are lemon-yellow in color, and as large as bread-and-butter plates. Others are the smaller, ball type, in shades of tawny-gold, deep purple and fiery red.

But who could know, or even dream of the beauty yet to be unfolded in God's good time, and with the aid of his sunshine and rain?

I have many other flowers and vines — lillies, roses, peonies, hardy phlox, to name only a few. But in my garden I plant mostly those old-fashioned favorites which grow from seed, marigolds, zinnias, nasturtiums and silky-petaled asters. All are beautiful in their own particular fashion.

But all this beauty and fragrance and blaze of color is to come a little later in the season. Just now I am busy with the planting. Chuck, the brown thrasher, sings to cheer me from the tiptop of a neighboring tree. Chuck fears neither man nor beast and will come within arm's length to take one's offering of crumbs. Often he will stuff them down the throats of the waiting "small fry." For Chuck rears the first brood of nestlings while Mrs. Chuck sits on the second clutch of eggs. This is the fourth season these large, reddish-brown birds with the speckled breasts have nested on the premises. Chuck earned his name by his habit of screaming, "Chuck! chuck!" if one of the cats ventured too near his special territory.

My faithful old collie, Lassie, passed away, but the new black-and white puppy, Pansy, frolics near as I plant my garden. I shall have to put up stakes around the bulbs to keep her from digging them out, but I am more than repaid for these extra tasks by her company and affection. And next year, the small, eager creature will be older and wiser.

Over on the west side of the garden, the onions my husband planted show their green tops; radishes are peeping through; lettuce is light green. The spinach is out in leaf, and the clumps of parsely are as curly as moss.

In their way, vegetables, too, are beautiful. The purple globe of an eggplant, the white and mauve of a turnip, a cabbage pearled with dew, the luscious red of a tomato and the graceful curve of a squash—all delight the eye. And is there anything more delicate and dainty than the feathery plumes of asparagus?

I, too, love to walk in the garden in the cool of the day.

Slim, young poplars lift their heads as if standing on tiptoe to reach the first, few stars; a new moon is rising in the east; a vesper sparrow sings his hymn in the purple twilight, and a cardinal whistles from the old orchard.

From his storehouse of time God has given us another day. I have tried to use it wisely and well, though conscious of all my shortcomings. Best of all, in the renewal of life about me and in the planting of seeds, I have found new faith and comfort.

Nothing is wasted; all things work together in beauty and usefulness. In a fairer garden we shall live and bloom again.

"A Peculiar People"

Luther A. Weigle

AS A boy I wondered why the Bible calls God's chosen people "a peculiar people" (Deut. 14:2). My wonder was not lessened by the fact that the same designation is applied by Paul and by Peter to those who are redeemed by our Savior Jesus Christ (Titus 1:14; 1 Peter 2:9). It puzzled me, because in conversation the word peculiar was used in the sense of odd or eccentric.

But in 1611 the word had not yet gotten that meaning. It meant "one's very own," and was applied to private personal property as distinguished from what is owned in common.

The same Hebrew word which is translated "peculiar" in Deut. 14:2 and 26:18 is translated "special" in Deut. 7:6, which reads: "For thou art an holy people unto the Lord thy God: the Lord thy God hath chosen thee to be a special people unto himself, above all people that are upon the face of the earth." The word is segullah. The King James Version elsewhere translates it as "peculiar treasure" (Ex. 19:5; Psa. 135:4; Eccles. 2:8); "own proper good" (1 Chron. 29:3); and "jewels" (Mal. 3:17).

The revised versions have given up the use of the word peculiar in these passages. They use "treasure" in 1 Chronicles and Ecclesiastes; but elsewhere use "my (or his or God's) own possession" as the translation of segullah. The phrase a peculiar people has disappeared. In Titus 2:13-14 the Revised Standard Version reads: "Awaiting our blessed hope, the appearing of the glory of our God and Savior Jesus Christ, who gave himself for us to redeem us from all iniquity and to purify for himself a people of his own who are zealous for good deeds." In 1 Peter 2:9 it reads: "You are a chosen race, a royal priesthood, a holy nation, God's own people, that you may declare the wonderful deeds of him who called you out of darkness into his marvelous light."

America's Spiritual Recovery. Edward L. R. Elson. Fleming H. Revel, 1954. 189 pages. $2.50.

President Eisenhower's pastor, Dr. Edward Elson, has become one of our outstanding spiritual leaders. Close to the heart of national affairs as he is, he can see the state of the church at the heart of our national life.

This book is an eloquent testimony to the power of religious faith in the history of our country and a great plea for the reconstruction of our national idealism on the sure foundation of Christianity. This is a book to make laymen think, to deepen our confidence in an evangelistic church and to stretch our spiritual horizons.

Dr. Elson believes we are in the midst of a great spiritual rebirth in this nation, and that those who are inactive or out of touch with God are failing even to be good citizens.

A book to deepen faith and put steel in your will.—Edward K. Ziegler.

Otherworldliness and the New Testament. Amos N. Wilder. Harpers, 1954. 124 pages. $1.75.

With scholarship and charm the author, a well-known and able New Testament scholar, demonstrates the utter realism of New Testament religion, cutting incisively down through the various types of unrealism ("otherworldliness") of our day. Every informed minister and Christian thinker will find here a delightful and profitable stimulus. It cuts away all escapism from modern Christian thought and helps the strong message of historical Christianity stand forth in clearer and more convincing relief. A positive title, like The Realism of the New Testament would be more descriptive of the impact of this very fine little book. For us who take the New Testament as our rule of faith and practice this book does much to help evaluate historic faith, analyze the modern isms and schools of thought (neo-orthodoxy included) and come out with the abiding sameness and realism of New Testament Christianity.—Chalmer E. Faw, Chicago, Ill.

Great Preaching today. Alton M. Motter. Harpers, 1955. 255 pages. $3.00.

We have here twenty-five sermons delivered at the renowned Chicago Evening Club by some of the ablest preachers living in America and England. To call the roll of such men as Henry H. Crane, Frank Laubach, Robert J. McCracken, Reinhold Niebuhr, Samuel Shoemaker, Paul Scherer, Ralph Sockman, Elton Trueblood, Leslie Weatherhead and our own Paul M. Robinson is to make the book inviting. A great stimulus to better preaching of the Word.—Charles E. Zunkel.

Bridgewater College

Former President Paul H. Bowman of the class of 1910 was awarded the "Alumnus of the Year" plaque at the seventy-fifth anniversary alumni banquet on June 4. Supported by an illustrious record as president of two colleges, moderator of the Church of the Brethren on three occasions and numerous other contributions to church and community, his latest contribution is a history of the educational effort of the Brethren in the Southeastern Region with special reference to Bridgewater College. This history is in connection with the diamond jubilee celebration and will be published in the fall.

Colgate W. Darden, Jr., president of the University of Virginia and former governor of Virginia, was the commencement speaker on June 6 when fifty-five seniors graduated. Bro. Warren D. Bowman was the baccalaureate speaker on June 5. Honorary degrees of L.L.D. will be granted to President Darden and to G. Tyler Miller, president of Madison College at Harrisonburg.

losses was surpassed by the University of Vermont only and equaled by the University of Florida. However, Florida was awarded second honors on the basis of individual points. The negative team of Pasco Bowman of New Market, Va., and Richard Obenshain of Blacksburg, Va., prelaw students, was undefeated for Bridgewater at the Ohio meet. Obenshain was elected first vice-president of the National TKA Council for the coming year.

Marshall E. Wolfe, professor of Bible, will be awarded the distinguished service award by the Commission on Christian Education at the Grand Rapids conference as he reaches the age of retirement this year. He has served the Bridgewater staff for eighteen years and previously served at the Blue Ridge institution for twelve years. Dr. Gustav Enss, professor of philosophy, will also reach the period of retirement at the end of this session.

Summer school will begin June 20 and continue until Aug. 13, with Dean John Boitnott as director.

Summer conferences on the campus include the Methodist Women's Society of Christian Service, June 27-30; Church of the Brethren Regional Women's Work Spiritual Retreat, July 5-7; Dr. Stanley Jones' Christian Ashram, July 9-16; Church of the Brethren Regional Children's Workers Workshop, July 18-21; Church of the Brethren Southeastern Regional Conference, Aug. 2-4; and the Virginia Religious Education Teachers Conference, Aug. 28 — Sept. 3.

A total of $3,203.98 has been received from churches and districts of the Region toward the supplemental operating budget of the college for the 1954-55 session. The trustees have requested fifty cents per member or approximately $27,000. A number of other churches are expected to respond before the end of the fiscal year, June 30.

Raymond C. Phibbs, member of the class of 1950 and college superintendent of buildings and grounds, has been awarded a Rockefeller Brothers Fund fellowship to study at Yale Divinity School next year. He is one of 47 to receive fellowship awards out of 332 nominees from the U. S. and Canada. The announcement of the award was made by Dr. Nathan M. Pusey, president of Harvard University and president of the fund, which is sponsored by the American Association of Theological Schools.

Pasco Bowman of this year's senior class has been awarded a Root-Tilden scholarship by the Law School of New York University with an annual value of $2,200. Awarded on a competitive basis, two scholarships are granted yearly in each of the federal judicial circuits. Pasco was a winner in the Fourth Judicial District.

Rev. Massey Mott Heltzel of the class of 1936, pastor of the Reid Memorial Presbyterian church, Augusta, Ga., has had a sermon, Now Let It Work, published in the 1955 edition of Best Sermons, edited by G. Paul Butler. Rev. Heltzel, who frequently visits the Bridgewater campus, ministers to President and Mrs. Dwight Eisenhower when they vacation at Augusta. The Readers Digest printed another of Rev. Heltzel's sermons last year, The Central Character of the Ages.

Rufus King, assistant to the president in charge of alumni and development activities, will present a paper before a sectional meeting of the American Alumni Council at Bretton Woods, N. H., in June on How to Promote Annuities and Bequest Programs.

Two members of the college staff will be in Europe this summer and two others will tour Mexico. William Willoughby, associate professor of sociology and Bible, will be the director of the peace seminar at Kassel and direct a work camp tour of seven European countries. He will be employed by the Brethren Service Commission. Raymond Andes, professor of modern languages, will tour the continent in the interest of field study and will spend some time attending a session at the Institute of Touraine at the University of Poitier, Tour, France. Miss Ruth Howe, associate professor of home economics, and Miss Olivia Cool of the music department will tour Mexico.

News and Comment From Around the World

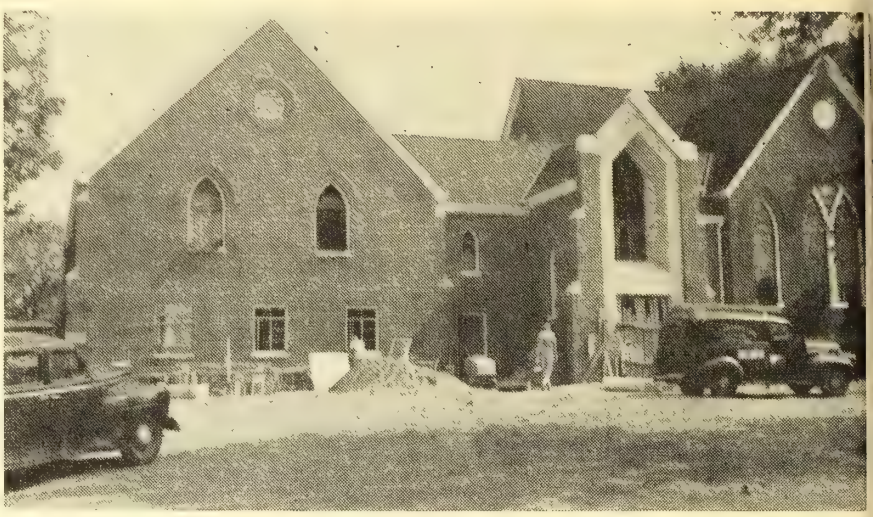
Urge Seminaries to Teach Religious Newswriting

Every theological seminary, institute and training school of the church ought to establish a chair of public relations and religious newswriting.

This was the suggestion of Paul B. Sullivan, a religious news editor on a Cincinnati daily paper. He said that clergymen were woefully ignorant of what constitutes news and how to prepare it for newspapers. Mr. Sullivan addressed the annual meeting of the National Religious Publicity Council.

At the same meeting Roland E. Wolseley, professor of journalism at Syracuse University, said that the church is making better use of the printed page than twenty years ago, but it is not yet making the best use of it. He was critical of the so-called popular religion of today. Dr. Wolseley said, "Too many of the people who profess it continue to patronize cheap movies and plays, to drink too much, to gamble, to drive their cars wildly, to bow to the gods Godfrey, Gleason and Gobel far more than to Jehovah, to fudge on their taxes and to see nothing wrong with preparing for atomic warfare."

Report Nearly Seventy Million Lutherans in World



There are almost 70,000,000 Lutherans in the world, according to statistics compiled by the Lutheran World Federation. The figure covers about 120 church and mission groups but does not include Lutherans in countries where no organized church exists. Lutherans comprise nearly three per cent of the world population and about one third of the 207 million Protestants in the world or about ten per cent of the world Christian total of 692,000,000. More than half the Lutherans are concentrated in Germany.
